4. ANOTHER of the common Operations of God's Spirit upon Mens Minds, is to inſpire them with ſuch Joys and Refreſhments, as are neceſſary to ſupport and comfort them under ſuch Temptations and Difficulties, as would otherwiſe overwhelm them. For this was the Promiſe, which our Saviour, as we ſaid before, gave his Diſciples, [b] I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you: And, accordingly, the Apoſtle makes his earneſt Prayer to God for his Chriſtian Romans, that [c] he would fill them with all Joy and Peace in believing, that they might abound in Hope, through the Power of the Holy Ghoſt. This is the Spirit of Conſolation, which made the firſt Chriſtians rejoice in Afflictions, in Tribulations, in Diſtreſſes. [d] This made the primitive Saints undergo the moſt exquiſite Torments with Patience and Magnanimity: This made the whole Army of Martyrs engage ſo valiantly, and come off with Conqueſt and Renown. For it is not conceivable, how ſo many tender Virgins, and delicate Matrons, and aged Biſhops, could have endured thoſe long and dolorous Martyrdoms, as they many Times did, without a Sigh or Groan; could have ſung in the Flames, and ſmiled [e] upon Racks, and triumphed upon Wheels and Calaſtas, inſenſible of Pain, and Strangers, as it were, to their own Bodies; had they not been ſupported by an inviſible Hand, and refreſhed with ſuch ſtrong Conſolations, as not only abated, but even quite extinguiſhed, what, at other Times, they muſt have felt. Now the ſame Comforts, tho' perhaps not in the ſame Degrees, other good Men have frequently experienced; ſometimes upon their undertaking an heroick Work of Piety or Virtue; ſometimes in their Conflict with great Trials and Temptations; ſometimes under the Preſſure of mighty Sorrows and Afflictions; and many Times (it is to be hoped) at the momentous Hour and Extremities of Death. On theſe, and ſuch-like Occaſions, there is no Doubt, but that, as this Divine Comforter has Acceſs to our Minds, he can give us ſuch tranſporting Ideas of the Favour of God, and the Beatitude of another Life, as ſhall even raviſh us from our Senſe, and ſo ingroſs our whole Attention, that we ſhall be altogether mindleſs of any Pain or Pleaſure of the Body. For if we ourſelves, by intenſe Meditation, can ſometimes abſtract our Minds from Senſe, and the Conſideration of any Thing without us, it can be no hard Matter to ſuppoſe, that the Holy Ghoſt, who has the full Controul of our Minds, can ſtamp a joyous Thought ſo vigorouſly upon them, as that it ſhall inſtantly tranſport us into an Exſtaſy: But this (as we ſaid before) is not to be expected, but in great and urgent Extremities; a ſtable Serenity and Satisfaction

Comforting.

[a] Scott's Mediator. [b] John xiv. 16, 17. [c] Rom. xv. 13.

[d] Vid. Cave's Primitive Chriſtianity, Part II. c. 7. That the firſt Chriſtians did bear all Kinds of Tortures with an invincible Courage and Conſtancy of Mind, is plain from the Teſtimony of their greateſt Enemies. Porphyry, in his Book, he wrote againſt Chriſtians, calls their Religion τὸ βάρβαρον τύφωμα, a Piece of barbarous Boldneſs: Barbarous, becauſe it differed from the Way of Worſhip among the Greeks, with whom every Thing was barbarous, that agreed not with their Inſtitutions; and Boldneſs, becauſe the Chriſtians ſhewed an undaunted Bravery in bearing Miſeries and Torments: And though the Heathen, in M. Felix, thinks it Folly and Madneſs, yet he cannot but acknowledge their fearleſs Conduct in this Reſpect: Is it not, ſays he, a ſtrange Folly and incredible Boldneſs? They deſpiſe Torments, that are preſent, and yet fear thoſe, that are future and uncertain; and while they fear to die after Death, in the mean Time, they are not afraid to die; ſo ſillily do they flatter themſelves, and cajole their Fears by a deceitful Hope of ſome unknown Comforts, that ſhall ariſe to them. And, in like Manner, Arrian, in his Collection of Epictetus's Diſſertations, confeſſes it to be true of thoſe, whom, in the Stile of Julian, he calls Galileans, that they underwent Torments and Death with a mighty Courage. What the Rack, the Wheel, and the Calaſta were, as well as the other Methods of Torture, to which the firſt Chriſtians cheerfully ſubmitted, Vid. Cave, ibid. [e] Scott, ibid.

of Mind, Peace of Conſcience, and a continued Pleaſure in Well-doing, being Comforters ſufficient for the ordinary Caſes of Chriſtians.

Interceſſion. 5. ONE common Operation more of the Holy Spirit upon Mens Minds, is to enable them to offer up their Supplications to God, with Affections ſuitable to ſuch an Exerciſe. For, [f] as Prayer is the immediate Converſe of our Souls with God, wherein we are obliged to withdraw them from all ſenſible Objects into a divine and ſpiritual World, there is no one Duty whatever, to which our carnal Affections are more averſe. Nor are we only averſe to this Duty, but, as Elihu obſerves, [g] we cannot order our Speech to God, by reaſon of Darkneſs; or, as one better inſtructed tells us, [h] we know not what to pray for, as we ought, and therefore the greater is the Reaſon, that, in this Office more eſpecially, the Spirit ſhould help our Infirmities, and make Interceſſion for us, according to the Will of God. And to this Purpoſe [i] he not only ſanctifies our Wills and Affections, in order to make us both apprehend and deſire what we ought; but, having begotten in us a fit Diſpoſition of Mind, he, even in the Time of Prayer, [k] excites in us all thoſe Graces and good Affections (ſuch as Shame and Sorrow, in the Confeſſion of our Sins; a Senſe of our Need of Mercy, and Hope of obtaining it, in our Supplication for Pardon; Reſignation to God's Will, and Dependance on his Truth and Goodneſs, in our Addreſſes for temporal Mercies and Deliverances; Hunger and Thirſt after Righteouſneſs, in our Petitions for his Grace and Aſſiſtance; as well as Love and Gratitude, and Admiration of God, in our Praiſes and Thankſgivings for his Loving-kindneſs) wherein are compriſed thoſe Groanings, which cannot be uttered, and wherein the very Life and Spirit of all Prayer does conſiſt. [l] For it is a miſtaken Notion to think, that the mere Ability to conceive a Prayer, and to utter it with great Readineſs and Warmneſs, is to pray by the Spirit; which, in the Senſe we are to underſtand it now, (when all extraordinary Gifts and Endowments are ceaſed) is to offer up our Petitions and Addreſſes to God (let them be never ſo weak and imperfect) with an awful Fear and Dread of the Divine Majeſty, before whom we appear; with a due Veneration and Reverence of all his glorious Attributes and Perfections; with a deep Apprehenſion of our own Sinfulneſs and Guilt, and, conſequently, of our Unworthineſs to approach his Preſence; with a lively Senſe of our Wants and Neceſſities, which we come to have ſupplied; with an hearty Deſire of the Bleſſings and Favours we crave, and yet with an entire Reſignation of ourſelves to his Diſpoſal and heavenly Pleaſure. This is to pray by the Spirit, and as many as pray in this Manner, whether they uſe a ſet Form of Words, or their own immediate Conceptions, they have the Spirit of Prayer and Supplication, which will open their Mouths, and enlarge their Hearts, and inflame their Affections, and make them fervent and importunate, happy and ſucceſsful, in all their Addreſſes to the Throne of Grace.

The Neceſſity of theſe ordinary Gifts and Graces. THUS we have ſeen what the ſeveral Gifts and Operations of the Holy Spirit are, which every good Chriſtian may, in all Ages, depend on, to relieve the Infirmities of his Nature, and to ſtrengthen him in the Performance of his Duty. And how indiſpenſably neceſſary they are to theſe Purpoſes, tho' we have, in ſome Meaſure, obſerved already, we ſhall now proceed more fully to conſider. The Man, indeed, who is not convinced of this, muſt be a Stranger to himſelf, as well as the Word of God, and a careleſs Obſerver of what paſſes in his own Breaſt, as well as of what is recorded in the holy Scriptures. [m] For, when he gives himſelf Leiſure to take a Survey of his own Faculties, and obſerves how dark-ſighted he is in the Perception of Divine Truths; with what Reluctance he chuſes what his Underſtanding plainly repreſents as Good, and refuſes what his own Conſcience directly pronounces to be Evil, and how apt his Affections are to rebel againſt the Dictates of his Reaſon, and to hurry him another Way, than he knows he is directed to go; when he ſets before his Thoughts the great Variety of Duties commanded, and of Sins forbidden, and the Perverſeneſs of his own depraved Nature, which gives him an Antipathy to thoſe Duties, and a ſtrong Inclination to thoſe Sins; when he reflects on the Power, and Cunning, and Vigilance of his ſpiritual Enemies, always alluring him to Sin, and ſeducing him from the Practice of Virtue; when he weighs with himſelf the Neceſſity of practiſing every Duty, and forſaking every Kind of Wickedneſs, in order to ſecure a good Title to the Promiſes of the Goſpel; when he takes a View of thoſe particular Obſtacles, which hinder him in the Exerciſe of ſeveral Graces, and of the ſtrong ſtrong Temptations, which prompt him to the Commiſſion of ſeveral Sins; when he conſiders the Aptneſs of human Nature to grow weary of performing the ſame Things, though in themſelves never ſo pleaſant, and its ſtill greater Diſpoſition to grow faint, when the Actions, continually to be repeated, are burthenſome to Fleſh and Blood; when he compares the Neceſſity of Perſeverance, with the Difficulty of it, the Prevalence of Things preſent and ſenſible, with the Weakneſs, wherewith ſuch as are abſent and ſpiritual, affect us: When, I ſay, a conſidering Man puts all theſe Things together, he cannot but be convinced, that [n] narrow is the Path, which leads unto everlaſting Life, and that, without Illumination from the Spirit of God, he ſhall not be able rightly to diſcern it; that ſtrait is the Gate, which opens an Entry into Heaven, and that he cannot, by the Force of his own natural Strength, without new Power given him from above, and the ſecret Influences of God's holy Spirit, adding Force and Energy to his own Endeavours, force his Way through it: Conſcious therefore of his Weakneſs, he will acknowledge the Neceſſity of God's Grace; and being ready to ſink through his own natural Weight, unleſs ſupported by foreign Help, he will cry out with St Peter, [o] Lord ſave me, elſe I periſh.

[f] Scott's Mediator. [g] Job xxxvii. 19. [h] Rom. viii. 26, 27. [i] Wilkins, on the Gift of Prayer. [k] Scott, ibid. [l] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [m] Smalridge's Sermons.

The Platonic and Pelagian Notion confuted.

[p] SOME Philoſophers of old flattered the Pride and Vanity of Men, by teaching them, that they wanted nothing to make them virtuous, but only a firm and ſteady Reſolution of being ſo; that this Reſolution they themſelves were Maſters of, and might exert at their own Pleaſure. They confidently boaſted, that their Happineſs was a Thing wholly in their own Power. "Quid opus eſt votis? Say they to their "Diſciples, what Need is there to pray? Make thyſelf a good Man. It is idle to "petition God for that, which thou canſt beſtow upon thyſelf." The Pelagians afterwards raiſed their Hereſy upon the Principles which theſe Philoſophers broached: They engaged in the Quarrel of depraved Nature againſt Divine Grace, and maintained, that all our evil Inclinations were capable of being ſubdued by our own unaſſiſted Reaſon. "How ugly is Envy? [q] How tormenting is Revenge? How brutal "is Drunkenneſs? How pernicious is Luſt? On the contrary, Meekneſs, Tempe-"rance, and Beneficence, how ſerene are they in their State? And how commodious "in their Effects? And needs any Man now, ſay they, any Infuſion of ſupernatural "Light to determine his Choice? All that he ſeems to need, is only this, that he "do not turn Fool, and deſert the Uſe of thoſe Faculties and Powers, which Nature "has given them." But the ſober Chriſtian hath learned from the Scriptures, to ſpeak and think more humbly of himſelf, and more becomingly and magnificently of God. We are therein taught, that [r] we are not ſufficient of ourſelves to think, much more to do, any Thing as of ourſelves, but all our Sufficiency is of God; that it is [s] God, who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good Pleaſure; that [t] it is by the Spirit we muſt mortify the Deeds of the Body, if we would live; and that [u] it is God, by his Spirit, who maketh us perfect in every good Work, to do his Will, working in us that which is well-pleaſing in his Sight: From whence we may infer, that the moſt prudent Advertency, and the moſt manly Reſolution, the moſt rational Love, and the moſt generous Indignation, that ever opinionative Moraliſt could conceive, and fortify his Breaſt withal, can never be able to ſecure a Man againſt the ſubtle Approaches, or the violent Aſſaults of Sin; that it is the Divine Grace only, which is our Caſtle and Defence in this Reſpect; and whoever terminates his Hopes, even of ſerving and pleaſing God, upon the Confidence of any other Strength, than what is derived from above, his Hope is impious, and he muſt miſcarry.

The Manner and Meaſure of the Operation of Grace.

"BUT is the Spirit of God ſo entirely the Agent in this Affair, as to allow the "Man no Partnerſhip in it? Is there no Uſe to be made of his Reaſon, his Conſcience, "and other natural Faculties in the Work of his Sanctification? Is there no Light "in his Underſtanding, to direct his Will, no Power in his Will, to influence his "Actions, no Part of the Action, if it be good and Praiſe-worthy, imputable to "him? Then farewell all Liberty and Freedom of Choice; farewell all Senſe and "Conſciouſneſs of Guilt; all Obligation to Reward or Puniſhment. Upon this "Suppoſition, the Man is a mere Machine, on whom all the Promiſes and Threats, "all the Exhortations and Admonitions, all the Calls and Importunities, and Ex-"probrations of the Word of God are thrown away: For, till ſome ſudden and "irreſiſtible Impulſe of this ſanctifying Spirit come upon him, to controul his na-"tural

[n] Matth. vii. 14. [o] Ibid. viii. 25.—xiv. 30. [p] Smalridge's Sermons. [q] Young's Sermons, Vol II.
[r] 2 Cor. iii. 5. [s] Phil. ii. 13. [t] Rom. viii. 13. [u] Heb. xiii. 21.

" tural Propenſions, and give a new Turn to his Thoughts and Deſires, he muſt " for ever deſpair of taking one Step towards his own Reformation." It is no eaſy Matter, indeed, to define preciſely, in what Manner, or to what Degree, the Spirit of God works upon the Minds of Men; both becauſe the Silence of Scripture is too great, and our Knowledge of the Nature and Intercourſe of Spirits too ſcanty, to afford us any clear and diſtinct Perception of it. But, notwithſtanding this Obſcurity, there are ſome Propoſitions, deducible from Scripture and Reaſon, which may poſſibly tend to illuſtrate this Argument, and, according to which, we may venture to aſſert, Suitably to our rational Faculties.

1.* THAT the Manner, in which the holy Spirit acts upon the Minds of Men, is ſuitable to their rational Faculties, eſpecially their Underſtanding and Will. It is a received Maxim, I think, in all Morality, that what naturally makes the Underſtanding to perceive, is Evidence propoſed and attended to; and what makes the Will to chuſe or refuſe, is ſomething repreſented by the Underſtanding either as Good, or Evil. To ſay, that Evidence propoſed and conſidered, is not ſufficient to make the Underſtanding approve; or that the greateſt Good propoſed, or the greateſt Evil threatened, when equally believed, and reflected on, are not ſufficient to engage the Will, to chuſe the Good, and refuſe the Evil, is a Contradiction in itſelf, and therefore cannot be true.

PUT the Caſe then, [x] that we have ſuch an Averſion to the Truths propoſed to us in the Goſpel, as can only make us indiſpoſed to attend them, but cannot hinder our Conviction, when we do attend; that we have ſuch a Renitency to the Good, we are to chuſe, and ſuch a Propenſity to the Evil, we ſhould decline, as only indiſpoſes us to believe the one the chiefeſt Good, and the other the worſt of Evils; but yet what we do really believe to be our chiefeſt Good, will ſtill be choſen, and what we apprehend to be the worſt of Evils, while we continue under that Conviction, will ſtill be refuſed by us: Suppoſing this, I ſay, all that ſeems requiſite to theſe Ends, is, that the holy Spirit ſhould ſo illuminate our Underſtandings, that we, attending to, and conſidering what lies before us, ſhould apprehend, and be convinced of our Duty; and that he ſhould ſo propound the Bleſſings and Miſeries of the Goſpel, that upon due Conſideration we may be convinced, that the former are the chiefeſt Good, the latter the worſt of Evils, and thereupon be excited to chuſe the one, and refuſe the other. But now to conſider, in order to Approbation and Conviction; to chuſe, in order to our Good, and to refuſe, that we may avoid Miſery, muſt be the Action, not of God, but of Man; though the Light, which does convince, and the Motives, which do engage him thus to chuſe, and to refuſe, are certainly from God. All therefore that can be expected from God to do in this Caſe, without offering Violence to our rational Faculties, is to propoſe ſuch Motives, as are ſufficient to engage our Choice, and to infuſe ſuch Light into our Minds, as may be ſufficient to work our Conviction.

SINCE then the many Motives, contained in the Scriptures, to engage fallen Man to return from the Evil of his Ways, were certainly deſigned for that End; either they muſt be ſufficient to engage him ſo to do, or elſe the higheſt Motives, that can be offered, muſt be inſufficient, becauſe all other Motives, to deter us from an Action, as pernicious to us, are nothing, in Compariſon of, Depart from me, ye wicked, into everlaſting Fire; all the Evils, we can ſuffer from the Hands of Men, are Trifles, in Reſpect of his Inflictions, who can deſtroy both Body and Soul in Hell-Fire. And, in like Manner, ſince the Promiſes of eternal Happineſs, as the Reward of our Obedience, were certainly deſigned to make us obedient to the Will of God, either they muſt be ſufficient to that End, or no Inducements can be ſufficient; becauſe this one Motive of Heaven eminently contains in it all others, and the Enjoyment of God, and everlaſting Happineſs, when ſeriouſly conſidered, cannot but have a more conſtraining Power in it, to the Performance of our Duty, than all the united Strength of worldly Greatneſs, and Honours, and Pleaſures, can offer us.

BUT then, becauſe the Bleſſings and Miſeries of another World are of an inviſible Nature, and only to be diſcerned by the Eye of Faith; becauſe they are moral and ſpiritual Motives, which are only preſent to our Minds by actual Conſideration and Reflection; and becauſe they are not always preſent, when Temptations invite, and ſenſual Objects, which we ſo much affect, do cloſely beſet us; it ſeems therefore neceſſary, that the Divine Spirit ſhould aſſiſt us on theſe Occaſions; either, 1. by repreſenting

* See Clagget againſt Owen, Vol. I. and Whitby, of Grace.

x Whitby, ibid.

repreſenting the divine Truths, which the holy Scriptures contain, and preſs upon us more clearly to our Underſtandings; that we may have a fuller Evidence, ſtronger Conviction, and Aſſurance of them: Or, 2. By bringing theſe Truths to our Remembrance; that ſo they may be preſent with us, when it is requiſite, to enable us to reſiſt Temptations, and to encourage us to the Performance of our Duty.

THUS, one Way or t'other, the Holy Spirit's working upon our Minds, ſuppoſing him to work according to their Natures, muſt be, by inſpiring and impreſſing them with ſuch Thoughts and Ideas, as are moſt apt to engage us to believe and obey the Goſpel; which Ideas, as they are Inducements to the Performance of our Duty, which we are not a little averſe to, may be properly called exciting Grace; as they are Reſtraints to our Commiſſion of Sin, which we are but too ſtrongly inclined to, may as fitly be ſtiled reſtraining Grace; as they are given, before we deſire them, and are often raiſed up in us, when we think nothing of them, they fall under the Notion of preventing Grace; as they help us in the Conſideration of our Duty, and forward our Endeavours and Inclinations to perform it, they may be reputed aſſiſting Grace; and, laſtly, as they continue to do this more and more, after the firſt Converſion from Sin, and ſome prevailing Diſpoſitions to ſerve God with Sincerity of Heart, they may likewiſe be called the ſubſequent Grace of God. How Thoughts infuſed by the Spirit may be termed different Kinds of Grace.

2. SINCE it is evident, from the Holy Scriptures, [y] that God requires and expects, that we ſhould put forth our own Endeavours after all thoſe Things, which the Spirit is given to work in us; it follows, that ſuch is the Nature of his Operations, that, without our own Care and Aſſiduity, they will not avail us. The Reaſon is, becauſe it were high Preſumption to ſay, that, altho' God requires us to be active and diligent, it may be never the worſe for us, tho' we be ſupine and lazy; which might well enough be ſaid, upon Suppoſition, that the Graces of the Spirit might be attained without any Application of our own. When therefore God promiſes his People, [z] A new Heart and a new Spirit will I put within you, and cauſe you to walk in my Statutes, and yet, by the very ſame Prophet, requires them, [a] to caſt away from them all their Tranſgreſſions, and to make themſelves a new Heart, and a new Spirit; for why will you die, O Houſe of Iſrael? From hence it is plain, that, notwithſtanding God's Promiſe of giving them a new Heart, it was neceſſary for them to renew their own Hearts; and what can this ſignify, but that the Promiſe is not abſolute, but ſuppoſes the Concurrence of their own Endeavours, and, conſequently, was given to encourage them, but not to make them negligent? In like Manner, when the Apoſtle tells us, that [b] God will work in us both to will and to do, he nevertheleſs requires us, to work out our own Salvation with Fear and Trembling; this he certainly would not do, unleſs our own Induſtry were neceſſary to the Attainment of thoſe Graces which he is ſaid to be the Author of. In ſhort, ſince the Holy Spirit is not only promiſed to produce in us all needful Qualifications for eternal Life, but we are alſo commanded, exhorted, intreated, and that with the moſt ſerious and affectionate Importunity, to repent and be converted, and to abide and perſevere in Holineſs; and all this, with Promiſes of an eternal Reward, if we do, and with Threatenings of everlaſting Puniſhment, if we do not; it follows, that the Spirit is not promiſed to work his Graces in our Hearts in ſuch a Manner, as to make our own Endeavours unneceſſary to the Attainment of them: For this were to make all the Commandments and Exhortations of God's Word a ſolemn Piece of Pageantry, and, in Effect, to ſay, that God hath required us, under the greateſt Penalties, and with the moſt alluring Promiſes, to obtain thoſe Qualifications, which will, nevertheleſs, be thruſt upon us, though we do nothing to obtain them. With our own Endeavours.

3. SINCE, by the Experience we have of Human Nature, we ſee, that Cuſtoms are not eaſily and preſently put off, and that Matters of Difficulty cannot be made familiar to us, but by long Uſe and Practice; that they particularly, who are accuſtomed to do Evil, cannot, on a ſudden, learn to do well; that the Difficulties of a religious Life preſs moſt upon us, when we firſt enter upon it, and wear away inſenſibly by Continuance in Well-doing; as, on the contrary, that Virtue is improved by Exerciſe, and [d] the Path of the Juſt, as the Wiſe Man ſpeaks, is as the ſhining Light, that ſhineth more and more unto the perfect Day: Since Experience, I ſay, teaches us theſe Truths, we muſt needs acknowledge, that the Holy Spirit does not produce the Effects of his Grace, in the Minds of Men, all at once, but accommodates Gradually.

[y] Clagget againſt Owen, Vol. I. [z] Ezek. xxxvi. 26. [a] Chap. xviii. 31. [b] Phil. ii. 12, 13. [d] Prov. iv. 18.

commodates his Operations to the State, in which they are at preſent, and prompts them in that Amendment, which the Meaſure of their Capacity will admit.

WHEN therefore the Holy Scripture requires us, to grow in Grace, [e] to be ſtrong in Grace, [f] to go on to Perfection, and to abound in the Work of the Lord; when it acquaints us, that there are [g] Babes in Chriſt, as well as perfect Men; ſuch as require the ſincere Milk of the Word, that they may grow thereby, as well as ſuch, [h] as have arrived to the Meaſure of the Stature of the Fulneſs of Chriſt; when our Bleſſed Saviour compares the Attainment of a State of Grace, to the growing [i] of Seed ſown in the Ground, [k] which ſprings up, and ripens gradually; and to a [l] Piece of Leaven, which diffuſes itſelf through the whole Maſs of Bread, by a ſecret and imperceptible working; we can hardly ſuppoſe, that a Riſe to any eminent Degree of Goodneſs, from a contrary Habit, can be inſtantaneous. For though we pretend not to limit the Poſſibilities of God's acting, yet, in the ordinary Courſe of Things, [m] the Sinner muſt firſt learn to be afraid of God's angry Juſtice, muſt be heartily ſorry for his Sins, muſt attentively conſider the Threats and Promiſes of the Goſpel, muſt avoid the Occaſions of Sin, muſt fortify himſelf with ſtrong Reſolutions to forſake his wicked Courſes, and make many earneſt Prayers to God, before he can ſubdue his Luſts, overcome the World, and yield a ſincere Obedience to all God's Commandments: And, by Conſequence, he muſt not expect, that the Operations of the Holy Spirit will make him a good Man, any other Way, than by ſlow Degrees and Advances.

Imperceptibly.

4. ONCE more, ſince our Bleſſed Lord has compared the Spirit to the Wind, which none of us can give any tolerable Account of; this, in ſome Meaſure, may acquaint us, that its Operations, even when they abide upon us, are, many Times, remote from our Underſtanding; that they move us without our having any diſtinct Perception of them, or being able to difference them from our natural Reaſoning and Cogitations; and, to convince him of this, let any one conſider, by what Steps he came off from a wicked Life, and proceeded in a good one. For, did not his Change firſt begin with a Conviction of Sin, and the Miſchief of it, and, conſequent hereupon, an Hatred and Deteſtation, grounded upon ſuch Arguments as theſe; that it is repugnant to Reaſon, diſpleaſing to God, deſtructive to both Soul and Body, in making them obnoxious to Divine Wrath and Vengeance, and that Eternity of Miſery, which the preſent fleeting Pleaſures of Wickedneſs are but a ſorry Exchange for? Again, will not his Advance in Virtue be found to owe itſelf to the Contemplation of the Beauty, the Reaſonableneſs, the Advantages of Holineſs, the alluring Rewards it propoſes, and the Happineſs it ſecures, both in this Life and in the next? How then did theſe Arguments prevail at laſt? Was it not by frequent Meditation, by inſinuating themſelves into the Mind by Degrees, by the common Methods of reading, or hearing, and weighing God's Word, by vanquiſhing the Prejudices of our corrupt Hearts, by diſcuſſing and diſplaying the Evidence of Truth, by exciting good Deſires, ſtrengthening thoſe Deſires with holy Reſolutions, and making good theſe Reſolutions by diligent Endeavours, and ſtedfaſt Perſeverance? But ſtill the Finger of God is in all this. It is He, that brings theſe Conſiderations into our Hearts at firſt; He, that faſtens them upon us when they are there; He, that adds new Life and Vigour to our Deſires and Intentions, and gives Efficacy and Succeſs to our (otherwiſe) weak Endeavours. He convinces our Judgments, kindles good Inclinations, perſuades, allures, threatens, deters, terrifies, reproaches, comforts, commands, and performs all other Offices neceſſary to Piety; and all this by Infuſions ſo gentle, ſo ſweet, ſo ſecret, ſo tender, as to fall in with our own Thoughts and Meditations; inſomuch, that if the Scripture had not declared, that all the Good we do, proceeds from God, we could not diſtinguiſh, many Times, between the Motions of this Bleſſed Spirit, and thoſe of our own.

IF then the Spirit of God acts upon our Minds in a Manner ſuitable to our rational Faculties, and in ſo eaſy and familiar a Way, as to be taken oftentimes for the Suggeſtions of our own Breaſts; [n] if it mingles itſelf with our Thoughts, with the inward Dictates and Reaſonings of our Minds; then every Admonition from the Pulpit, every Advice from a Friend, every good Book we read, every pious Example we ſee, every Motion and Intention to do well, every Conviction and Check of [e] 2 Tim. ii. 1. [f] Heb. vi. 1. [g] 1 Pet. ii. 2. [h] Eph. iv. 13. [i] Mark iv. 27.

[k] Matth. xiii. 33. [l] Clagget againſt Owen, Vol. I. [m] Stanhope's Sermons on ſeveral Occaſions.
[n] Stanhope, ibid.

of our own Conſcience, is a Call and Impulſe from above; and, as oft as any Man refuſes to comply with theſe, ſo oft he reſiſts, and grieves, and quenches this Spirit within himſelf. And, in like Manner, if the Spirit of God be communicated in ſuch a Meaſure, as is proportioned to every Man's preſent Exigence, and in ſuch a Manner, as requires every Man's Endeavours and Co-operation, to make it effectual; then are its Impreſſions upon our Minds neither ſo ſudden and inſtantaneous, nor yet ſo violent and irreſiſtible, as ſome may imagine. The Beginning of our Converſion, indeed, may be ſaid to be inſtantaneous, there being always a particular Point of Time, wherein the firſt Excitations of Grace come upon us. [o] But all the while that we are tending to a Reformation, and ſtruggling with our Lufts, and confirming our Reſolutions of Well-doing, be it longer or ſhorter, according to the Power of evil Habits, and the different Degrees of divine Aſſiſtance, ſo long may the Work be ſaid to be going on leiſurely, and this uſually is a conſiderable Space from its firſt Beginning, to its coming to a ſettled State. During this Time [p] the Spirit acts only as an Aſſiſtant to our Infirmities, and not as an Undertaker of the Work, and a Bearer of the whole Burthen. Our own Concurrence and Endeavours are required; nor can they derogate from his Glory, ſo long as, with the great Apoſtle St Paul, we aſcribe all the Good we do to him, and even account our own Endeavours the Effects of his aſſiſting us, [q] by the Grace of God I am what I am, and his Grace, which was beſtowed on me, was not in vain; for I laboured more abundantly——yet not I, but the Grace of God, which was with me.

Not inſtantaneous,

ST PAUL, indeed, is the greateſt Inſtance of a powerful Converſion, that we meet with in Scripture. He was confounded by [r] a Light ſhining round about him, brighter than the Sun, by which he was ſtruck down to the Earth, and heard a dreadful Voice from Heaven, ſaying, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Now in all this he was purely paſſive, and the Action done upon him was phyſical and irreſiſtible. But then when he enquires of the Holy Jeſus, Lord, what wouldſt thou have me to do? When he prays earneſtly for the Forgiveneſs of his Sin; when he ſubmits to that Baptiſm, which Chriſt appointed for that End, and for the Dedication of himſelf to his Service; when, being told what grievous Things he was to ſuffer for the Name of Jeſus, he, notwithſtanding, was not diſobedient to the heavenly Viſion, but went and preached up that Faith, which he had formerly oppoſed; [s] theſe are Actions of Deliberation and free Choice, and do therefore evince, that a ſubſequent Conſent and Concurrence, even in a miraculous Converſion, was neceſſary to make it effectual to the Purpoſe of Salvation.

nor irreſiſtible,

BE it then allowed, that the firſt Irradiations of preventing Grace come from God, as ſpontaneouſly, and enter the Soul of Man, as irreſiſtibly, as the heavenly Viſion did St Paul; yet, upon the Suppoſition, that all the future Proceſs of our Converſion is compulſory, our Virtue would be the Effect of Neceſſity, not of Choice, and conſequently loſe all its Value and Reward; and the Reformation of thoſe, upon whom the Spirit did not work irreſiſtibly, would be impoſſible, which is the utmoſt that can be ſaid to excuſe Impenitence. Upon this Suppoſition, I ſay, God's repreſenting it as a Matter of Admiration and Aſtoniſhment, that the Wicked were not reclaimed, and complaining of it, in the Stile of the Prophet, [t] Hear, O Heavens, and give Ear, O Earth; for I have nouriſhed and brought up Children, and they have rebelled againſt me. The Ox knows his Owner, and the Aſs his Maſter's Crib, but Iſrael doth not know me, my People doth not conſider, is not only highly impertinent and ridiculous, but injurious to his Divine Truth and Veracity, and a Kind of cruel Inſult upon the Infirmities of Human Nature. Some Reſolution therefore muſt be found out, both to clear this Doctrine from any Reflections upon the Divine Attributes, and, at the ſame Time, to make it conſiſtent with the Freedom of our own Wills, which can only be done, by reſerving to a Man a partial Agency, by ſuppoſing that the Spirit is the principal, and ourſelves acceſſary Agents in the Work of our Sanctification.

NOW [u] the Freedom of a rational Nature does not, as ſome may imagine, conſiſt in a Liberty to do, or not to do any Thing, according to Pleaſure, (for as God is an abſolutely free Agent, yet he cannot ſin; and as Angels and Devils are both moral Agents, yet the one cannot, and the other cannot but ſin) but it conſiſts rather in a Capacity to think, and in a Liberty to act and chuſe upon ſuch thinking: So that the clearer the Thought and Conception is, and the more conſtantly his but conſiſtently with the Freedom of our Wills.

[o] Newcombe's Sermons, Vol. I. [p] Stanhope's Sermons on ſeveral Occaſions. [q] 1 Cor. xv. 10. [r] Acts xxvi. 13. [s] Whitby's Appendix to 2 Cor. vi. [t] Iſai. i. 2, 3. [u] Burnet, on the Articles.

his Choice is determined by it, the more a Man riſes to the higheſt Acts and Exerciſe of his Liberty. Whether the Will follows the Underſtanding, and chuſes always according to ſome preſent Idea in the Mind, is not ſo entirely to our Purpoſe to enquire: This we know by our own Experience, that we have a Liberty of turning our Minds to ſome Ideas, and of turning them away from others; that we can think longer or ſhorter, more exactly and ſteadily, or more ſlightly and ſuperficially, on the Things that come into our Minds, as we pleaſe; and, in this natural Freedom of directing or diverting our Thoughts, a great deal of our Liberty does conſiſt. When therefore the Spirit of God, which has immediate Acceſs to our Minds at all Times, either upon our hearing or reading the Word, or obſerving the Tendency of ſome providential Event, raiſes ſuch Ideas in our Minds, as ſeem to call for our Attention; we have it in our Power, either to entertain or diſmiſs them, either to cheriſh and improve them by Meditation, or to turn to other Objects, and ſo forget them. When the Spirit intermixes itſelf with our Conſciences, and, in order to blend and incline our Wills, infuſes its kind Perſuaſions into our Minds; when we hear a ſilent Voice within; * as we turn to the Right-hand, or to the Left; THIS IS THE WAY, WALK YE IN IT; it is Matter of our Option, whether we will regard or baffle theſe Admonitions, whether we will ſettle them in our Minds, by ſerious Conſideration, or ſtifle them as they ariſe, and call up, in their room, other Reflections and Amuſements. And ſo again, when the Spirit enters into the Soul in order to reprove us, and, after the Commiſſion of any Sin, lays before us (as it were in a lively Deſcription) all the Aggravations of our Guilt; we may fix, or we may turn aſide the Eyes of our Minds from beholding it; we may enter into good Reſolutions, upon the Conviction it brings, or [x] with the adulterous Woman in Solomon, we may wipe our Mouths, and ſay, I have committed no Wickedneſs. This is a Liberty that God himſelf knows he has put in our Conſtitution; and, with Regard to this, all his Commands and Exhortations, his Calls and Invitations, his Threatenings and Exprobrations, are both ſignificant and ſincere. Now, if we take Notice of theſe Ideas; if we liſten to theſe Perſuaſions; if we comply with theſe Reproofs, when at any Time they ariſe in our Breaſts, we encourage the Holy Spirit to come again with freſh and more Supplies, and give Strength and Vigour to its Operations: But if we give theſe Things another Turn, as certainly we may if we pleaſe, we put a Damp upon its Endeavours for our Good, and make the Returns of it, every Time, more ſlow and languid: [y] For unto every one that hath, i. e. makes Improvement of what he hath, ſhall be given, and he ſhall have Abundance; but from him that hath not, or makes no Uſe of what he hath, ſhall be taken away, even that which he hath.

How to know whether we have the Spirit, and how to improve it.

THUS we have conſidered the Exiſtence and Reality, the Nature and Neceſſity of a Divine Principle working in the Minds of Men, in order to their Sanctification; and, as far as we can gather, have endeavoured to explain in what Manner, and to what Degree, it operates upon us: And now the final Queſtions are, how we ſhall know whether we have ſuch a Principle abiding in us; if we have not, how we may acquire it; or, if we have, by what Means we may preſerve and improve it? And to this we are the rather incited, becauſe the Apoſtle aſſures us, that if any have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his. Now, the only Way for any Man to know whether he is under the Care and Influence of the Spirit of Grace, is to judge by [z] his having his Underſtanding enlightened with divine Knowledge; by the right Diſpoſition of his Will and Affections; by the Change which is wrought in his Life and Manners; and by thoſe other Marks and Evidences, which we have mentioned before. [a] When therefore, in reading the holy Scriptures, he finds the Veil of Darkneſs removed from before his Underſtanding, thoſe Clouds of Ignorance, that had overcaſt his Mind, diſperſed, and the Doubts, under which he had, for ſome Time, laboured, ſuddenly cleared up; when ſuch pious Thoughts, as were wont to paſs tranſiently, are, for a conſiderable Time, dwelt upon, ſo as to leave behind them deep and laſting Impreſſions; when theſe are ſuggeſted to him without his ſeeking, and are urged and impreſſed upon him ſo importunately, that he cannot chuſe but liſten to them; when, from a calm and ſerious Conſideration of the State of his own Soul, the Odiouſneſs and Danger of Sin, and the Beauty and Neceſſity of Holineſs, he is led to make good and pious Reſolutions of ſerving God with greater Purity for the Time to come; when he finds finds a ſudden Impulſe upon his Spirits, rouſing him up to the Performance of ſome important Duty, which he had before neglected, or an unexpected Check, ſtopping him in the Midſt of his Courſe, when he is ruſhing on blindly and impetuouſly to the Commiſſion of ſome heinous Sin; when in his Devotions he finds his Attention fixed, his Affection inflamed, and his Heart melted within him; when, whilſt the Voice of God's Miniſter, preaching the ſaving Truths of the Goſpel, ſounds in his Ears, he is ſenſible of an inward Voice, ſpeaking with greater Force and Efficacy to his Soul, to his Underſtanding, and to his Heart; when under the Preſſure of any grievous Affliction, he feels unſpeakable Comfort and Conſolation; when, as [b] the Prophet expreſſes it, Light ariſes up in the Midſt of Darkneſs, when Beauty is given unto him for Aſhes, the Oil of Joy for Mourning, and the Garment of Praiſe for the Spirit of Heavineſs; and all this while his Deſign and Intention is to ſerve God in Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs all the Days of his Life: From theſe and the like Indications he may diſcover, that the Spirit of God abideth in him; which if he does, [c] the only Way to retain this Sacred Gueſt is, to treat him kindly, and to ſhew himſelf exceeding thankful, that he will be pleaſed to ſtay with him, and confer ſo great a Bleſſing and Dignation on him. And to this Purpoſe he muſt be careful to expel all unclean and impure Thoughts, to cleanſe his Heart from the Love of Sin, to waſh his Hands in Innocence, and to preſerve his whole Life and Converſation clear from all wilful Pollution. And not only ſo, but he muſt be very cautious in his Converſe with the World, leſt that engroſſes his Thoughts and Affections, leſt [d] the Cares of Life and the Deceitfulneſs of Riches choak the Seed, that is ſown in our Hearts, and it become unfruitful: And, becauſe God will have the Grace, which he hath given, maintained and approved by the Means of his own Appointment, his reading and hearing his Word, receiving the Sacramental Supper, and addreſſing his Prayers and Supplications conſtantly to the Throne of Mercy, will be no leſs neceſſary to ſtir up the Gift, and confirm the Divine Principle that is in us.

* Iſai. xxx. 21. [x] Prov. xxx. 20. [y] Matth. xxv. 29. [z] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [a] Smalridge's Sermons.

How to acquire it.

And, in like Manner, if it be our ſad Fortune to be deſtitute of this heavenly Gift, our Care and Endeavour muſt be, not to reſiſt its Motions and Suggeſtions, when at any Time they come caſually upon us, but to receive them with a willing Mind, and to liſten to them with all Readineſs and Attention; to prepare and cleanſe our Hearts by ſincere Contrition, and Remorſe for our Sins, by bewailing the Follies and Vanities of our paſt Life, and by reſolving never to commit the like again. Grace, we muſt own, is the chief of God's Benefits, and that which infinitely tranſcends all the other Bleſſings we enjoy: And [e] therefore we may obſerve, that however he thinks fit to beſtow temporal good Things upon the Evil and Unthankful, upon thoſe, that ſeek them not, and upon thoſe, that do acknowledge them ſent from him; yet ſanctifying Grace he accounts a Pearl of greater Price, than to be caſt away upon the Regardleſs. 'Tis a certain Benefit, and a permanent Good; and therefore he beſtows it upon another Sort of Condition; he gives it only to them that aſk, i. e. to them, who wiſely eſtimate, and worthily value, and earneſtly deſire, this heavenly Gift. Would we then obtain of God a Bleſſing, as neceſſary to the Suſtenance of our ſpiritual Life, as our daily Bread is to that of the Body; let us every Day reſort unto him for it, in earneſt, fervent, ſtrong, and importunate Prayer. And indeed this is the only Bleſſing, that can juſtify a Prayer thus circumſtantiated: To deſire any other Gift with ſuch a Meaſure of Importunity, would be immoderate, would be ſinful; it is Grace only, that we can deſire inſtantly, that we can deſire impatiently, and yet not offend: [f] This is the Kingdom of God that ſuffers Violence, and the Violent take it by Force. Since therefore, in our daily Prayers, we acknowledge, that through the Weakneſs of our moral Nature we can do no good Thing without it, that all holy Deſires, all good Counſels, and all juſt Works do proceed from it; there is this Neceſſity for our conſtant Application to God for its Aid and Aſſiſtance, that, in keeping his Commandments, we may pleaſe him both in Will and Deed.

[b] Iſa. lxi. 3. [c] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [d] Matth. xiii. 22. [e] Young's Sermons. [f] Matth. xi. 12.

CHAP. VII.

Of the STATE of the Soul after Death, and RESURRECTION of the Body.

In what Senſe the Soul is immortal.

THAT the Soul of Man is a ſpiritual and immaterial Subſtance, created by God with ſuch Powers, and Qualities, and Operations, as can never ariſe from Matter, however moved or organized, is what we had Occaſion, in ſome Meaſure, to prove elſewhere; and, (according to our Promiſe then) ſhall now proceed to enquire farther into its diſtinct Nature and Immortality: Only we would premiſe, that when we ſay our Souls are immortal, [a] we do not mean, that they are by Nature ſuch, as can never periſh or be deſtroyed: For, as God alone has a neceſſary Exiſtence, and what is eſſential to his very Being, he alone is abſolutely and independently, and of himſelf immortal. All other Beings, whether Bodies or Spirits, have but a borrowed Exiſtence, and may loſe it with the ſame Facility, that they had it: The ſame Power of God, which produced them out of nothing, may thither remand them again, when he pleaſes. In this Reſpect our Souls have no more Privileges than our Bodies, nor the whole Univerſe, than one ſingle Atom. And therefore, when we aſcribe Immortality to the Soul, we always include the Will and good Pleaſure of God, in thus making, and thus preſerving it: And with this Reſtriction our Meaning is, [b] "That, when the Body dies, "and falls to the Ground, this Principle, which we call the Soul, by God's Order "and Appointment, ſtill remains, and lives ſeparate from it; that it ſtill retains the "Power of underſtanding, of thinking, of reaſoning, of remembering, and is capa-"ble either of Happineſs or Miſery, in its Abſence from the Body." So that in treating of this Argument we ſhall ſhew,

I. THAT the Soul of Man does not die, but, when ſeparated from the Body, has a Place of Abode provided by God, till the Reſurrection of its Body again.

II. THAT in this State it does not ſleep, and become inſenſible, till the Day of the Reſurrection, but is immediately admitted into a happy or miſerable Condition, according as the Man has behaved in his paſt Life. And,

III. THAT its Happineſs or Miſery, in this intermediate State, is partial only, and not ſo compleat, as it will be after the Re-union of the Soul and Body.

Its Immortality proved.

I. THE Soul of Man, in this preſent State indeed, is very nearly united to the Body, [c] by whoſe Means it communicates with the material and ſenſible World: It partakes of its Pleaſures and Pains, and acquires moſt of its Knowledge by the Ideas which the Senſes impart to it: But that, in its own Nature, it is ſpiritual, active, and intelligent, and ſo independent on Fleſh and Blood; that, by the Grace and Donation of God, it has the Power of Immortality in it, and ſo cannot undergo the Fate of the Body, when it returns to the Duſt, from whence it originally came; both true Philoſophy, and Divine Revelation, the Voice of human Reaſon, and the Teſtimony of the Sacred Scriptures, conſpire to aſſure us. 'Tis certain, however, that he, who made us, beſt knows our Frame, of what Parts we are compoſed, and what Duration he hath aſſigned to each Part; and therefore, when we are diſputing of the Nature and Condition of the Soul of Man, and its Diſtinction from the Body, if we can find, that God, the Creator of both, has engaged in the Controverſy, we ought, with all Submiſſion and Humility, to ſearch after, and ſubſcribe to his infallible Determination. To begin then with the Evidence we have from Scripture.

THE

[a] Martin, on Natural Religion. [b] Tillotſon's Sermons. [c] Whiſton's Sermons.

From Scripture and Antiquity.

THE Book of Eccleſiaſtes, in many Parts of it, is a Kind of Dramatic Compoſition, [e] wherein Solomon introduces the Epicurean, if we may be allowed ſo to call him by Anticipation, advancing ſeveral ſtrange Poſitions, and, among the reſt, deriding the Notion of the Soul's Immortality, [f] Who knoweth the Spirit of a Man, that goeth upward, and the Spirit of the Beaſt, that goeth downward to the Earth? As if he had ſaid: "As for the Talk of Man's Soul being immortal, who can demon-"ſtrate the Problem? Who can diſcern any Sign of Difference between the Soul "of a Man, and that of a Brute, in order to prove that the one goes upward, to "the Regions of permanent and eternal Beings; the other downward, i. e. periſhes "together with the Body, and moulders in the Earth?" Now what Solomon here, in the Beginning of this Book, queſtions in the Perſon of another, towards the Concluſion of it, and where he comes to ſpeak his own ſerious and reſolved Thoughts, he peremptorily determines in theſe Words, [g] Then ſhall the Duſt return to the Earth, and the Spirit ſhall return to God that gave it; for the only evident Senſe that they can bear, is this——That "whereas Man conſiſts of two Parts, Body and Soul, "the Condition of theſe two, when he dies, will be very different: For the Body, "being at firſt taken out of the Duſt of the Earth, and ſo of a corruptible Conſtitu-"tion, ſhall go back into the Earth again, and moulder into Duſt; but the Soul, "as it is of another and more excellent Original, ſhall not periſh with the Body, "but return to that God, from whence it came, and with whom it ſhall continue "ſafe and inviolate, according to the Author of the Book of Wiſdom, [h] The Souls "of the Righteous are in the Hands of God, and there ſhall no Torment touch them."

WHEN our Bleſſed Saviour came into the World, the Contention in the Jewiſh Church, between the Sadducees and the Phariſees, as to this Point of Doctrine, were very fierce; for [i] the Sadducees, as St Luke has ſtated the Matter in Debate, ſaid, there is no Reſurrection, neither Angel, nor Spirit, but the Phariſees confeſſed both. [k] The Sadducees believed, indeed, that there is a God, though whether they believed God himſelf to be Corporeal, is not, without good Reaſon, queſtioned by ſome: But this is certain, that, beſides God, they believed nothing ſubſiſted, but what is perceptible to Senſe: And hence they denied Angels to be permanent Subſtances, and what they read of their appearing in Scripture, they always imputed to Phantaſms, occaſionally formed by God, when he was minded, at any Time, to reveal his Will to Mankind, and then vaniſhing and diſappearing. Agreeably to the ſame Hypotheſis, they denied likewiſe the Spirits of Men, as diſtinct Subſtances from the Body, and able to ſubſiſt without them; and, hence farther, by a neceſſary Chain of Conſequences, they denied the Reſurrection of the Bodies of Men after Death: For, to what Purpoſe ſhould the Body of Man be raiſed, if there was no Soul in Being to be united to it again, and re-inform it? The Phariſees, on the other Side, held a quite contrary Chain of Doctrines, viz. That there are certain immaterial and inviſible Beings, both Angels, and Spirits of Men likewiſe, diſtinct Subſtances from their Bodies, and ſubſiſting after the Death of their Bodies, and that therefore there ſhall be a Reſurrection. He that believed one of theſe Hypotheſes, believed all; and he that denied any one of them, equally denied the reſt. Now, the ſacred Hiſtorian expreſſly tells us, that St Paul declared himſelf on the Phariſees Side in this Controverſy; and though it cannot be denied, that he made this Profeſſion with a Deſign to ſave himſelf from preſent Danger, yet that his Profeſſion was honeſt and true, and void of all Deceit and Equivocation, will hardly be denied, when it is conſidered farther, that it was entirely agreeable to his Maſter's Doctrine and Determination.

WHEN the Sadducees came to our Saviour with an intricate Queſtion, as they thought it, and ſuch as implied a Kind of Impoſſibility for the Dead ever to riſe again, he reſolves it in this Manner; [l] As touching the Reſurrection of the Dead, have you not read that which was ſpoken to you by God, ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob; God is not the God of the Dead, but of the Living. The Words are taken from the third Chapter of Exodus, where, out of the flaming Buſh, God ſpeaks to Moſes concerning Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, many Ages after the Death of theſe Patriarchs, and our Saviour lays down this Hypotheſis, as the Foundation of his Argument, that God is not the God of the Dead, but but of the Living. " Since then, for God to be any one's God, neceſſarily implies a preſent Relation between God and that Perſon, and no Relation can continue, where either of the Relatives ceaſe, and is taken away; it muſt certainly follow, that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob were alive, and did ſubſiſt, viz. in their Spirits, when God ſpake theſe Words to Moſes, i. e. many Ages after the Death of their Bodies. Our Saviour therefore, when he arms his Diſciples againſt the Fear of Man, by ſhewing them how contemptible that Diſpleaſure was, which could not reach the Soul, ſaying, " Fear not them, which kill the Body, but are not able to kill the Soul; but rather fear him, which is able to deſtroy both Body and Soul in Hell; makes the ſeparate Exiſtence of our Soul, after the Death of the Body, a neceſſary and fundamental Article of our Faith: For if the Soul's Dependence on the Body were ſuch, that the Diſſolution of the one did unavoidably draw on the Death of the other, then he, who kills the Body, would, at the ſame Stroke, murther the Soul too. Nay, there is this farther Argument of the Immortality and Independency of the Soul, ° that all thoſe glorious Acceſſions and Improvements, which the Scripture mentions, as accruing to good Men at the Reſurrection, belong ſimply to the Body. It is ſaid, P that our Bodies ſhall be changed, that they ſhall be refined and ſublimated, and ſo prepared to ſuſtain the Joys of Heaven, which otherwiſe they could not do: But no ſuch ſubſtantial Improvements are mentioned of the Soul; which we may take for an Intimation, how noble and excellent a Being the Soul is in its original Nature; that it is breathed from God, and impreſſed with his Image, and that this Image imports no leſs, than ſuch Perfections as are divine; that in itſelf it is incorruptible and immortal, and of an immenſe Capacity both to know and enjoy. It is conſtituted, indeed, to ſee through the Body as through a Glaſs, and that Glaſs, at preſent, is very dark; but when once the Glaſs ſhall come to be brightened, i. e. when the Soul ſhall be diſcharged from the Groſſneſs of Fleſh, and the Cloud of Paſſions, and the Stains of Sin, it will need no other Elevation, to behold the Face of God; no other Capacity, to comprehend all the Treaſures of Wiſdom; no other Strength, to bear the Weight of eternal Glory.

[e] Bull's Sermons, Vol. I. [f] Eccleſ. iii. 21. [g] Ibid. xii. 7. [h] Ibid. ix. 1.
[i] Acts xxiii. 8. [k] Bull, ibid. [l] Matth. xxii. 31, 32.

'TWOULD be endleſs to go on deſcanting upon every Argument, exhibited in Scripture, to prove the ſeparate Exiſtence of human Souls; and therefore, to comprize ſeveral in one Sentence, when our Saviour promiſes the penitent Thief upon the Croſs, ' Verily, I ſay unto thee, To-day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe; and, at the Point of Death, commits his human Soul to God, ' Father, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit; when St Stephen, as he was expiring, commits, in like Manner, his Soul to Chriſt himſelf, now exalted to the Right-hand of the Majeſty on High, with, ' Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit; when St Paul tells the Corinthians, that " if our earthly Houſe of this Tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a Building of God, an Houſe not made with Hands, eternal in the Heavens; and prays for the Theſſalonians, that " their whole Spirit, and Soul, and Body might be preſerved blameleſs unto the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; when the Author to the Hebrews tells us, that, by Virtue of the Catholick Communion, Chriſtians are not only joined * to an innumerable Company of Angels, but to the Society likewiſe of the Spirits of juſt Men made perfect; when St Peter plainly enough affirms, × that the Spirits of thoſe wicked Men, that were deſtroyed by the Flood, were in Being, reſerved in Priſon, and in Chains of Darkneſs, to the Judgment of the great Day; and St John, in the y Revelation, tells us, that under the Altar he ſaw the Souls of them, that were ſlain for the Word of God, which cried with a loud Voice, how long, O Lord, holy, and true, doſt thou not judge, and avenge our Blood on them, that dwell on the Earth? When almoſt in every Page of the New-Teſtament, I ſay, we meet with ſuch Paſſages as theſe, we cannot but conclude, that the Doctrine of the Immortality m Bull's Sermons. n Matth. x. 28. o Young's Sermons, Vol. I. p 1 Cor. xv. 51.

q Luke xxiii. 43. r Ibid. ver. 46. s Acts vii. 59. t 2 Cor. v. 1.

u 1 Theſſ. v. 23. The Apoſtle is here ſuppoſed, by ſome, to juſtify the ancient Philoſophy, that Man (as Nemeſius ſtiles him) is τριμερὴς ὑπόστασις, a Compound of three different Parts. This was the Doctrine of the Pythagoreans, as we learn from Jamblicus, who having told us, that Man conſiſts of Soul and Body, adds, that the Soul conſiſts of two Parts, one endued with Reaſon, and the other without Reaſon. This alſo was the Philoſophy of the Platoniſts, as we learn from Laërtius, who informs us, that there is in Man a Soul irrational, which follows the Affections of the Body, and a Mind, which uſeth the Body, as its Inſtrument, and fights againſt it. This was alſo the Doctrine of the Stoicks, and therefore Antoninus makes the three conſtituent Parts of Man to be σῶμα, ψυχὴ, and νοῦς; the Body, Soul, and Mind; which is likewiſe maintained by ſome modern Philoſophers, Gaſſendus eſpecially, and Dr Wallis [de Animâ Brut. c. 7.] beyond all poſſible Contradiction: though this at laſt, perhaps, may be only a Strife about Words, ſince the animal Spirits are included in the Body. Whitby in Locum.

* Heb. xii. 23. × 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20. y Chap. vi. 9, 10.

Immortality of Man's Soul, its Independency on the Body, and Subſiſtence after its Separation from it, is the Doctrine of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and one of the Fundamentals, in that Form of ſound Words, which they have delivered to the Saints. And, accordingly, we may obſerve, that the Saints of old lived and died in full Aſſurance of the Truth of this Doctrine; that the Apoſtolic Biſhop and Martyr Polycarp, when brought to the Stake, begins his Prayer thus: [z] O thou God of the whole Race of righteous Men, who live before thee, and then, mentioning the Martyrs in particular, he preſently adds, among theſe may I be received before thee this Day; that this Doctrine was ſo univerſally maintained by the Church afterwards, that in moſt of her ancient Liturgies (wherein it was not fit that any diſputed Problem ſhould have Place) ſhe makes publick Profeſſion of it; and that, in thoſe very Liturgies, the Place and Receptacle of the Spirits of juſt Men deceaſed is uſually ſtiled [a] the Region of the Living, the Region of the Godly, and the Boſom of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and of all thoſe, that have pleaſed God, and obeyed his Will from the Beginning of the World.

From univerſal Conſent.

NAY more, had we Leiſure to gratify the Curious, we might bring in a large Cloud of Witneſſes from the Heathen World, and make it appear, that the Subſiſtence of the Soul of Man, after the Death of his Body, was a Tradition generally, we may ſay, univerſally received, not only in the civilized, but even in the moſt barbarous Nations we read of; that in the Eaſt, their ancient Prieſts and wiſe Men, the Brachmans, [b] had ſeveral mythological Accounts, like thoſe of Plato, of the Immortality of the Soul, the Judicatures of Hades, and other Matters of the like Nature; that in the Weſt, the Gauls and Britons were taught by their Maſters the Druids, [c] that the Souls of Men did not die, but paſs from one to another, by which Opinion they were excited to Valour, and an uncommon Contempt of Death. That in the North, ſome of the Thracians, particularly the Getæ, ran undauntedly upon Death, by Virtue of this Perſuaſion, [d] either that the Souls of deceaſed Men returned into Bodies again, or that, if they did not, they were not extinguiſhed, but went into ſome very happy Place; that in the South, the Angilæ, a People of Africa, thought the Ghoſts of Men inferior Gods, [e] by whom they ſwear, to whom they pray, and conſult upon all Occaſions, by lying down on their Tombs, and ſo, whatever they dream, they account an oracular Reſponſe; and that, if we look into that Part of the World, which, for ſo many Ages, lay undiſcovered, in [f] China, Peru, and Mexico, as well as in Braſil, Canada, Virginia, &c. the People, though ſevered from the reſt of the World by the vaſt Ocean, and having no Intercourſe with any civilized Nation perhaps for many Ages, all agreed in the ſame Belief of the Soul's Immortality. So that, conſidering the Diſtance and Remoteneſs of the ſeveral Parts of the World, and the Variety of Men's Tempers, and Manner of Education, we may be allowed to conclude with Tully, that Flower of Roman Eloquence and Philoſophy both, [g] as this Opinion is planted in us by Nature, THAT THERE IS A GOD, ſo by the Conſent of all Nations, (and the Conſent of Nations is the Voice of Nature) we believe that Souls exiſt after the Body.

From the Qualities of the Soul.

TULLY indeed, by a due Conſideration of the Powers and Operations of the Soul, brought himſelf to a full Perſuaſion of its Immortality. "Many think, [h] ſays "he, that the Eternity of Souls is incredible, becauſe they cannot comprehend the "Eſſence and Qualities of a ſeparated Spirit; but can they, let me aſk them, define "what a Soul is, even when in the Body, of what Form it is, what its Dimenſions "are, or what is the Place of its Abode? For my own Part, when I ſeriouſly reflect "upon the Nature of the Soul, it ſeems to me to be much more difficult and obſcure "to know what it is, whilſt it is in Conjunction with the Body, than to underſtand [z] Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. Lib. IV. c. xv. [a] Vid. Conſtit. Apoſt. Lib. VIII. c. xli. [b] Strabo, Lib. XV. [c] Cæſ. de Bell. Gall. Lib. VI. [d] Pomp. Mela. Lib. II. Ibid. Lib. I.

[e] Vid. Mendoza, de Regno Chinæ, Acoſta. Lerius Navigat. Benzo Hiſt. Nov. Orbis, Harriot Virg. Ranwolf's Travels, &c. Lerius tells us of a very barbarous People in Braſil, among whom he lived for ſome Time, and calls them Toupinamboult, who are ſaid by ſome Authors (but not upon ſufficient Grounds, I think) to have diſbelieved the Being of a God, and yet theſe People had firm Perſuaſions of the Immortality of the Soul. For their Opinion was, that the Souls of the Virtuous, i. e. of thoſe, who have valiantly defended their Country, for this ſeems to be the only Virtue, which they admire, do, preſently after Death, fly beyond certain very high Mountains, and there are gathered to their Fathers and Grandfathers, and live in pleaſant Gardens, with all Manner of Delights; but that the Souls of cowardly and unactive Men, and thoſe, who do nothing for their Country, are carried to Aygman, ſo they call the Devil, and live with him in perpetual Torments.

[g] Ut Deos eſſe naturâ opinamur, ſic permanere animos arbitramur conſenſu Nationum omnium; conſenſus autem naturæ vox eſt. Cicero Tuſcul. Quæſt. [h] Tuſcul. Q. Lib. I. paſſim.

" it when it quits its Lodging, wherein it now ſojourns, and takes its Flight home-
" wards to Heaven, the Place of its conſtant Habitation; for, if we cannot under-
" ſtand that which we never ſaw, we may as well diſown all Knowledge of " God, as of a ſeparated Soul. Whatever therefore that Thing be which perceives,
" which underſtands, which wills, which remembers, which is always vigorous and " active in us, it muſt needs be celeſtial and divine, and therefore eternal: For
" we can form no other Notion of God, but that he is a Mind abſtracted from all " material Concretion, underſtanding all Things, moving all Things, and of whoſe
" Duration there can be no End. Since then the Celerity of the Thoughts of the " Soul, its Memory of Things paſt, and its Foreſight of Things to come, are " wonderful; ſince its Arts and Sciences, and other Inventions, are ſo many; it is " impoſſible that the Nature, which comprehends ſuch excellent Things, ſhould be " mortal. The Life of the Soul conſiſts in its Activity and Thought, which are " inſeparable from its Exiſtence; and therefore being void of all Mixture and
" Allay, and containing nothing Heterogeneous to itſelf, it muſt be incapable of Diſ-
" ſolution." If then the Soul of Man be of ſo excellent a Make, and of ſo excellent a Nature, we cannot, without Derogation to its great Creator, ſuppoſe that it was made for a few Days only, and ſhall not ſurvive the Body: Eſpecially conſider-ing, that, how great ſoever its Faculties be, [l] it does not, in this Life, attain to a full Improvement of them; that its Operations and Exertments are weak and deficient, and have not arrived to their Conſummation; that Truth and Goodneſs, which are its proper Nouriſhment, are not taken in here with that full Guſt and Reliſh, which the Soul is capable of; that the Mind, in ſhort, is receptive of more Knowledge, the Will of more Regularity, and the Affections of more Zeal and Fervency, than they have at preſent, and that theſe Attainments therefore are to be the Acquiſitions of another Life.

Its Deſire of Happineſs.

[k] WHOM have I in Heaven but thee? And there is none upon Earth that I deſire beſides thee, is a Reflection of the Pſalmiſt's, naturally ariſing from the Conſideration of the Emptineſs of all worldly Enjoyments; and therefore, [l] ſince God has implanted in Men's Minds an eager Deſire of Happineſs, (as we may all perceive by our ſhifting the Scene ſo often) and yet has put no Capacity in Things here below to anſwer it, (as our Heart will tell us, whenever we conſider, how by Reaſon either of their offenſive Mixtures, or neceſſary Decays, that leave the Soul lean and pining, in the Midſt of their Enjoyments) as God certainly made nothing in vain; this is a Demonſtration that he deſigned us for another Life, where we ſhall have a more perfect Fruition of the Fountain of all Bliſs, and where he intends to fill up the Meaſure of our Deſires, and to be himſelf the Delight, we ſo much long for.

Its Relation to God.

And indeed, when we conſider farther, [m] that God has made Man with a Deſign that he ſhould love, and fear, and worſhip him; that he has given him a Soul capable of knowing him, and reflecting upon his infinite Perfections; that he makes himſelf underſtood to him in a Language known only to God and the Soul, the Language of Fear and Hope, of Fear, to reſtrain the Sallies of his Paſſions, and of Hope, to encourage him to a regular Performance of his Duty; it is impoſſible to join all theſe together, and make them conſiſtent, without the Suppoſition of an Immortality. For if, after we have experienced the Joy and Conſolation which the Soul receives in its Communion with God; [n] if, after we have taſted the heavenly Gift, as the Apoſtle expreſſes it, and have been made Partakers of the Holy Ghoſt; if, after we have taſted the good Word of God, and the Powers of all the World to come, this Joy and Conſolation muſt be loſt to all Eternity, (as it neceſſarily muſt, if the Soul dies with the Body) then are we of all Creatures the moſt miſerable. The Condition of a Brute, which has had no Senſe of theſe ſpiritual Comforts, but enjoyed ſuch Delights, as are proportioned to its Nature, is more eligible, than that of Man, whom Death confounds with the Beaſts that periſh. Beaſts have no Reſtraint put upon their Appetites, which Man, upon the Proſpect of a future Eternity, is obliged to bring himſelf under: [o] They feel no inward Reproaches for tranſgreſſing the Bounds of their Duty, and the Laws of their Nature: They have no uneaſy Preſages of a future Reckoning, wherein the Pleaſures they now taſte, muſt be accounted for; and none of their Satisfactions are impaired by the Fear of loſing them, or by the dreadful Apprehenſions of Death, which make the natural Man all his Life-Time, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, ſubject unto Bondage. In a Word, they have no Concern for what is [l] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [k] Pſal. lxxiii. 25. [l] Young's Sermons, Vol. I.

[m] Martin, on Natural Religion. [n] Heb. vi. 4, 5. [o] Biſhop Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I.

is paſt, no uneaſy Expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the preſent Moment, and the preſent Enjoyment, and in that they are vigorouſly and totally employed; whereas Man, the Lord of this lower Creation, to whom all theſe Creatures bow and obey, by the very Uſe of his Reaſon, is ſubjected to theſe Inconveniencies, and debarred from theſe Gratifications; is obliged to deny himſelf, and keep in his Appetites, and run through a Courſe of ſevere Diſcipline, all to fit and prepare his Soul for Heaven; and yet, if, when his Body dies, his Soul is involved in the common Ruin, what ſhall we think of the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God, in thus forming, thus appointing him?

Its Deſire of Immortality.

THAT we have a natural Deſire of Immortality implanted in us, is manifeſt from [p] all the monumental Things we ſee Men do; from the Structures and Buildings, the Statues and Images, the Tombs and Sepulchres, they erect, the Books and Writings they publiſh, and the great hazardous Exploits, they engage in, for the ſake of Fame. [q] Now every Deſire ſuppoſes a natural Capacity in the Subject, wherein it reſides; and therefore, ſince the Soul deſires Immortalily, it muſt be capable of Immortality, and withal perceive that it is ſo. But how can it perceive itſelf capable of Immortality, if in its own Nature it finds not a certain Fund of Immortality, which makes this Deſire in it ſo lively, ſo conſtant, ſo univerſal? It feels within itſelf, I ſay, that it does not die with the Body; and, for this Reaſon, by its Actions it aims at a Life to come, and by its Deſires anticipates an Immortality, which places it above the Reach and Power of Death, when the Body yields to it, and lives no longer: For ſuch is the Senſe of the great Roman Orator, in a Book, which he wrote when himſelf was going off the Stage of Life, that [r] if Mens Souls were not to be poſſeſſed of an immortal Exiſtence in ANOTHER STATE, they would not, IN THIS, enterpriſe ſo great and noble Things, and aſpire ſo naturally after immortal Renown.

Its Apprehenſion of Futurity.

ONCE more, we perceive in ourſelves the Conſciouſneſs of Guilt, and an uneaſy Concern at the Proſpect of Things to come: But whence ſhould this ariſe, if the Soul ſees not an Immortality beyond this Life, from whence it is impoſſible for her to withdraw? If ſhe could be aſſured of not ſurviving the Body, her Fears would terminate with her Life, and every Day decreaſe, the nearer ſhe approached that Period: Whereas the very contrary is experimentally true. The greater the Diſtance is, wherein the wicked Man looks upon Death, and the longer he thinks he has to live, the leſs his Conſcience is terrified; becauſe the Idea of his Soul's Immortality is at preſent too remote, and beheld, as it were, in Miniature only; whereas, when Life decays, and draws near to a Concluſion, the Immortality then appearing near, and preſenting itſelf in full View to the Soul, the Conſcience is alarmed; its Stings are redoubled, and while the unhappy Creature has any Thought left, a dreadful Futurity, which he ſees beyond his approaching Death, and is a thouſand Times worſe than Death itſelf, rends his Soul. But now what has his Soul to fear, if it does not ſurvive his Body? Or why is it moſt of all concerned, when the Time of its Deliverance is at Hand, if ſo be, when the Body is deſtroyed, it reſolves into nothing, and vaniſhes into the ſoft Air? In a Word, let Men ſhift the Remembrance of it as much as they pleaſe, yet, at one Time or other, they muſt believe the Immortality of the Soul, becauſe they find it in their Conſcience. But now how came it to be placed there, and to be placed there ſo ſtedfaſtly, that it cannot be moved? [s] If it were only Education, we might forget it, as we forget Abundance of Things, that are the Effect of Education; but this is ſo far from being forgotten, that Conſcience retains it, even to the laſt Breath: And therefore we may conclude, that Nature, or to ſpeak more properly, that God himſelf has imprinted this Perſuaſion in us, and imprinted it ſo indelibly, that one muſt deſtroy the very Subſtance of the Soul, and reduce it to nothing, before one can extirpate the Notion of its Immortality from the Conſcience. Now, as we may reaſonably preſume, that this Notion of Immortality, which he hath implanted in us, is not chimerical and deluſory, we muſt be led to conclude, even from the Light of Reaſon, that both the Nature of our Souls, and the State, which he hath provided for them in the other World, is ſuch, as anſwer the different Forebodings of our Minds, according to our different Behaviour in this. But we have aſſerted our Point before from better Authority; and ſhall now proceed to evince, [p] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [q] Martin, on Natural Religion. [r] Tully, de Senectute.

II. THAT

[s] Martin, ibid.

Whether the Jews had right Notions of the ſeparate State of the Soul.

II. THAT in its ſeparate State the Soul does not ſleep, and become inſenſible, till the Reſurrection-Day, but is immediately admitted into an happy or miſerable Condition, according as the Man has behaved in his paſt Life. Whether the Jews of old had any juſt and adequate Notion of the State of ſeparated Souls; whether they believed, that they had different Abodes, according to their different Qualities, where they continued to think, and perceive, and be differently affected with Joy or Grief, with Pleaſure or Pain, according to their different Diſpoſitions and Allotments; or, that they were all thrown into one common Receptacle, where they fell into a Kind of Lethargy, and utter Inſenſibility till the general Reſurrection; has been a Matter of ſome Debate among the Learned. [t] The Practice of Necromancy, or conſulting with the Dead, which was certainly a Branch of the ancient Magick, and [u] uſed by Saul in the Caſe of Samuel; the Prayer of Elijah, when raiſing the Widow's Son to Life, [x] O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this Child's Soul come into him again; and that Declaration of God to Moſes at the Buſh, [*] I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, as our Saviour has expounded it, might give them to underſtand, that the Soul, after Death, was not annihilated, but had, ſome where or other, Exiſtence in its ſeparate State; yet, when we conſider the Deſcription which Holy Job, the great Aſſerter of the Reſurrection, gives of the State of the Dead; [y] Man dieth, and waſteth away; yea, Man giveth up the Ghoſt, and where is he? Man lieth down, and riſeth not, till the Heavens be no more; they ſhall not awake, nor be raiſed out of their Sleep: When we conſider what Sentiments the Royal Pſalmiſt, addreſſing himſelf to God, has diſcovered of this Matter; [z] In Death there is no Remembrance of thee, and in the Grave who ſhall give thee Thanks? For [a] the Dead praiſe not the Lord, neither any that go down into Silence: When we conſider the Writing of good Hezekiah, King of Judah, or the Form of his Thankſgiving to God, for his Recovery from a Fit of Sickneſs; [b] The Grave cannot praiſe thee, Death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down to the Pit, cannot hope for thy Truth: The Living, the Living, he ſhall praiſe thee, as I do this Day; and thereupon the Advice of the wiſe King Solomon, [c] whatſoever thy Hand findeth to do, do it with all thy Might; for there is no Work, nor Device, nor Knowledge, nor Wiſdom in the Grave, whither thou goeſt: When we conſider theſe, and ſeveral other Paſſages of the like Import, I ſay, we can hardly forbear believing, that the Jews of old, even the beſt and wiſeſt of them, [d] looked upon the Interval between their Death and Reſurrection, as a State of perfect Oblivion and Inactivity; and that their Hopes and Fears, as to the other World, had generally Reſpect to the Reſurrection only, and to thoſe different everlaſting States, that were to ſucceed. It is the Glory and Excellence of the Goſpel therefore, that it has brought Light into this [e] Land of Darkneſs, as Darkneſs itſelf, according to Job's Expreſſion, and thereby diſcovered, not only what we are to be to all Eternity, but what we are to be likewiſe the very Moment we ſtep out of the Body.

The Chriſtian Doctrine in this Particular.

OUR bleſſed Saviour, [f] who came from above, and therefore underſtood the whole Oeconomy of the bright and heavenly Regions, and, by Virtue of his omniſcient and omnipreſent Deity, as perfectly knew the miſerable State of thoſe Spirits, who dwell in the oppoſite Regions of Darkneſs, in the Parable of the rich Man and the Beggar, has given us a lively Deſcription of both theſe States: [g] And it came to paſs, that the Beggar died, and was carried into Abraham's Boſom; the rich Man alſo died, and was buried, and in Hell, in Hades, he lift up his Eyes, being in Torments, and ſeeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his Boſom; and he cried, and ſaid, Father Abraham, have Mercy on me, and ſend Lazarus, that he may dip the Tip of his Finger in Water, and cool my Tongue; for I am tormented in this Flame. But Abraham ſaid, Son, remember, that thou in thy Life-Time receivedſt thy good Things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil Things, but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

That

[t] Whiſton's Sermons. [u] 1 Sam. xxviii. 7. [x] 1 Kings xvii. 21. [*] Exod. iii. 6.
[y] Job xiv. 10, 12. [z] Pſal. vi. 5. [a] Ibid. cxv. 17. [b] Iſa. xxxviii. 18, 19.
[c] Eccleſ. ix. 10.

[d] The Author, we laſt quoted, is of Opinion, that the Souls of Men, departed under the Times of the Old Teſtament, did really ſleep, or at leaſt enjoy a very inconſiderable Share of Life and Senſation, till our Saviour's Coming; nay, perhaps till his Deſcent into Hades, among the Souls of the Dead, between the Time of his Death, and his Reſurrection. But if this Deſcent into Hades is to be taken in any other Senſe, than what he imagines, as we conceive it may, (See Page 685, &c.) all his Conjecture will prove groundleſs.

[e] Job x. 22. [f] Bull's Sermons, Vol. I. [g] Luke xvi. 22, &c.

[h] That all this Happineſs of the poor, and the Miſery of the rich Man was in the intermediate State, before the general Reſurrection, ſeems evident, not only from the Series of the Hiſtory, but from the Circumſtances likewiſe of the rich Man's Deſire, that a Meſſage might be ſent to his five ſurviving Brethren, in order to their Converſion: And therefore our Saviour's Deſign in this Parable muſt have been, to repreſent the Good, as very happy, and the Bad, as very miſerable, in the intermediate State, before the Reſurrection. It is acknowledged, indeed, [i] that this is but a Parable, and, accordingly, ſeveral Things in it are Parabolically expreſſed: But though every Thing in a Parable be not Argumentative, yet all Divines agree, that the main Scope and Intendment of it is, which, in this, is to ſhew what becomes of the Souls of good and bad Men after Death.

WHILE the penitent Thief was hanging on the Croſs, his Petition to our Lord was only, that he would [k] remember him, when he came into his Kingdom, i. e. when he came, in his Royal Power and Majeſty, to judge the World in the laſt Day; but our Saviour grants him more than he aſked; Verily I ſay unto thee, To-day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe. Paradiſe, among the Jews, does primarily ſignify the Garden of Eden, that bleſſed Garden, wherein Adam, in his State of Innocence, dwelt; and, becauſe it was a very delightful Place, they uſed, by the Word, to repreſent the State and Abode of good Souls, ſeparated from their Bodies, and waiting for their Reſurrection. So that our Saviour's Meaning, in this Promiſe to the penitent Thief, muſt be, that he ſhould preſently, after his Death, enter with him into that Place of Bliſs and Happineſs, which the Souls of the Righteous inhabit. But now, why ſhould our Saviour have made him this Promiſe, had his Soul been to become incapable of the Joys and Felicities of the Place? Paradiſe could have been no Paradiſe to him, had he been to fall into a deep Sleep, as ſoon as he came thither, and ſo loſe the Senſe and Faculty of taſting and perceiving the Pleaſures of it.

NEXT to our Bleſſed Saviour, St Paul, who, as himſelf tells us, was caught up, not only in Heaven, but into Paradiſe likewiſe, is the beſt able to give us an Account of the State of the Souls dwelling there; and he tells us, that it was ſo far from being a Place of Darkneſs and Obſcurity, Silence and Oblivion, where its Inhabitants are all in a profound Sleep; that, on the contrary, it is a moſt glorious Place, full of Light and raviſhing Viſion; a Place where Myſteries are to be learnt, far ſurpaſſing the Reach of frail Mortals, and where himſelf [l] heard ἄῤῥητα ῥήματα, Words, or rather Things unſpeakable, ſuch as were not lawful, or rather not poſſible, for Man to utter. From his own Knowledge and Experience of the Place therefore, he tells the Philippians, that [m] he was in a Strait between two, having a Deſire to depart, and to be with Chriſt, which was far better, though to abide in the Fleſh was more needful to them: But, how could he think it ſo much better to depart from the Body, than to remain in it, if, upon his Departure, he was to be deprived of all Senſe, and to ſink into a Lethargy, and utter Oblivion? To diſcharge faithfully the Apoſtolick Office; to be an Inſtrument of doing Good, of ſaving Souls, of converting Nations; and himſelf to enjoy, all along, the Comforts of his good Deeds, the Favour of God, and the ſweet Conſolation [n] of a Conſcience void of Offence towards God, and towards Man, is certainly a more eligible Thing, than to enter into a State, where one common Gulph of Inſenſibility ſwallows up good and bad Souls alike: And therefore if we will allow the Report of an Apoſtle, who himſelf had been in the Place, though [o] whether in the Body, or out of the Body, he could not tell, together with the Report of our Saviour, who himſelf knew the Place, to have any Weight and Authority in this Caſe, we cannot but agree in this Sentiment, viz. [p] That the Souls of Men do not only ſubſiſt, after the Death of their Bodies, but that they are alſo ſenſible of Pleaſure or Pain, of Joy or Sorrow, in that ſeparate State; the Wicked being tormented, at preſent, with a piercing Remorſe for what is paſſed, and expecting far more dreadful Vengeance to befal them; and the Good, on the other Hand, being refreſhed with the Peace and Satisfaction of a good Conſcience, and yet joyfully waiting for a greater Happineſs, at the Reſurrection. Which brings us to the other Part of this Argument, viz.

[h] Whiſton's Sermons. [i] Ball's Sermons, Vol. I. [k] Luke xxiii. 42, 43. [l] 2 Cor. xii. 4. [m] Phil. i. 23, 24. [n] Acts xxiv. 16. [o] 2 Cor. xii. 3. [p] Ball, ibid.

Different Opinions concerning the Soul's middle State.

III. THAT the Soul's Happineſs or Miſery, in this intermediate State, is partial only, and not ſo perfect and compleat as it will be, after its Re-union with the Body. [q] It is an Opinion pretty generally received, that the Souls of the Saints, after their Departure out of the Body, are immediately, by the holy Angels, conveyed into the higheſt Heavens, and ſo admitted into the glorious Preſence of God, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt; and that they there enjoy the ſame Happineſs and Glory, which they ſhall enjoy after the Reſurrection of the Body; the ſame, not only in Subſtance, but in Degree, barely with this one Difference, that their Bodies are not as yet raiſed from the Dead, and re-united to their Souls. The very contrary to this they affirm to be the Fate of wicked Souls: And, to give their Opinion the better Countenance, [r] they ſuppoſe a particular Judgment, previous to the Soul's Conſignment either to Happineſs or Miſery, i. e. "They ſuppoſe, that "every particular Soul, as ſoon as it departs from the Body, undergoes ſuch a Trial "before the Tribunal of God, as the whole World will undergo at the laſt Day; "has every Thought, and Word, and Work enquired into, and Sentence paſſed "upon it to the very ſame Rewards and Puniſhments, which the final Judgment "ſhall decree."

That its Happineſs or Miſery is imperfect.

THERE is another Opinion, ſomewhat different to this, not ſo popular indeed, but what ſeems more conſonant to the Word of God; and that is, that the Happineſs or Miſery of departed Souls is, in the Degree of it, leſs perfect before, than it ſhall be after the Reſurrection. [s] This Opinion makes the Happineſs of the Righteous, before the Reſurrection, to conſiſt chiefly in theſe Particulars; that, by Death, they are freed from all thoſe Cares, and Troubles, and Dangers, all thoſe Trials and Temptations, all thoſe Doubts and Anxieties, all that Grief, and Sorrow, and Anguiſh, which they are perpetually diſturbed and tormented with in this mortal Life, and, as ſoon as releaſed from their Bodies, enjoy a perfect Quiet and Eaſe; that they are not only freed from Miſery, but, together with their Bodies, put off all thoſe Defilements of Sin, which they had contracted by their dwelling in them, and have the Graces, wherewith they took Care to adorn themſelves while they were upon Earth, by Death very much improved, and their Happineſs thereby proportionably augmented; and that, having now a nearer and more diſtinct View of that Glory, which is reſerved for them till the laſt Day, the ſure and certain Proſpect of it does vaſtly add to their preſent Joy and Satisfaction. For if the good and faithful Servants of God are ſaid [t] to rejoice, even in this World, with Joy unſpeakable, and full of Glory, as oft as they fix their Eyes upon that diſtant Reward, which they hope for, when Chriſt ſhall come in Glory to recompenſe his Saints; then undoubtedly the Joy, which this Proſpect will afford them, when by Death it is brought nearer to them, when they ſee it more clearly, when they have no Doubts of compaſſing it, when they have an Earneſt and Pledge of it, in that Tranquillity, which they are actually poſſeſſed of, muſt be ſtill more raviſhing and inconceivable.

ON the contrary, this Opinion ſuppoſes, that by Death the Wicked are removed from all the Pleaſures and gay Amuſements of the World, from all the Idols, they were once ſo fond of; from that Riot and Exceſs, that lewd and intemperate Company, which was heretofore their chief Delight; and that finding themſelves naked Spirits, ſtripped of every Thing they love, and expoſed to every Thing they hate, with their Paſſions worrying them, and Conſcience, [u] like an armed Man, let looſe upon them, by the Convictions they feel within, as the terrible Day of the Lord approaches, they perceive, that there remaineth nothing * but a certain fearful looking for of Judgment, and fiery Indignation to devour them. Now theſe different States of departed Souls, tho' they be much ſuperior to the Happineſs or Miſery which thoſe who are moſt happy or miſerable in this World, do enjoy, do yet fall much ſhort of that Bliſs or Woe, which theſe Souls ſhall enjoy or ſuffer after the Reſurrection; and, conſequently, what is the intermediate State between Death and Judgment; as we ſhall now endeavour to make appear, is not deſigned to be the Conſummation of the Happineſs or Miſery of our immortal Souls.

A CER-

[q] Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons. [r] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. I. [s] Biſhop Smalridge, ibid.
[t] 1 Pet. i. 8. [u] Prov. vi. 11. * Heb. x. 27.

[x] A CERTAIN Nobleman, ſays our Lord, went into a far Country, to receive for himſelf a Kingdom, and to return; and he called his ten Servants, and delivered them ten Pounds, and ſaid unto them, Occupy till I come. And it came to paſs, that when he was returned, having received the Kingdom, then he ordered theſe Servants to be called unto him, to reward the Diligent, and puniſh the Slothful; and afterwards commanded his [y] Enemies to be ſlain. Now it is too obvious to need any Explanation, that by the Return in the Parable is meant Chriſt's ſecond Coming into the World, to judge it, and to reward every one according to their Works: And, though, as we ſaid before, there is no arguing from Diſcourſes of this Nature any farther, than their main Drift and Deſign leads us; yet, ſince our Saviour ſpake this Parable, [z] becauſe, upon his Approach to Jeruſalem, the People thought that the Kingdom of God ſhould immediately appear, we cannot but infer, that this Nobleman's not rewarding his Servants, whom he had entruſted with the Management of his Money, and not puniſhing his Enemies who had retracted their Obedience to him, until his Return, was intended to denote a Purpoſe in the Divine Wiſdom, to delay the appointed Time of Mens final Reward, until Chriſt ſhall return from Heaven, [a] in the Glory of his Father, and with the Holy Angels, in order to diſpenſe it. This proved from Scripture.

WHEN St Peter put the Queſtion to his Lord, what Reward he, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, ſhould have, who had forſaken their All in this World to follow him, and be his Diſciples; he received this gracious Anſwer; [b] Verily, I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the Regeneration, when the Son of Man ſhall ſit on the Throne of his Glory, ye ſhall ſit upon twelve Thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. [c] By the Regeneration here ſpoken of, we muſt not underſtand the Benefit, we receive by Baptiſm, nor yet that, which is the Effect of God's Sanctifying Spirit upon our Minds, but our Reſurrection only, which will be indeed a παλιγγενεσία, a Regeneration, or ſecond Generation of Men to Life, after that Life, which they had in their firſt Generation, is extinguiſhed; and if ſo, then does our Saviour in this Paſſage inform us, that the Dead in Chriſt are not to expect their final Reward until the Reſurrection; ſince the Apoſtles themſelves, thoſe great Champions of the Chriſtian Cauſe, are ordered to wait for the full Recompence of their Labour, and Suffering, and Self-denial, (though their Recompence, when it comes, will be more eminently great, than others) till the Arrival of that appointed Period. St Paul therefore, looking backwards upon his paſt Conflicts, and forwards upon his future Reward, tells us the Time, when he was to expect it: [d] I have fought a good Fight, I have finiſhed my Courſe, I have kept the Faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteouſneſs, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, ſhall give to me at that Day, and not to me only, but to all them alſo, that love his Appearing. For [e] the Crown of Righteouſneſs was not then to be ſet upon St Paul's Head, when he had juſt finiſhed his Courſe, but was from that Time, to be laid up for him; it was not to be given till that Day, the great Day of Judgment; not to be given him ſeparately, but, at the ſame Time, to him, and to all them, who, when the Judge ſhall come, loved his Appearance. And for this Reaſon it is, that the Saints of God are directed [f] to look for that bleſſed Hope, and the glorious Appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. The bleſſed Hope is the Bleſſedneſs hoped for; and therefore ſince the Apoſtle joins it with the Appearance of our Lord, he plainly enough intimates, that the perfect Bliſs we hope for, will not be beſtowed upon us, till the Coming of our Lord. But now, if after the Appearance of Chriſt, there ſhall be no other Acceſſion to the Happineſs of departed Saints, but what ariſes from the Glorification of their Bodies; if, even before his Appearance, their Souls are already poſſeſſed of all the Happineſs, whereof they are capable, and whereunto they are, by the Merits of Chriſt, intitled; there can be no ſufficient Reaſon given, why they ſhould be ſaid to expect the Appearance of Chriſt, in order to be made Partakers of that Bleſſedneſs, they hope for.

IT

[x] Luke xix. 12, &c. [y] Ibid. ver. 27. [z] Ibid. ver. 11. [a] Matth. xvi. 27.

[b] Matth. xix. 28. Our Tranſlators have manifeſtly miſpointed this Text. For they refer the Words in the Regeneration to that which went before, thus: Ye have followed me in the Regeneration; whereas they ſhould be joined to the following Words, thus: Ye, which have followed me, ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ, in the Regeneration, when the Son of Man ſhall ſit upon the Throne of his Glory.

[c] Biſhop Bull's Sermons, Vol. I. [d] 2 Tim. iv. 7. [e] Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons. [f] Tit. ii. 13.

IT would be endleſs to multiply Paſſages to this Purpoſe, and therefore to be ſhort. When St Peter tells us, that [z] our Inheritance is reſerved in Heaven for us; that [a] our Praiſe, and Honour, and Glory are to commence at the Appearing of Jeſus Chriſt; and therefore admoniſhes us [b] to hope to the End for the Grace, that is to be brought unto us, at the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt: When St John declares, [c] Beloved, now are we the Sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be, but we know, that, when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is: When in the Revelation, he repreſents the Souls under the Altar, complaining of the Delay of the Day of Judgment, and that [d] it was ſaid to them, that they ſhould reſt yet for a little Seaſon, until their Fellow-Servants alſo, and their Brethren, that ſhould be killed, as they were, ſhould be fulfilled: And laſtly, when our bleſſed Saviour informs us, that our feeding the Hungry, and cloathing the Naked, and viſiting the Sick, &c. though [e] Actions, which he himſelf charges to his own Account, will not receive their full Payment and Recompence, [f] till the Reſurrection of the Juſt; nor the contrary Uſage meet with its Puniſhment, till that Period; we cannot but conclude, that the Happineſs and Miſery of Man (though in ſome Meaſure it commences now) does not receive its Conſummation and Accompliſhment, till that Day: For, in all common Conſtruction, there muſt be ſomething in the Solemnity of the Sentence: [g] Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you, that puts the Righteous in Poſſeſſion of what they did not enjoy before; and ſomething in [h] Depart from me, ye Curſed, into everlaſting Fire, that condemns the Wicked to what they did not ſuffer before.

The Sum of the whole Argument.

THE Amount of the whole then is this, —— [i] that ſome departed Souls are in a State of Happineſs, ſome in a State of Miſery; that, according to their different Demeanour in this mortal Life, their Condition is different, upon their Tranſlation into another World; that they do not, in the Interval between their being ſeparated from the Body by Death, and re-united to it at the Reſurrection, ſleep a profound Sleep, void of all Action and Perception, deſtitute of Life and Thought, inſenſible of Pleaſure and Pain, is evident enough from ſeveral Paſſages in Holy Writ: But that theſe different States are allotted them by any formal Sentence, paſſed upon them immediately after their Death; that their Actions are then weighed and examined by the Judge of Heaven and Earth, and Judgment pronounced upon them ſeverally, according to the Good or Evil they had done; that the State of Happineſs or Miſery, which they are in, from their Departure out of the World, is final, and the ſame, both in Kind and Degree, to which they ſhall be judged to all Eternity; that the Souls of the Righteous ſhall, at the Day of Judgment, be admitted to the Participation of no other, or greater Bliſs, than what they before enjoyed; nor the Souls of the Wicked condemned to endure no other, or ſorer Torments, than what they before felt; is what we have no Authority from the Word of God to affirm, and what we have good Grounds, we preſume, from the plain Declarations thereof, to deny. For when we are told, that [k] we muſt all appear before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the Things done in his Body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad; and therefore are cautioned [l] to judge nothing before the Time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to Light the hidden Things of Darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the Counſels of the Hearts, and then ſhall every Man have Praiſe, or Diſpraiſe of God; [m] to what Purpoſe, may we ſay, is there a particular Judgment, when we are ſo poſitively aſſured of a general one? Or why are the Actions of Men examined again, when they were examined once before? The Works of Darkneſs, and the Thoughts of Mens Hearts, how can they be ſaid to be revealed, when they were particularly laid open before? And how can it be called a Day of Retribution, when it is but adjudging Men to the ſame Places, to the ſame Rewards and Puniſhments, which were judicially aſſigned them before?

No particular Judgment before the Reſurrection.

The Diſtinction that may be made between ſeparate Souls.

"BUT if there be no particular Judgment, how ſhall we determine the Fate of "each Soul, as ſoon as it has left the Body? And by what Characters ſhall we "know, to which of the Regions it belongs?" [n] In this Life indeed, the Holy and Unholy live in the ſame World, have the ſame Snares and Temptations, the ſame [z] 1 Pet. i. 4. [a] Ibid. ver. 7. [b] Ibid. ver. 13. [c] 1 John iii. 2. [d] Rev. vi. 11.

[e] Matth. xxv. 40. [f] Luke xiv. 14. [g] Matth. xxv. 34. [h] Ibid. ver. 41. [i] Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons. [k] 2 Cor. v. 10. [l] 1 Cor. iv. 5. [m] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. I. [n] Whiſton's Sermons.

ſame Senſes and Appetites, in ſhort, the ſame Body that preſſes down the virtuous Attempts of the one, and diverts the Senſe and Miſery of the other; but, as ſoon as Death has diſſolved the Union with the Body, then, and not till then, will moſt plainly appear their different States; the one, by a Neceſſity of Nature, will aſcend to the Regions of Bliſs and Holineſs, and the other, by a like fatal Neceſſity, will ſink into the Pit of Darkneſs and Miſery. For if [t] the Spirit of God, even in this Life, beareth Witneſs with our Spirit, that we are the Children of God, how eaſy is it to conceive, that God may make this Judgment of his eternal Spirit brighter and ſtronger upon a good Soul, when out of the Body? And if Conſcience is ſo apt to miſboad and condemn the Wicked now, it is no Difficulty to imagine, how it may then be filled with greater and more intolerable Deſpair, partly from God's abandoning it entirely; partly from a clearer Manifeſtation of his Wrath and Diſpleaſure againſt it; and partly from its being poſſeſſed, and invaded by ſome evil Spirits: For, as good Angels, which miniſter to Holy Souls when in the Body, will naturally reſort, and miniſter to them, when they come out of it; ſo is there little Reaſon to doubt, but that the evil Spirits, which tempted and inflamed wicked Souls in this Life, will be ready to ſeize and carry away the helpleſs Wretches, as ſoon as they ſtep into another.

THUS we think we have ſaid enough, both to reſcue the departed Souls of Men from a State of Death and Inſenſibility, and, till the Reſurrection, to put a ſufficient Difference between the Condition of thoſe, who die in the Lord, and of thoſe, who die in their Sins: But that the Souls of thoſe, who die in a State of Enmity with God, can by any After-Acts of Repentance reconcile themſelves to him; or that departed Souls can, by any Methods of Purgation in another World, be cleared from the Defilements, which they contracted in this, and by ſuch purifying be rendered more fit Objects of God's Mercy, and more worthy to be received into the Kingdom of Heaven, are Poſitions, which we renounce and diſclaim; ſuch as have been grafted upon this Doctrine of departed Spirits for very bad Purpoſes; ſuch as have no Countenance, no Authority from Scripture; and ſuch as [u] contradict the declared Sentiments of the greateſt Men in the Church, for at leaſt the firſt three hundred Years.

The Place of no Signification to their Happineſs or Miſery.

[t] WHETHER the Place of departed Souls is above, within, or beneath the higheſt Heavens; whether there is one common Receptacle for the Souls of the Righteous

[t] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. I.

[u] St Clement, who lived in the Apoſtolic Age, in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, (Chap. viii.) ſeems profeſſedly to oppoſe the Fiction of Purgatory. Whilſt we are upon Earth, ſays he, let us repent; for we are as Clay in the Hand of the Artificer: As therefore the Potter, if he makes a Veſſel, and finds it awry, or broken in his Hands, may again faſhion it anew; but if, beforehand, he hath thrown it into the fiery Furnace, there is no more Help for it, he cannot make it better: So alſo we, as long as we are in the World, may repent from the whole Heart of the Evils, we have done in the Fleſh, that we may be ſaved of the Lord, whilſt we have Time of Repentance; but, after we have left this World, we can no longer confeſs or repent. Nothing, we think, can reconcile this Divinity to the Romiſh Purgatory; and to ſhew that this was the Doctrine of the Church, till after the third Century, we ſhall produce a Paſſage out of the Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers to the Orthodox, who, in his Anſwer to the 75th Queſtion, having ſaid, that in this Life there is no Difference between the Righteous and the Wicked, as to worldly Concerns, immediately adds, but, after Death, the Righteous preſently are ſeparated from the Unrighteous; for they are carried by Angels into their meet Places. The Souls of the Righteous are conveyed into Paradiſe, where they enjoy the Converſation and Sight of Angels, and Archangels, and of our Saviour Chriſt alſo, by Way of Viſion: According to what is ſaid, when we are abſent from the Body, we are preſent with the Lord: But the Souls of the Unrighteous are carried into the infernal Regions, &c. and they, (i. e. both Sorts of Souls) are kept in their meet Places, till the Day of the Reſurrection and Recompence. From whence it is manifeſt, that the Primitive Fathers were Strangers to the Limbus Patrum, the Limbus Infantum, and Purgatory; for they were acquainted with no more than two Places or Receptacles for departed Souls. If then we enquire into the Riſe and Growth of the Doctrine of Purgatory in the Chriſtian Church, we ſhall plainly find it to be this. About the Middle of the third Century, Origen, among other Platonic Conceits of his, vented this, that all the Faithful (the Apoſtles themſelves not excepted) ſhall, at the Day of Judgment, paſs through a Purgatory-Fire, the Fire of the great Conflagration, which they ſhall endure, for a longer or ſhorter Time, according as their Imperfections required a greater or leſs Purgation: And in this Conceit, directly contrary to many expreſs Texts of Scripture, he was followed, for the Greatneſs of his Name, by ſome other great Men in the Church of God. Afterwards, about the End of the fourth, or the Beginning of the fifth Century, St Auſtin began to doubt, whether this imagined Purgation was not to be made in the Interval between Death and the Reſurrection, at leaſt, as to the Souls of the more perfect Chriſtians. Towards the End of the fifth Century, Pope Gregory, a Man remarkably ſuperſtitious, undertook dogmatically to aſſert the Problem, and ſet himſelf with all his Might to prove it; but chiefly from idle Stories of Apparitions of Souls, coming out of Purgatory. Four hundred Years after this, Pope John the XVIIIth, (or, as ſome ſay, the XIXth) inſtituted an Holy-Day, wherein he ſeverely required all Men to pray for the Souls in Purgatory; as if the Catholick Church, before him, had been deficient in their Charity, and forgotten the miſerable Souls in that Place of Torment. At length, the Council of Florence (in the Year 1439) turned this Figment into an Article of Faith, which the Roman Clergy, for the Gain, more than the Godlineſs of it, ſtrenuouſly inculcate and maintain. Bull's Sermons, Vol. I.

[u] St Clement, in the Beginning of his Epiſtle, calls the Receptacle of pious Souls, the Holy Place, but not the Moſt Holy;

Righteous and Unrighteous, till the Reſurrection; or whether, from their Departure out of their Bodies, they dwell in ſeparate Manſions, as is moſt probable; whether Abraham's Boſom, where Lazarus was carried by the Angels, and Hell, or rather Hades, where the rich Man was tormented, ſignify to us Places as diſtant, as the Conditions of the poor and rich Man were different, or were intended only to expreſs to us the Difference of their States, without determining the ſeveral Places of their Abode; are Speculations, we are no Ways concerned to be inquiſitive about, while we are ſatisfied of this main Truth, viz. that the Righteous, in the intermediate Time, between their Death and the Reſurrection, are in a State of Happineſs, and the Wicked in a State of Miſery; for, as " far as our Apprehenſions of theſe Matters go, a material Place cannot in the leaſt contribute either to increaſe or to diminiſh the Happineſs or Miſery of an immaterial Spirit. Spirits, that are diveſted of Fleſh and Blood, wherever they are, carry Heaven or Hell along with them. The good Angels are as happy here upon Earth, whilſt they are employed in the Execution of God's Will, as whilſt they are converſant in the Regions above, becauſe † they do always behold the Face of God, in whoſe Preſence is Fulneſs of Joy: Satan was no more happy, when [x] he came among the Sons of God, to preſent himſelf before the Lord, than whilſt he was going to and fro, and walking up and down in the Earth. The Happineſs or Miſery of pure Spirits hath no Relation, that we know of, to the Place, where they are; but the Happineſs or Miſery of embodied Spirits, or of Men, who are made up of Souls and Bodies, have a Dependence upon the Place of their Abode; and therefore we are ſure, wherever ſeparate Souls are lodged till the Reſurrection, that, after the Reſurrection, righteous and wicked Men ſhall have Places allotted them, ſuitable to their different States; the former ſhall be carried up to the higheſt Heavens, the latter ſhall be thrown down to the nethermoſt Hell; and therefore ſeeing that theſe Things ſhall be ſo, the Apoſtle's Inference is, [y] What Manner of Perſons ought we to be, in all Holy Converſation and Godlineſs?

The Influence of the Doctrine of the Soul's Immortality and intermediate State.

IT was an Obſervation of Plato long ago, that [z] no Man can be truly and ſteadily religious, unleſs he firmly believes the Immortality of the Soul, and lives in a Senſe of it; and, even before him, the Wiſdom of Solomon [a] hath given us a lively Deſcription of the fatal Tendency, which our Diſbelief of this great Article has, to lead us into all Manner of Wickedneſs. " Our Life is ſhort and tedious, ſays the Infidel, " and in the Death of a Man there is no Remedy. For we are born at all Adven- " tures, and we ſhall be hereafter as though we had never been; for the Breath in " our Noſtrils is as Smoke, and a little Spark, in the moving of our Heart, which " being extinguiſhed, our Body ſhall turn into Aſhes, and our Spirits ſhall vaniſh " as the ſoft Air: Whereupon our Name ſhall be forgotten in Time, and no Man " ſhall have our Works in Remembrance. Come on, therefore, let us enjoy the " good Things that are preſent, and let us ſpeedily uſe the Creatures, like as in " Youth. Let us fill ourſelves with coſtly Wine and Ointments, and let no Flower " of the Spring paſs by us. Let us crown ourſelves with Roſe-buds, before they " be withered; let none of us go without his Part of Voluptuouſneſs. Let us " leave Tokens of our Joyfulneſs in every Place; for this is our Portion, and our " Lot is this." Thus the Infidel reaſons himſelf into Softneſs, and Luxury, and Riot; and, in Proceſs of his Error, comes in a ſhort Time to approve Crimes, the moſt abhorrent to human Nature: For thus he goes on; " Let us oppreſs the " poor righteous Man; let us not ſpare the Widow, nor reverence the ancient grey " Hairs of the Aged. Let our Strength be the Law of Juſtice; for that which is " feeble, is found to be nothing worth. Therefore let us lie in wait for the Righ- " teous, becauſe he is not for our Turn, and he is clean contrary to our Doings. " He upbraideth us with our offending the Law, and objecteth, to our Infamy, the " Tranſgreſſings

Holy; whereby he alludes to the Temple of Jeruſalem, which (at the Time of his writing it) was yet ſtanding, and wherein there was the Sanctuary, or Holy Place, and within it the Holy of Holies, both Figures of the heavenly Things. And therefore he ſeems to have thought, that the Region of the Godly deceaſed was a Part of the heavenly Regions, as the Sanctuary was a Part of the Temple, and near to the higheſt Region of the Heavens, as the Sanctuary was nearer the Holy of Holies. Upon which Account ſome of the Fathers, as St Cyprian, St Ambroſe, and others, ſtuck not to call the Place of the ſeparate Spirits of good Men, by the Name of Heaven, or the Heavens; meaning thereby, not the Auditorium, or inmoſt Apartment of Heaven, where the Throne of the Majeſty on High is ſeated, and where the Light, that is unapproachable, ſhines, but an heavenly Manſion, ſomewhere near it: And by Parity of Reaſon, wherever we imagine Hell to be placed, we may ſuppoſe, that the Abode of wicked Spirits, in their State of Separation, is ſomewhere in the Confines of it. Bull's Sermons, Vol. I.

[w] Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons. † Matth. xviii. 10. [x] Job ii. 1, 2. [y] 2 Pet. iii. 11.
[z] De Legibus. [a] Chap. ii.

" Tranſgreſſings of our Education. Let us therefore examine him with Deſpite-
" fulneſs and Torture, that we may know his Meekneſs, and prove his Patience."
And, indeed, what Conſiderations of Prudence, or Decency, or Honour, or good Report, can reſtrain him from abuſing his Wealth and Power to the greateſt Degree of Licentiouſneſs and Tyranny, when he has once fortified himſelf in Infidelity, and poſſeſſed his Heart with this Perſuaſion, that, when he dies, his Body ſhall be turned into Aſhes, and his Spirit vaniſh as the ſoft Air. But now, when a Man carries always this Conviction in his Breaſt, that God hath not only appointed a Day, wherein he will judge the World, and [b] render to every Man according to his Deeds; to them who obey not the Truth, but obey Unrighteouſneſs, Indignation and Wrath, Tribulation and Anguiſh, upon every Soul of Man that doth Evil; but, even before that terrible Time cometh, will conſign his immortal Soul, the Moment it leaves the Body, to [c] a Place of Gloomineſs and Deſpair, where there ſhines not the leaſt Glimmering of Light or Comfort, where there is no Company but the Devil and his Angels, and thoſe loſt Souls, which have been ſeduced by them; where wretched Spirits are continually vexed at the ſad Remembrance of their former Sins and Follies, feel the Wrath of God already diſcharged upon them, and tremble at the Apprehenſion of greater Wrath to come; where they preſently taſte the Cup of divine Vengeance, and are Heart-ſick to think of the Time, when they muſt drink up the full Dregs of it: When a Man is convinced of theſe Truths, I ſay, they cannot but have a good Influence on his Life, give a new Turn to his Thoughts and Affections, and ſome Check to his wildeſt Career.

IF indeed there were any Reſpite after Death; [d] if there were but ſome Hundreds of Years Intermiſſion, in a State of Sleep and Forgetfulneſs, this were ſome little preſent Comfort to the Ungodly; but when, upon their Departure hence, their State of Miſery ſhall commence; when, not only after the final Judgment, they muſt dwell with devouring Fire and everlaſting Burnings, but, in the Interval, be Company for infernal Spirits, and, with them, be equally [e] reſerved in Chains of Darkneſs, againſt the Judgment of the great Day: This Conſideration is abſolutely intolerable, and cannot fail, one would think, of affrighting all obſtinate Sinners out of their ungodly Courſes, becauſe it forewarns, and continually ſuggeſts to their Minds [f] whom they ought to fear, even him, who, after he hath killed, hath immediately Power to caſt into Hell.

ON the other Hand, when we are ſure and certain, not only of a bleſſed Reſurrection at the laſt Day, but of a Reception into a very happy State and Place in the mean Time; [g] a Place, wherever it is, of Reſt, and not a ſtupid inſenſible Reſt, but a Reſt attended with a lively Perception of a far greater Joy and Delight than this whole World can afford; a Place of the beſt Society and Company, where we ſhall be gathered to the Spirits of juſt Men made perfect, and familiarly converſe with thoſe Saints, and excellent Perſons, whom we have heard of, and admired, and whoſe Examples we have endeavoured to imitate; a Place that is the Rendezvous of the holy Angels of God, and which the Son of God himſelf viſits, and illuſtrates with the Rays of his Glory; where there will be no wicked Men to corrupt or offend us; no Devil to tempt us; no ſinful Fleſh to betray us; from whence all Sorrow, becauſe all Sin, is baniſhed, and where there is nothing but Joy, and yet more Joy ſtill to be expected: The Belief and Conſideration of this, I ſay, cannot fail of being a ſtrong Conſolation to us in the Day of Adverſity, and a powerful Inducement to all Virtue and Godlineſs of Living. [h] Were we, indeed, when we had fought the good Fight, and finiſhed our Courſe, to wait ſome Thouſands of Years, for a Recompence to be made us; were we to paſs thro' a long State of Oblivion and Inactivity, before we could reap any Advantage by all our Diligence and Labours in God's Service, this would be a Defect in our Encouragement, and a Kind of Baulk to our Expectation; but when we are aſſured, by God's holy Word, that ſuch as die in the Lord, not only reſt from their Labours, but have the Reward of their Works following them immediately; that pious Souls are no ſooner free from this mortal Body, but they find themſelves with God and their Saviour in Paradiſe; this, if any Thing, will engage us to be [i] ſtedfaſt, unmoveable, always abounding in the Work of the Lord, foraſmuch as we know that our Labour ſhall, ſo ſoon, ſo ſuddenly, not be in vain in the Lord.

SECT.

[b] Rom. ii. 6, 8. [c] Bull's Sermons, Vol. I. [d] Whiſton's Sermons. [e] 2 Pet. ii. 4. [f] Luke xii. 5. [g] Bull, ibid. [h] Whiſton, ibid. [i] 1 Cor. xv. ult.

SECT. I.

Of the RESURRECTION of the Dead.

The Doctrine of the Reſurrection ſtated by St Paul.

WHEN St Paul was brought before Feſtus, the Roman Governor, to make his Defence, for having offended the Jews, in aſſerting the Reſurrection of Jeſus, whom they had crucified as a Malefactor, he addreſſes himſelf to Agrippa, who was likewiſe a Jew, and might therefore underſtand the Nature of the Controverſy between him and his Adverſaries, better than Feſtus: [k] I think myſelf happy, King Agrippa, becauſe I ſhall anſwer for myſelf, this Day, before thee, touching all thoſe Things, whereof I am accuſed by the Jews. And now I ſtand, and am judged for the Hope of the Promiſe, made of God unto our Fathers, unto which Promiſe our twelve Tribes, inſtantly ſerving God, hope to come, i. e. "[l] I am accuſed for preach-"ing that Jeſus is riſen from the Dead, which is but a particular Inſtance of the "general Doctrine of the Reſurrection, entertained by the major Part of the Jews, "and which, even to the natural Notions of Mankind, is not ſo incongruous, as "ſome may think it: For, [m] why ſhould it be thought a Thing incredible with you, "with you, O King Agrippa, and the reſt, that I ſpeak to this Day, who are Jews, "and believe the Scriptures, and therefore cannot be averſe to this Doctrine; why "ſhould it be thought an incredible Thing, that God ſhould raiſe the Dead?" The Apoſtle, in his Manner of Speech, ſeems to imply, that ſome People in the World thought it a Thing incredible, that the Dead ſhould be raiſed again; for this is the Foundation of his Queſtion. And therefore, before we ſhall attempt to ſhew the Certainty, the Propriety, and the Manner of the Reſurrection, it may not be amiſs to enquire a little, how far the World was acquainted with this Doctrine, before the Coming of our Saviour Chriſt.

What Knowledge the Heathens had of a Reſurrection.

[*] THE great Argument, whereby the wiſeſt of the Heathen World endeavoured to make Death leſs terrible, if not deſirable to them, was their Obſervation of the unhappy Effects, which did reſult from the Union of their Soul and Body. They perceived that their Underſtandings were clouded, and their Wills, in a Manner, captivated by their fleſhly Appetites: They were ſenſible, that the Soul ſuffered by the Diſorders of the Body, and, though in its own Nature ſpiritual, was ſo nearly united to it, that it felt its Pains, and was wounded with its Strokes. They diſcovered in the Soul a Power of ſequeſtering itſelf from worldly Things, had experienced the Pleaſures of abſtract Thinking, and thence inferred a Poſſibility to exiſt, and exiſt happily, in a State of Diſunion. [n] Their Poets too had prettily deviſed an Elyſium, and the Belief of it, being a pleaſant Amuſement, had entered into their ſobereſt Contemplations; and hereupon they concluded, that a Separation from the Body would be the Soul's greateſt Happineſs, as being an Enlargement from its Priſon, and Exemption from its Sufferings: But that the Body ſhould return from the Corruption of the Grave, and be united to the Soul again, this they never could imagine, and would have dreaded it, as much as a Slave would his Return to a Dungeon, had ever ſuch a Thought taken Poſſeſſion of their Minds.

WE meet, indeed, in Heathen Writers, with frequent Mention of the Ghoſts of departed Men, appearing, as it were, in a viſible Form, retaining in the Shades below their former Shape, and [o] employed in ſuch Actions, as they were accuſtomed to in their Life-time; but theſe Notions are rather conſidered, as poetical Amuſements, than having any Foundation in Reaſon; and all that we can collect from them is,—That the Heathens did believe, that the Soul, after this Life, did immediately paſs into another State, and there inveſt itſelf with a Body, made up of light aerial Particles, quite different from what it had before; but that the groſs Matter, which they ſaw laid in the Grave, and turned to Corruption, or burnt to Aſhes, and blown away in the Air, ſhould ever be raiſed, or collected again, and revivified; of [k] Acts xxvi. 2. [l] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. III. [m] Acts xxvi. 6. [*] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. I. [n] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

[o] ——— Quæ gratia currûm
Armorumque fuit vivis, quæ cura nitentes
Paſcere equos, eadem ſequitur tellure repoſtos. VIRG. Æn. Lib. VI. ver. 53.

of this they either had no Conception at all, or [p] reckoned it among the Things, which God himſelf was not able to perform. Athens, in St Paul's Time, was one of the greateſt Seats of Learning, and its Philoſophers accounted Men of as fine Speculations, as any in the World; and yet when he came to preach there, and to declare to them the Reſurrection of Chriſt, they were amazed at this new Doctrine, not knowing what he meant by it, and took him for a Setter-up of ſtrange Gods, [q] becauſe he preached Jeſus, and the Reſurrection. [r] This Buſineſs of the Reſurrection was a Thing ſo remote to their Apprehenſions, that they underſtood the Apoſtle in a quite different Senſe, as if he had declared to them two new Deities, Jeſus and Anaſtaſis; as if he had brought a new God, and a new Goddeſs among them, Jeſus and the Reſurrection: And therefore, at another Time, when he was diſcourſing more fully of this Matter, upon barely naming the Reſurrection of the Dead, [s] they mocked him, and made a Jeſt of what he ſaid. Feſtus was certainly a Man of good Senſe: The Oration, which he made, upon opening the Aſſembly, beſpeaks his Addreſs and Eloquence both; and we may ſuppoſe that he liſtened to St Paul's Defence with ſome Patience and Attention, until he came to ſpeak of the Reſurrection; but that was a wild Notion, in his Opinion, befitting none but crazy Brains: [t] Paul, thou art beſide thyſelf: much Learning doth make thee mad. And in this the Governor was more excuſable, who, being a great Man, and employed in publick Affairs, might not have Leiſure to attend to ſuch abſtruſe Queſtions, when [u] Philoſophers themſelves, in all Ages, looked upon the Reſurrection as impoſſible, and thoſe, who, in the Primitive Times, lived among Chriſtians, called this Article of our Faith an abſurd and ridiculous Aſſertion, and made it, on all Occaſions, the ſtanding Subject of their Banter. *

[x] CHRISTIANS indeed endeavoured to explain this Article to them by fit Alluſions and Compariſons. They told them, that Sleep was an appoſite Image of Death, and our Waking, of riſing from the Dead; that the Setting of the Sun anſwers our Burial, and its Riſing again, has a juſt Correſpondence to our Reſurrection; but all this would not do. Though they perceived the Likeneſs between Death and Sleep; though they obſerved the Viciſſitudes of Day and Night, and were aware of the Analogy theſe had to Life and Death; yet they were ſo far from making this Inference, that, on the contrary, we find them complaining, that, though the Sun ſet and roſe again, though themſelves ſlept and awoke out of Sleep; yet, when the Day of Life was once ſpent, they were thenceforth to ſleep for one, long, perpetual, eternal Night. So little Light was there in the Heathen World to diſpel this Gloomineſs and Deſpair!

What the Jews.

WE cannot but allow indeed, that the Jews had a competent Knowledge given them of this Article; and the Deference we owe to our bleſſed Saviour's Authority, who, againſt the Sadducees, has eſtabliſhed the Reſurrection from the very Books of Moſes, muſt carry it againſt all Inſinuations to the contrary: But ſtill it muſt be owned, that, though this Truth was revealed to the Jews, it was wrapped up in ſuch dark Terms, that the very Revelation itſelf wanted the Vail to be removed, that was caſt over it. [y] Intimations of a future State, and of a Reſurrection from the Dead, are ſcattered up and down in ſeveral Parts of the Old Teſtament; but [p] Thus Pliny, reckoning up thoſe Things, which he thought not to be in the Power of God, mentions theſe two, mortales æternitate donare, aut revocare defunctos. Lib. II. c. vii.

[q] Acts xvii. 3. [r] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. Acts xvii. 32. [t] Ibid. xxvi. 24.

[u] Pythagoras (one of the earlieſt, whom Hiſtory reports to have been dignified with the Name of a Philoſopher) aſſerted a Tranſmigration of the ſame Soul into ſeveral Bodies, at leaſt he was thought to do ſo, which is utterly inconſiſtent with a Reſurrection; the Number of Bodies, upon theſe Terms, in ſo great a Proportion exceeding the Number of Souls. Plato indeed ſpeaks much of the Immortality of the Soul, but by his not ſo much as mentioning the riſing of his Body again, after its Diſſolution, when he treated of ſo cognate a Subject, we may rationally preſume, that he knew nothing of it. Ariſtotle held an Eternity of the World, viz. as to the Heavens, and the Earth, and the principal Parts of it: But, as to Things mutable, he placed that Eternity in the endleſs Succeſſion of Individuals, which the Immortality of Particulars would have deſtroyed; and therefore, from his Principles, he could never find out the Reſurrection of the Body, to return no more to Corruption: And as for the Stoics and Epicureans, though accounted the ſubtleſt of all the Sects of Philoſophers, we find them (Acts xvii. 32) ſcoffing at the very Mention of riſing from the Dead: and thinking it a ridiculous Notion for animated Duſt, once dead, to revive. South's Sermons, Vol. IV. Upon this Account we find Minutius Fælix bringing in one, perſonating a Pagan, and laughing at the Chriſtians, becauſe, Aniles fabulas aſtruunt & annectunt, renaſci ſe ferunt poſt mortem & cineres: Et neſcio quâ fiduciâ mendaciis ſuis invicem credunt.

* Thus Celſus tells the Chriſtians in his Time, that the Hope of the Reſurrection of the Fleſh is σκωλήκων ἡ ἐλπίς, the Hope of Worms, a filthy and abominable Thing, which God neither will, nor can do. Apud Orig. Lib. V.

[x] Smalridge's Sermons. [y] Ibid.

but then there are ſome other Paſſages of a ſuſpicious Nature, which ſeem to deſtroy what theſe Texts eſtabliſh, and require more Penetration to reconcile, than uſually falls to a common Reader's Share. Thus, when we find Job, with great Solemnity aſſerting, that [z] he knows that his Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the laſt Day upon the Earth, that he ſhall ſee God in his Fleſh, though it be deſtroyed with Worms; and that his Eyes ſhall behold him, and not another, though his Reins be conſumed within him; we cannot reaſonably doubt of his firm and ſtedfaſt Faith in a Reſurrection: But, when the ſame Job declares, that [a] his Life is ſpent without Hope; that his Eye (that very Eye, wherewith he ſaid, he ſhould ſee the Lord) ſhall no more ſee Good; and that, as a Cloud is conſumed and vaniſhed away; ſo he, that goeth down to the Grave ſhall come up no more; theſe ſeemingly deſperate Expreſſions might ſtagger a Jew's Belief, ſo far as it was built upon Job's Teſtimony concerning the Certainty of a Reſurrection.

In like Manner, when Holy David declares his Hope, and diſtinguiſhes himſelf from ſenſual Men, that live without the Thoughts of another World, by ſaying, [b] As for me, I ſhall behold thy Face in Righteouſneſs, and, when I awake, ſhall be ſatisfied with thy Likeneſs; we cannot well doubt, but that he looked upon Death as a ſhort Sleep, and that he was aſſured of awaking at the Reſurrection: But, when the ſame David puts theſe Queſtions to his Maker, [c] What Profit is there in my Blood, when I go down into the Pit? [d] Shall the Dead ariſe, and praiſe thee? Shall thy loving Kindneſs be known in the Grave, thy Wonders in the Dark, and thy Righteouſneſs in the Land of Forgetfulneſs? When the ſame David ſeems to reſolve theſe Queſtions in the Negative, by ſaying, [e] that the Dead praiſe not the Lord, nor any that go down into Silence; for Man is as [f] Wind, which paſſeth away, and cometh not again; a carnal and inconſiderate Jew might think him as much an Unbeliever of this great Article, as the very Sadducees themſelves, and pervert his Words to a State of Annihilation. We might inſtance in ſeveral other Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, which, to a ſuperficial Reader, might ſeem rather to weaken, than ſtrengthen the Credibility of a future Reſurrection: And though we have no Reaſon to think, that they any Way diſprove the Revelation of this Doctrine to the Jews, yet they certainly ſhew us, that it was not ſo plainly diſcovered to them, as it is to us; that Life and Immortality are brought, at leaſt, to a greater Light, through the Goſpel, than they ever were through the Law; and what a learned Phariſee could attain to, by the utmoſt Stretch of Thought, from his Revelation, that each vulgar Chriſtian may read, as he runs, in almoſt every Page of ours, without any Danger of Miſunderſtanding in Senſe, or any Intermixture or ambiguous Paſſages, to give a Counterpoiſe to his Atteſtation.

The Clearneſs of the Chriſtian Revelation, as to this Particular.

The Declaration which Holy Job makes, I know that my Redeemer liveth, &c. and that which we meet with in the Prophet Iſaiah, [g] thy dead Men ſhall live; together with my dead Body ſhall they ariſe; awake and ſing, ye that dwell in the Duſt; for thy Dew ſhall be as the Dew of Herbs, and the Earth ſhall caſt out the Dead; theſe, and ſome other Paſſages of the like Nature, are ſufficient Authorities, we think, from whence we may infer a Revelation of a future Reſurrection in the Old Teſtament: But then it muſt be owned, that ſeveral Interpreters have taken them in a lower Senſe, and applied them to a temporal Reſtoration only; to [h] Job's Recovery of an happy Condition after all his Afflictions; and to the Jews getting free from the Captivity, and ſundry Perſecutions of their Enemies; whereas, when we find it expreſſly recorded in the new Revelation of the Goſpel, that [i] there ſhall be a Reſurrection of the Dead, both of the Juſt and Unjuſt, and [k] that the Hour is coming, in which all that are in their Graves, ſhall hear the Voice of the Son of Man, and ſhall come forth; they that have done Good, unto the Reſurrection of Life, and they that have done Evil, unto the Reſurrection of Damnation: When we are not only aſſured of the Thing, but have the very Manner of it, as far as Alluſions and Compariſons will reach, explained and illuſtrated to us; that [l] what is ſown in Corruption, ſhall be raiſed in Incorruption, what is ſown in Diſhonour, ſhall be raiſed in Glory, &c. Nay, when we have a greater Argument ſtill, and by the Inſtance of our Lord's Reſurrection, have this Doctrine proved and exemplified to us; [m] for now that Chriſt is riſen from the Dead, and become the Firſt-Fruits of them that ſlept, [z] Job xix. 25, &c. [a] Ibid. vii. 6, 7, 9. [b] Pſal. xvii. 15. [c] Ibid. xxx. 9.

[d] Ibid. lxxxviii. 10, &c. [e] Ibid. cxv. 17. [f] Ibid. lxxviii. 39. [g] Iſa. xxvi. 19.
[h] St Jerom, Calvin, Biſhop Patrick, &c. [i] Acts xxiv. 15. [k] John v. 28, 29. [l] 1 Cor. xv. 42, 43. [m] Ibid. ver. 20.

ſlept, i. e. the Beginning and Pledge of the Reſurrection of all Believers; [n] if we believe that Jeſus died, and roſe again, even ſo them alſo, who ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him: When this Doctrine, I ſay, in all its Parts, is ſo fully, ſo clearly delivered to us in the Goſpel, there is no Poſſibility of miſunderſtanding its Meaning, or miſinterpreting its Senſe. And therefore every Chriſtian, that believes the Goſpel of Divine Revelation, muſt, in Conſequence, believe the Reſurrection, whatever Difficulty, or ſeeming Repugnancy to the Principles of Natural Philoſophy, he may conceive in the Execution of it.

An Objection againſt the Reſurrection.

"BUT how clearly ſoever the Doctrine of the Reſurrection be revealed in Scripture, yet, if it implies a plain Contradiction, if it croſſes our Conceptions, and oppoſes the firſt Principles of our Reaſoning, it is impoſſible we ſhould bring our Minds to believe it. [o] Now, what can we conceive more ſtrange and unaccountable, than when a Body, by continual Fraction and Diſſipation, is crumbled into Millions of little Atoms, ſome Portions of it rarified into Air, others ſublimated into Fire, and the reſt changed into Earth and Water, that the Elements ſhould, after all this, ſurrender back their Spoils, and the ſeveral Parts, after ſuch a Diſperſion, travel from all the Quarters of the World, to meet together in the ſame individual Body again? That God ſhould ſummon a Part out of this Fiſh, that Fowl, that Beaſt, that Tree, to unite into a new Combination, for the rebuilding of a fallen Edifice, for reſtoring an old broken demoliſhed Carcaſe to itſelf again? That the Jaws of Death ſhould relent, or the Grave, of all Things, make Reſtitution; that Filth and Rottenneſs ſhould be Preparatives to Glory, and Duſt and Aſhes the Seed-Plots of Immortality; that the Sepulchre ſhould be a Place to dreſs ourſelves in for Heaven, the Attiring-Room, for Corruption to put on Incorruption, and to fit us for the beatifick Viſion, is all a Paradox to our Reaſon, and therefore incompatible with our Faith." Now, were we diſpoſed to give a ſhort Anſwer to this Objection, we might alledge, what we hinted before, that this whole Controverſy depends upon, and ought to be determined by, the Scriptures, as turning upon theſe two Points, viz. 1. Whether a future Reſurrection be revealed in the Scriptures? And, 2. Whether the ſaid Scriptures be the Word of God? And if the Matter ſtand thus, no Man, we are ſure, can pretend to the Name of a Chriſtian, who, in the leaſt, doubts of the Affirmative in either of theſe two Points; and, conſequently, all Arguments from Reaſon or Philoſophy, formed againſt an Article thus proved, come too late to ſhake its Credibility. We cannot, however, but obſerve, that, [p] leaſt of all, ſhould the Men, we have now to deal with, find fault with our aſſerting the Poſſibility of a Reſurrection: For why the ſame Particles of Matter, in a long Tract of Time, may not meet together again, and make up the ſame Body, as well as they did, once upon a Time, to compoſe it at firſt; and why ſhould it be more incredible, that a dead Body ſhould be raiſed out of the Grave, than that a living Body ſhould originally ſpring out of the Earth, by the mere Fermentation of Matter, we cannot poſſibly conceive.

Anſwered.

1. The Certainty of the Reſurrection, proved from the Power of God.

THE Chriſtian Doctrine, however, does not aſcribe the Reſurrection to Nature, or any created Agent of a limited Knowledge, or finite Power. It tells us, indeed, that Angels are employed in this Tranſaction; that, [q] with a great Sound of a Trumpet, they are ſent out to gather together the Elect from the four Winds, from one End of Heaven to the other; but it tells us, at the ſame Time, that they only act miniſterially, and are under the Guidance and Direction of God. [r] Now, no Man can have a true Notion of God, unleſs he acknowledges him a Being of infinite Power and Wiſdom; that he made the World, and all Things therein; that he preſerves and ſuſtains all Creatures; that they are all at his Diſpoſal, to do with them what he pleaſes; and that nothing can reſiſt his Will, or give the leaſt Hinderance to any Thing he undertakes: And, under this Conception, how can the Reſurrection of the Dead be an Impoſſibility to God? To collect the diſperſed Parts of Man's Body, to diſpoſe them into their proper Order, to reduce them into a Temper fit to ſerve vital Functions, and to rejoin the Soul unto the Body thus reſtored; why ſhould it be thought an impoſſible, why ſhould it be thought a difficult Matter to him, who firſt formed and tempered Man's Body out of the Duſt, and inſpired the Soul into it? Yea, to him, who, out of mere Confuſion, digeſted the whole World into ſuch wonderful Order and Harmony? Be the conſtituent Parts of never ſo many Bodies, either either incloſed in the Deep, or fled into the Air, or changed into Earth, or any other Creature, yet what Trouble can this give him, [s] who meaſures the Waters in the Hollow of his Hand, and meteth out the Heavens with a Span, and comprehendeth the Duſt of the Earth in a Meaſure; before whom the Nations are as a Drop of a Bucket, and are counted as the ſmall Duſt of the Balance? Nay, of the two, [t] it ſeems a Matter of more eaſy Contemplation, for God to collect the ſcattered Parts of our Bodies, and remand them to their proper Places, than to form them, originally, out of the Duſt, into the regular Syſtem and Proportion, wherein we ſee them; as an Artiſt can more readily ſet together any curious Machine, when taken to Pieces, eſpecially if it be of his own Conſtructure, and the Pieces under his Cognizance, and within his Reach, than he could compoſe it at firſt. The only Difference in the Compariſon is, that God, who needs no Inſtruments or Deliberation, does all by the Act of his Will; whereas much Contrivance, and many Means are requiſite to Men, both towards their forming and repairing any curious Piece of Workmanſhip.

[n] 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. [o] South's Sermons, Vol. IV. [p] Stillingfleet's Sermons. [q] Matth. xxiv. 31. [r] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. I.

THE grateful Pſalmiſt, magnifying the great Goodneſs of God, and his watchful Providence over all his Creatures, gives us this ſignal Inſtance of it, [u] I will praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; my Subſtance was not hid from thee, when I was made in Secret, and curiouſly faſhioned in the loweſt Parts of the Earth. Thine Eyes did ſee my Subſtance, yet being imperfect, and in thy Book were all my Members written: And if, in Condeſcenſion to our Capacity, God is ſaid to keep a Book, to note down the gradual Increaſe of the Embryo in the Womb; there is, at leaſt, equal Reaſon to believe, that he keeps one, for recording the Places, where the diſſipated Parts of our deceaſed Bodies lie: But this Book, indeed, is nothing elſe, but his all-comprehending Mind, whereby every minute Atom, that belongs to us, is under the Care and Cognizance of him, who made us. * The Generation of our Fleſh is clearly ſeen by the Father of Spirits; the Augmentation of it is known to him, in whom we live, and move, and have our Being; and the Diſſolution of it is perceived by him, [x] who numbers the Hairs of our Heads, and lets not a Sparrow fall to the Ground, without his Remembrance and Obſervation. [y] He that counteth the Sands of the Sea, knoweth all the ſcattered Bodies, ſeeth all the Graves and Tombs, ſearches all the Repoſitories and Dormitories in the Earth, knoweth what Duſt belongs to each Body, and what Body to each Soul. And as he knoweth all this, ſo, by his infinite Power, he can recal every Part to its proper Place; can rally and recollect every little Atom, if Need be, and, in the twinkling of an Eye, preſent the whole Race of Mankind, vivid and entire, by the ſame Almighty Fiat, he employed in the Creation of the World, when he ſpake, and it was done, he commanded, and it ſtood faſt.

And other Arguments, taken from familiar Things.

THUS the Conſideration of God's Omnipotence ſolves all the Difficulties in this great Article of our Faith, the Reſurrection of our Bodies, after they are diſſolved into the common Maſs of Matter. But to make this Notion more eaſy and familiar, [z] look a little into the State of the World, and you will ſoon ſee ſuch an Inequality of Diſtributions in it, as will neceſſitate a Reſurrection, for the Vindication of God's Juſtice, and [a] that every one may receive the Things done in his Body, according to that he hath done, whether they be good or bad. Turn your Eyes upon your own Compoſition, and you cannot but perceive, that a Body, which periſhes ſo ſoon, ſooner than many Fowls of the Air, or Beaſts of the Field, or Plants of the Earth, can never be a proper Companion for an immortal Soul, if it makes no other Appearance, than in this ſhort Scene of Life, and finally periſhes when it dies. [b] Obſerve with what Unwillingneſs, with what Reluctancy, the Soul parts with its Companion, and is forced to be torn away, as it were, by the violent Hands of Death, and you can hardly ſuppoſe, that they were primarily intended for no longer Continuance together, without queſtioning the Creator for making all Men in vain. Take but a Walk in your Gardens, (in the Seaſon of the Spring more eſpecially) and you will meet with many Emblems of your own Reſurrection, the Plants and Flowers peeping out of their Graves, and every Thing reviving, growing, and flouriſhing, at the nearer Approach of the Sun. Aſk the Huſbandman, and he will tell you, that the Corn, which he ſows, is not quickened, except it die, and that it muſt be buried in the Ground, and there putrify, before it comes forth, in all its Glory,

[s] Iſa. xl. 12, 15. [t] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [u] Pſal. cxxxix. 14, 15, &c.
* Pearſon, on the Creed. [x] Matth. x. 29, 30. [y] Pearſon, ibid. [z] Ibid. [a] 2 Cor. v. 10. [b] Newcombe's Sermons.

Glory, [c] the Blade, and the Stalk, and the full Corn in the Ear. Aſk the Botaniſt, and he will inform you, [d] that the Aſhes in a Plant, ſown in a Garden, have ſometimes produced a fairer Plant in its Kind, than ever was raiſed in a natural Way; and aſk the Chemiſt, and he will teach you [e] the Reduction of Things, (though never ſo mixed and confounded with the Parts of other Bodies) to their prime State and Qualities; and, to your great Amazement, will ſhew you Plants, by little and little, riſing out of their Salts, in their ſeveral proper Forms, all freſh and gay, as they appear in the Fields and Gardens: And ſurely the Chemiſtry of Heaven is much more efficacious, to turn our dead Aſhes into living Bodies. " Till Natural Philoſophy " therefore be better improved, (as a [f] great and pious Improver of it expreſſes " himſelf) we can ſcarce imagine, what Methods a farther Diſcovery of the " Myſteries of Art and Nature may lead us to, in re-producing Bodies; much leſs " can our weak Knowledge determine, what phyſical Means the wiſe Author of the " Univerſe may make Uſe of to bring the Reſurrection to paſs; ſince we have but " imperfect Apprehenſions of the Powers of one, whoſe Nature is ſo incomparably " ſuperior to ours.

An Objection, from the Tranſmutation of Matter, againſt the Propriety of a Reſurrection.

" BUT how diſtant ſoever God's Nature is to ours, and how inconceivably " great ſoever his Power may be; yet this we lay down for an infallible Truth, " that he cannot do any Thing that implies a Contradiction: And therefore, though " we allow, that he may recover all the Particles of Men's Bodies, wherever diſper- " ſed, ſo long as they continue diſtinct and ſeparate; yet, when once they come to " be tranſformed into the Subſtance of other Men's Bodies, they ſeem then not to " fall within the Compaſs of his acting. [g] Now the Parts of a Body, we know, " are in a continual Flux; the Decays of Nature are repaired by the daily Subſtitu- " tion of new Matter, derived from our Nutriment; and when, at length, this " Body comes to be diſſolved by Death, it ſoon after returns to Earth. This Earth, " we know farther, is animated into Graſs; this Graſs turns into the Subſtance of " the Beaſt, which eats it; this Beaſt becomes Food for Man, and ſo by a long " Percolation is converted into his Fleſh and Subſtance: So that ſuch Matter, or " Subſtance, which was once an integral Part of this Man's Body, perhaps, twenty " Years after his Death, by this Round of perpetual Tranſmutation, comes to be an " integral Part of another Man's. Now, if there be a Reſurrection, and every Man " ſhall be reſtored with his own numerical Body, the Art will be to tell us, how " the Matter muſt be adjuſted, and to which Body this controverted Part ſhall be " reſtored at the Reſurrection? This is a Difficulty in the common Buſineſs of " Nutrition; but it ſeems to be much greater, in the Caſe of thoſe Cannibals, who " devour one another, if ſo be the Bodies of the Devourers and the Devoured are to " riſe whole and compleat at the laſt Day. The only Way therefore to ſupply this " Defect, is to ſuppoſe an Acceſſion of new Matter, ſince [h] we are able, without any " Difficulty, to conceive the ſame Perſon at the Reſurrection, though in a Body, not ex- " actly, in Make and Parts, the ſame, which he had here, the ſame Conſciouſneſs being " along with the Soul that inhabits it." This is the great Objection, which thoſe, who deny the Identity of the Reſurrection-Body, have to offer, and therefore to give a proper Solution, we ſhall, 1. Conſider what the Scripture teaches us concerning this Matter; and then, 2. In what Manner we are to ſolve theſe Difficulties.

2. The Propriety of a Reſurrection proved from Scripture.

1. ALLOWING then, that the Declaration of Holy Job relates to the Reſurrection of the Dead, his Words ſeem to be very emphatical: [i] Though after my Skin, Worms deſtroy this Body, yet in my Fleſh (in Fleſh, which ſhews the Reality, and in my Fleſh, which ſhews the Propriety and Identity of his Reſurrection) I ſhall ſee God; whom

[c] Mark iv. 28. [d] Boyle, of the Poſſibility of the Reſurrection, in his Theological Works, Vol. III.

[e] Thus Gold, when diſſolved in Aq. Regis, appears to be a Liquor, and, when precipitated, looks like a Salt, or Vitriol, and, by a certain Operation, may be made Part of the Fewel of a Flame; being joined with another Body, it may be reduced to Glaſs, and, when precipitated with Mercury, it makes a glorious tranſparent Powder: When precipitated with Spirit of Urine, or Oil of Tartar per Deliquium, it forms a fulminating Calx, which goes off eaſily, yet is ſtronger than Gunpowder; and yet, notwithſtanding all theſe Tranſmutations, it ſtill retains its Nature, ſince, by chemical Operations, it may be reduced to its Metalline Form. In like Manner, Mercury may be put into different Shapes; ſometimes it is like a Vapour, ſometimes like ſimple Water, ſometimes like a red, or white, or yellow Powder, and ſometimes like a cryſtalline Salt, or malleable Metal; yet the Artiſt will ſoon reduce it to its native Form again. Boyle, ubi ſupra.

[f] Boyle, ubi ſupra. [g] South's Sermons, Vol. IV. [h] Locke's Eſſay, Vol. I. c. xxvii.

[i] Job xix. 26, 27. Quid hâc prophetiâ manifeſtius? Nullus tam apertè, poſt Chriſtum, quam iſte ante Chriſtum, de Reſurrectione loquitur. S. Hierom. Epiſt. lxi.

whom I ſhall ſee for myſelf, and mine Eyes ſhall behold, and not another. The Change and Alteration, which our glorified Bodies ſhall receive, will be inconceivably great indeed, but St Paul has aſſured us, that their Matter and Subſtance will be the ſame: For though [k] Chriſt ſhall change our vile Bodies, that they may be faſhioned like unto his glorious Body; yet [l] THIS Corruption, (ſays he, [m] pointing at, or taking hold of, his own Fleſh) muſt put on Incorruption, and THIS Mortal muſt put on Immortality; and therefore he aſſures us, in another Place, that [n] he, who raiſed up Chriſt from the Dead, ſhall alſo quicken our mortal Bodies. When therefore the Apoſtle, in Anſwer to the common Cavil of Infidels, How are the Dead raiſed up, and with what Body, (or more properly, with what Sort of Body) do they come? endeavours to illuſtrate the Thing, by a Compariſon taken from Seed ſown in the Ground, which, as he tells us, [o] is not that Body, which ſhall be, he is certainly ſpeaking, not of the Subſtance, but of the Qualities of the Reſurrection-Body, as is manifeſt from his Application of the Simile, (wherein the Force of all ſuch-like Reaſoning lies) [p] ſo alſo is the Reſurrection of the Dead. It is ſown in Corruption, it is raiſed in Incorruption: It is ſown in Diſhonour, it is raiſed in Glory: It is ſown in Weakneſs, it is raiſed in Power: It is ſown a natural Body, it is raiſed a ſpiritual Body: For theſe are the Properties, and not the Matter, or Subſtance of a Body.

SUPPOSING however, that the Apoſtle's Meaning had not been ſo clear in this Paſſage, yet when we are told, in relation to the Place, whence the Reſurrection ſhall begin, that [q] they, who ſleep in the Duſt of the Earth, they [r] who are in the Grave, ſhall hear the Voice, and riſe; that [s] the Sea ſhall give up the Dead, which are in it, and Death and the Grave ſhall deliver up the Dead, which are in them; whereas, [t] if the ſame Bodies did not riſe, they, which are in the Duſt, ſhould not revive; if God ſhould give us any other Bodies than our own, neither the Sea, nor the Grave, would give up their Dead: When we are told, in relation to the Conſequence of the Reſurrection, that [u] we muſt all appear before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the Things done in his Body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad; whereas it ſuits not with the Nature of a juſt Retribution, that he, who ſinned, or ſerved God in one Body, ſhould be puniſhed or rewarded in another: When we are told, in relation to thoſe, that ſhall never riſe, becauſe they ſhall never die, that [*] they ſhall be caught up together with thoſe, that are dead, in the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air, and ſo ſhall ever be with the Lord; whereas, if thoſe, who are alive, ſhall be caught up in the ſame Bodies, only ſpiritualized and glorified, we cannot but imagine, (without ſuppoſing a ſtrange Diſparity among the Saints) that thoſe, who are dead, will appear in theirs likewiſe: And laſtly, when we are told, in relation to thoſe Examples, which God was pleaſed to give us, in order to confirm our Faith in the Reſurrection, that [x] the Graves were opened, and many Bodies of Saints, which ſlept, aroſe, and came out of their Graves, and appeared unto many; whereas, had they not aroſe in the ſame Bodies, which were laid in the Grave, their Appearance would have been of no Avail; their Acquaintance could not have known them; and therefore, when we are told all this, I ſay, and the Reſurrection of the ſame Body is ſet before us in ſo many different Views and Proſpects; it ſeems as if the Aim and Deſign of the Goſpel was to eſtabliſh us in this great Article.

From Antiquity.

NAY, if we purſue our Enquiry, we ſhall find, that this was the declared Doctrine of the Chriſtian Church, in the Books next ſucceeding the Canonical Scriptures; that Clemens Romanus, owned by St Paul as his Fellow-Labourer, admoniſheth the Corinthians [y], that none of them ſhould preſume to ſay, THIS Fleſh is not to be raiſed up, nor come to Judgment; that Polycarp, a Diſciple of the Apoſtles, [z] when bound to the Stake, bleſſed God, that he was among the Number of Martyrs, in order to the Reſurrection of his Soul and Body to eternal Life; that Irenæus, born about ſeven Years before St John's Death, rehearſing the Articles of Faith, adds, [a] the Coming of Chriſt, to bring all Things paſt to Account, and to raiſe up all Fleſh of Mankind; that Juſtin

[k] Phil. iii. 21. [l] 1 Cor. xv. 53.
[m] Sed & Apoſtolus cùm dicit, Oportet enim corruptible hoc induere incorruptionem, & mortale hoc induere immortalitatem, numquid non corpus ſuum, quodammodo contingentis, & digito palpantis eſt vox? Τὸ φθάρτον τοῦτο, καὶ τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο. Ruff. in Symb.
[n] Rom. viii. 11. [o] 1 Cor. xv. 37. [p] Ibid. ver. 42. [q] Dan. xii. 2.
[r] John v. 28. [s] Rev. xx. 13. [t] Pearſon, on the Creed. [u] 2 Cor. v. 10.
[*] 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. [x] Matth. xxvii. 53. [y] Epiſt. ii. [z] Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. Lib. IV. c. xv. [a] Lib. I. c. ii.

Juſtin Martyr, converted about the Year 130, tells Trypho, [b] I, and all Chriſtians, who are entirely orthodox, do believe, that there will be a Reſurrection of the Fleſh; and to name no more, that Tertullian, towards the End of the ſecond Century, wrote a [c] Book, ex Profeſſo, upon this Subject, wherein he endeavours to ſatisfy the popular Objection abovementioned. Nor can we conceive, why the coſtly Spices of the Sabeans and Arabians, as Tertullian [d] notes, were ſpent with greater Prodigality, on the Burials of Chriſtians, than the Heathens uſed in the Incenſe they burnt to their Gods; or why the Heathens, in the Perſecution under Antoninus Verus, were wont to ſcatter the Aſhes of martyr'd Saints in Rivers, to prevent (as they thought) the Reſurrection, wherewith the Chriſtians ſupported themſelves in their Sufferings, unleſs, not only a Reſurrection in general, but a Reſuſcitation of the very ſame Bodies, which were thus embalmed, or diſperſed, was the current Belief of thoſe Ages.

SINCE this then is the Doctrine of Chriſt, taught by his Apoſtles, and confirmed by their Succeſſors, whatever Difficulties may ariſe from the ordinary Courſe of Nature in Nutrition, or from the Barbarity of ſome, who are ſaid to feed on human Fleſh, they ſhould not impair our Belief of it; becauſe, in this Caſe, where the Divine Veracity is engaged, a ſerious and impartial Man will be apt to ſuppoſe, that, in the Courſe of Nature, Omnipotence may ſeveral Ways interpoſe, in order to hinder a Man's being nouriſhed by the Body of another, and ſo prevent the Confuſion here preſumed; and that this may be done more eaſily, conſidering, how ſmall a Quantity of what is eaten ordinarily enters into Concretion. For whatever paſſes into the Stomach is, in ſo great a Meaſure, thrown off again by the natural Methods of Secretion, that the moſt accurate Conjectures of the Learned from Statick Experiments * do not allow the twentieth Part to be detained, as incorporated Nouriſhment, and in human Fleſh, which is ſo very unfit for Nouriſhment, perhaps the Proportion may be leſs. From Reaſon.

BUT allowing the utmoſt, yet ſtill it may be ſuppoſed, that though the outward Make and Proportion of this natural Body ſhall be preſerved, yet its entire Subſtance will not be employed in the Formation of our ſpiritual one: For ſince, as [e] the Apoſtle intimates, it is to be raiſed in ſurpriſing Glory, for an immenſe Duration, and for the Enjoyment of a ſpiritual Life, ſo widely different from this; it were abſurd to imagine, that our preſent natural Building ſhould ſo far preſcribe a Model to it, as to have it incumbered with any Parts, that ſhall be then ſuperfluous, though at preſent the neceſſary Inſtruments of our animal Life. When therefore our Body ſhall be reſcued from the Bondage of Corruption, and, in Conſequence, from all Neceſſity of Repairs, neither hungering nor thirſting any more for ever; it is reaſonable to think, that it will not be loaded with that Bulk of Matter, (in Proportion near a ſeventh to the whole Subſtance of the Fleſh) which, in this fleeting Body, compoſes the Parts, that are neceſſary to concoct, and diſtribute the Nutriment, which ſuſtains its Fabrick, and ſupplies its Decays; and [f] whereas, in this natural Body, there is a maſſive Strength of Bones and Muſcles requiſite to anſwer the Fatigues of Labour, and all the Neceſſities of Life; when theſe Occaſions ſhall be removed, and the Body framed for the Service of the Soul, and the Exerciſe of ſpiritual Faculties only, it is reaſonable again to imagine, that a much leſs Quantity of Matter, than what goes to make up our preſent Bulk, will ſuffice.

SINCE Nature therefore has been ſo elegantly frugal in the Frame of the preſent Body, as to project ſo many uſeful Deſigns, ſuch ſurpriſing Variety, and Force of Motion, together with a graceful outward Figure, all within the Compaſs of ſo ſmall a Bulk of Matter, and yet every Way accommodated to this groſs World, and the Exigences of an animal Life; [g] ſince, I ſay, this Tenement of Clay, which is but of a very ſhort Continuance, is ſo curiouſly built: How can we imagine, but that the Reſurrection-Body, which is to laſt for ever, muſt be modelled, at leaſt with equal Art, to anſwer the Powers of that exalted Spirit the Soul, and to taſte the new Enjoyments of an Angelick Life? Though therefore the Scriptures, as we have ſhewed above, do plainly teſtify, that our ſpiritual Body ſhall be made out of the Materials of this natural one; yet, ſince they no where affirm, that all theſe Materials ſhall be uſed in its Compoſition, unleſs we can ſuppoſe this ſpiritual Body loaded with Parts, that are ſuperfluous, our firſt Poſition will ſtand firm, viz. that the [b] Euſeb. Hiſt. Lib. IV. c. xi. [c] De Reſurrectione Carnis. [d] Apol. c. xlii. * D'Oyly's Diſſertations. [e] 1 Cor. xv. 43, [f] D'Oyly, ibid. [g] Ibid.

What makes the Identity of a Body.

the Substance of the natural Body will be considerably more than sufficient for composing the spiritual one: and, consequently, all the Difficulties alledged from the presumed Deficiency of Bodies, emaciated by lingering Sickness, from the Redundances of the corpulent, and whatever may be objected of the like Nature, will, all at once, sink, and vanish into nothing. In short, [h] to denominate the same Body, it is not necessary, that it should consist of every individual Part, which has at any Time composed it, or, immediately before the Change, was incident to it; for, considering the perpetual Transmutation of Matter, no Man could then have the same numerical Body one Moment. It is sufficient to our Purpose, in asserting the Identity of the rising Body, that it should consist of some considerable Parts, at least, of the Body which died. The Scriptures, as we said, do no where demand any more: And therefore, it being left to our Liberty so to conjecture and argue upon this Article, as to recommend, if possible, the Credibility of it to common Sense; we cannot think, that those Persons have done any great Service to Religion, who, by clogging it with gross and heavy Expositions, have betrayed it to the Contempt and Insults of the Wicked and Profane. And so we proceed to consider, in the last Place, the Manner in which this Resurrection is to be effected.

3. The Manner of the Resurrection.

OUR blessed Saviour, foretelling his Disciples the Destruction which would shortly come upon Jerusalem, takes Occasion, by an easy Transition, to fall into an Account of the Day of Judgment, and to acquaint them with some Circumstances, that would be preliminary to it. [i] Then shall the Son of Man, as he comes in the Clouds of Heaven, with Power and great Glory, send his Angels with a great Sound of a Trumpet, and they shall gather together his Elect, from the four Winds, from one End of Heaven to the other: And St Paul, to comfort the Thessalonians for the Loss of such Friends, as had probably suffered for the Christian Profession, gives them this Description of the Resurrection, [k] the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven, with a Shout, with the Voice of an Arch-Angel, and with the Trumpet of God, and the Dead in Christ shall be raise first; then we, which are alive, shall be caught up together with them, in the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air. [l] It was an ancient Custom among most Nations, to gather their Assemblies together by the Sound of a Trumpet; and in Allusion to this Custom, both our Saviour, and his Apostle here tells us, that God, by the same Sound, will assemble the World of Men to Judgment, i. e. by a real audible Sound, like that of a Trumpet, though proceeding from no other Instrument, than that of the Arch-Angel's Mouth. For if God, when he descended on Mount Sinai, to pronounce the Law, was attended with [m] the Voice of a Trumpet, exceeding loud, so that all the People, which were in the Camp, trembled; there can be no Reason assigned, from the Nature of the Thing, why he should not, by such a Sound, proclaim his Coming to judge the World. But then, together with this mighty Voice or Trump of the Arch-Angel, there shall proceed from Christ a Divine Power, even [n] his Holy Spirit, by which he raised himself from the Dead, by whose omnipotent Agency all the scattered Parts of the Bodies of his Saints shall be gathered up, [h] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. This Author has another Method of solving the Difficulty, which seems to savour a little of the Notion of some Jews, who pretend, that there is a certain incorruptible Part in Man's Body, from whence the whole, at the Resurrection, is to be produced; for he supposes, that there are, in all Animals certain constituent insensible Particles, which contain, in Miniature, the several Parts of the whole Body; and that the foreign Matter, taken in by Way of Nutriment, which fills and distends the Bodies of Men, and augments their Members, is not strictly essential to it, but only convenient for the Man in his present State; so that, while these Particles of foreign Matter are in a continual Flux, the original and fundamental Principle, which properly constitutes the Body, and from which it ought to be denominated, through all the Changes of Life and Death, remains itself fixed, and unchangeable, without Confusion of Parts, or the least Danger of incorporating with other Bodies. Hence he supposes, that, besides the Parts, which are corrupted, there is this seminal Principle abiding in Mens Bodies, which, by just Degrees, is dilated, after a curious and surprising Manner, at the Resurrection, and so constitutes the compleat Body. But this Conjecture, we conceive is a little too fine spun, and perhaps destitute of any real Foundation. Another Author has taken a different Method in this Question. He supposes, that whatever Deficiencies there shall be, as to any particular Bodies, they shall be supplied by Additions out of the common Mass of Matter. "The Resurrection of the same Body, says he, does not necessarily imply, that all the same Matter shall be "raised, and no other, and no more. For if all shall be raised in the most perfect Stature and Proportion of human "Bodies, as there is no Doubt but they shall, then Infants and Dwarfs, and such as die of Consumptions, must have "new Matter added to that, which they died withal; and therefore the Resurrection of the same Body can imply no "more than this, —— That every Body shall be raised out of the same Matter, so far as it will go; and therefore, "wherever there is a Defect in any particular Body. God, no doubt, will add no Substance to it; and yet this will no "more hinder it from being the same numerical Body, than the Reparation of an House, with new Stones and Timber, "hinders it from being the same numerical House." Scott's Mediator. But this Solution seems liable to some Objections, which the Supposition of a less Quantity of Matter, requisite in our glorified, than in our natural Bodies, certainly stands clear of, and therefore we have given the Preference to it.

[i] Matth. xxiv. 30, 31. [k] 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. [l] Scott's Mediator. [m] Exod. xix. 16.
[n] Rom. viii. 11.

up, re-united, and re-organized into glorious Bodies; and thoſe happy Souls, which formerly inhablited them, and which are now come down from Heaven with their Saviour, ſhall every one re-enter its own proper Body, and animate it with immortal Vigour and Activity; while thoſe, who ſhall then be alive, and never taſte of Death, ſhall be † changed, transformed, and glorified, in the Twinkling of an Eye.

THE Apoſtle, to give us a more diſtinct Perception of that wonderful Change, which ſhall paſs upon every good Chriſtian at the Reſurrection, expreſſes it in the five oppoſite Reſpects. [o] Our Bodies, ſays he, in their preſent State, are [p] Weak, and Diſhonourable, and Animal, and Corruptible, and Mortal; Weak, by Reaſon of the jarring Principles of their Compoſition; Diſhonourable, by Reaſon of the many noiſome and humbling Effects, which thoſe Principles produce; Animal, becauſe their Life depends, as that of Beaſts does, upon the Returns of an uncertain Breath; Corruptible, becauſe every Day they tend towards Diſſolution, which, at laſt, is finiſhed in actual Death; But, on the contrary, he tells us, that thoſe Bodies, which our Reſurrection ſhall produce, are Vigorous, and Glorious, and Spiritual, and Incorruptible, and Immortal; Vigorous, without any Weakneſs or Impediment; Glorious, without any Darkneſs or Deformity; Spiritual, without any Groſſneſs or Incumberance; Incorruptible, without any Pain or Paſſibility; Immortal, without any Alteration or Decay; and well they may be ſo, when [q] Chriſt ſhall faſhion them like unto his glorious Body, according to the working, whereby he is able to ſubdue all Things unto himſelf. [r] Our Lord, to fortify his Diſciples againſt thoſe Troubles, which he had told them were likely to enſue, [s] took Peter, and James, and John, with him into the Mount, and there gave them an ocular Demonſtration of this happy Change: He transfigured himſelf before them, and aſſumed, for a while, the Luſtre of a glorified Body; under which Appearance, it is ſaid, that his Face ſhone like the Sun, and his Raiment (pierced through with the Beams, that darted from his Body) became as white as the Light; inſomuch that his Diſciples fell into an Extaſy at the beholding of their own Appearance, as being too weak at preſent, to bear the very Sight of that Glory and Majeſty, which, in due Time, they themſelves were to put on. And, if each Son of the Reſurrection is to have a Body ſublimated and refined to this Degree of Splendor and Purity, it even raviſhes the Heart to think, what a glorious Aſſembly that of the Saints muſt be, when every one [t] ſhall ſhine forth like ſo many Suns in the Kingdom of their Father.

The Difference between our preſent and future Bodies.

WHETHER, [u] when we ariſe again, we ſhall be all of the ſame Form and Stature, and in all the Bloom, Beauty, and Vigour of Youth; whether there will be then any Difference of Sexes among the Saints, and to what Ends that Difference, if admitted, will ſerve; whether we ſhall retain the ſame Senſes, and after what Manner they will be affected with their reſpective Objects; whether our Souls, in their new Conjunction, ſhall perceive Things by the Help of Fancy, and corporeal Ideas, as they do now; whether our Bodies ſhall paſs from Place to Place in a progreſſive Motion, or bound all, at once wherever the Mind directs them, in a Moment; whether our Bodies will then occupy Space, as much as they do now; and whether the Surface of the Earth will be large enough to contain all Mankind upon it, at the Day of Reſurrection: Theſe, and ſome more of the like Nature, are Queſtions of Curioſity, more than Uſe, what the Scriptures have no where determined, but what he, who is minded to entertain himſelf with ſuch Niceties, may find plentifully diſcuſſed in the Lucubrations of the School-Men. [x] And therefore to proceed, Several Queſtions concerning the Reſurrection.

* IT is very remarkable, in the Caſe of righteous Job, that, when he was ſtripped, and deſtitute of all that the World calls Comfort, God was pleaſed to reveal this Doctrine of the Reſurrection to him in ſo bright a Manner, that we cannot have the Article fuller expreſſed at this Day. That Job had ſo full a Revelation of this comfortable Truth, was a particular Mercy to him; but it is likewiſe an Inſtruction to us, that, ſince the Man of univerſal Afflictions had this Revelation given him, for a ſure Means of Conſolation, there can be no Affliction, to which the ſame Means may not be applied with all deſirable Succeſs. The Author to the Hebrews, ſpeaking of the † Hope that is ſet before every one of us, in the Proſpect of the Reſurrection, calleth it a ſtrong Conſolation, and an Anchor of the Soul, both ſure and certain: And, indeed,

The Uſes of this Doctrine.

† 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52. [o] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [p] 1 Cor. xv. [q] Phil. iii. 21. [r] Young, ibid. [s] Matth. xvii. 1, &c. [t] Ibid. xiii. 43. [u] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [x] Young, ibid. † Chap. vi. 18, 19.

indeed, what Conſolation can be ſtronger, or what State of Life can be ſo uncomfortable, as that this may not ſuffice to compoſe and ſweeten it? How ſtrong a Conſolation is it for a Man, under bodily Grief and Pains, to contemplate a State, whereunto he is paſſing, where ſhall be no more Sorrow, no more Pain, and [x] where all Tears ſhall be wiped from his Eyes: [y] How ſtrong a Conſolation is it for a Man, under bodily Blemiſhes or Defects, to conſider, that theſe Bodies are not the qualified Bodies, we are to live in for ever, but that all their Infirmities will be cured in the Grave; whereas the Corruption, wherein they are ſown, deſtroys all Diſtinction, ſo the Incorruption, wherein they ſhall be raiſed, will certainly make none? [z] How ſtrong a Conſolation is it to a Man, under the Apprehenſion or Approach of Death, to be able to look upon it, as an Enemy, that lies diſarmed, and bleeding, and gaſping at his Feet; a ſafe Retreat from Sorrow, and an happy Entrance into a Life of Joy and Happineſs, and undiſturbed Tranquillity for evermore? How ſtrong a Conſolation is it for a Man, under the Circumſtances of Deſtitution and Neglect, to be perſuaded, that there is not any Perſon in the World ſo great, ſo happy, ſo honoured, ſo beloved, but that, having a little Patience, he himſelf ſhall be more ſo? And, laſtly, how ſtrong a Conſolation is it to any of us, upon the Deceaſe of our Friends or Relations, to remember, that though, by the Laws of eternal Deſtiny, they are forced to leave us, yet, at the laſt Day, there ſhall be a general Diſcharge from Death, when thoſe that are ſo near and dear ſhall be reſtored to us again, and enter into the Joy of our Lord with us, never to be parted more. Thus comfortable Contemplations does the Doctrine of our Reſurrection yield, in all the Calamities that can befal us; only to make this Comfort certainly our own, not only the Faith, but the Practice likewiſe of the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as he declares it in his Defence before Felix, ſhould be always the Matter of our Imitation: [a] I have Hopes toward God, ſays he, that there will be a Reſurrection both of the Juſt and Unjuſt, and therefore, herein do I exerciſe myſelf, to have always a Conſcience void of Offence toward God, and toward Man; that ſo, [b] when our earthly Houſe of this Tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, we may have a Building of God, an Houſe not made with Hands, eternal in the Heavens.

[x] Rev. vii. 17. [y] Newcombe's Sermons, Vol. I. [z] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.
[a] Acts xxiv. 15, 16. [b] 2 Cor. v. 1.

CHAP. VIII.

Of a Future Judgment, and an Everlaſting State of Happineſs or Miſery.

AFTER the Reſurrection of the Dead, and when each particular Soul has taken Poſſeſſion of its reſpective Body, the Scripture acquaints us, that we muſt [a] all appear before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt; for [b] God hath appointed a Day, wherein he will judge the World in Righteouſneſs, by that Man, whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given Aſſurance unto all Men, in that he hath raiſed him from the Dead. So that, in treating on this great Article, our Purpoſe muſt be,

I. To enquire into the Certainty of a Future Judgment.

II. To conſider the Nature and Extent of it.

III. To deſcribe the Solemnity and Proceſs of it: And,

IV. To examine a little into the Time and Manner of its coming upon us.

I. WHAT

[a] 2 Cor. v. 10. [b] Acts xvii. 31.

I. WHAT the Sacred Writings, thoſe eſpecially of the New Teſtament, have diſcovered of this Matter, we ſhall have Occaſion hereafter to lay together in one View; and, in the mean Time, may obſerve, that there is ſcarce any religious Truth, excepting the Being of a God, in which Mankind have more univerſally agreed, than concerning a future Judgment. [c] If we look back into the Principles of Heathen Theology, we may find this illuſtrated, not only in the Flights of their Poets, in the Harangues of their Orators, and in the Dictates of their Philoſophers, which have been particularly collected by the Holy Fathers [d] of the Church in their Writings againſt them; but, as Tertullian [e] well obſerves, even in their common Converſation, and when Men uſually ſpeak according to their natural Impreſſions. Thus, by calling God to witneſs, and to judge of their Actions and Intentions, as well as by commending themſelves, and their Cauſe to him, when they could find no Remedy or Relief from Men, they plainly ſhewed it to be a Principle implanted in their very Nature, * "That there is a God, who ſees and obſerves what paſſes here below, "and will, one Day or other, rectify all the preſent ſeeming irregular Diſpenſations "of his Providence, in the Government of the World." From whence the Father rightly infers, "That the Soul, though ſhe is oppreſſed with the Burthen of the "Fleſh, diſabled by vicious Habits, and debauched by a falſe Religion; yet, when "ſhe recollects herſelf, when ſhe ſhakes off her Lethargy, and recovers her Intervals "of Thinking and Sobriety, ſhe then owns the Unity of the Divine Nature, appeals "to God, as her Judge, and declares her Expectation of Retribution from him:" So that we may ſafely conclude with another Father [f], that this Doctrine of a final Inqueſt to paſs upon all our Actions, "was no politick Device, contrived to keep "the ignorant Multitude in Awe; no chimerical Fancy, peculiar to their Poets, "though they were their firſt Divines; no, it was maintained by their moſt eminent "Philoſophers, by Men of the ſtricteſt and moſt inquiſitive Reaſoning;" nay, we may ſay, by Men of the looſeſt, and moſt licentious Way of Thinking too, ſince we find in Lucian, who generally paſſes for an Atheiſt, theſe remarkable Words: [g] God, ſays he, brought Man out of nothing to ſomething, and is in Heaven beholding the Juſt and Unjuſt, and writing down in Books every Man's Actions, in order to recompenſe them according to their Deeds, in that Day, which he himſelf hath appointed.

A future Judgment proved from univerſal Conſent.

AND indeed ſo clear is the Evidence of this Truth, that whereſoever we turn our Eyes, whether into the Nature and Conſtitution of the little World within, or into the Government and Adminiſtration of the greater World without us, we cannot but acknowledge the Reaſonableneſs of this Belief. [h] If we conſider the Nature of our own Souls, we readily perceive, that there is a certain Principle implanted in every one of us, which not only directs and informs us, what we ought to do, and what to avoid, but moreover checks or encourages us, according as what we have done is either Good, or Evil. Now, upon this Sentence, which our Conſciences here paſs upon all our Actions, we find either a Pleaſure, and Confidence, and Satisfaction, if we have done well; or elſe a Fear, and Terror, and Diſtruſt, if we have done ill; and this, not with Reference to any Reward, we are like to receive, or any Puniſhment, we may be in Danger of ſuffering in the preſent World; for, be the Action never ſo ſecret, yet, according as its Quality is, the Conſcience either accuſes or condemns us for it, no leſs than if it had been done in the Face of the whole World. Nay, and what is a farther Confirmation of this Matter, the nearer we approach to our latter End, the more powerful and vigorous are theſe Impreſſions of our Conſciences upon our Souls. For it is then chiefly the Sinner begins to reflect with Horror on his Life paſt, and to hate and fear the Conſequences of his Evil-doings, when he is juſt ready to die, and by Conſequence is paſſed all Apprehenſion of any farther Inqueſt in this Life: Whereas the good and virtuous Man embraces Death with ſuch Quiet and Compoſure, and oftentimes with ſuch a ſenſible Joy and Satisfaction, as if he were to receive great Good by it. Now whence ſhould theſe different Reſentments ariſe in Mens Minds? Why ſhould the Conſciouſneſs of an unreaſonable or wicked Action make a Man uneaſy,

From the Power of Conſcience.

[c] Archbiſhop Wake's Sermons. [d] This may be ſeen in the Works yet extant of Juſtin Martyr, Euſebius, Theodoret, &c. [e] Apolog. * Collier's Sermons. [f] Juſtin Martyr.

[g] His Words are theſe, Ἄνθρωπον ἐκ μὴ ὄντων Θεὸς εἰς τὸ εἶναι παρήγαγε, καὶ ἔστιν ἐν οὐρανῷ βλέπων δικαίους καὶ ἀδίκους, καὶ ἐν βίβλοις τὰς πράξεις ἀπογραφόμενος· Ἀναποδώσει δὲ πᾶσιν ἣν ἡμέραν αὐτὸς ὑπέλαβε. Philopat. [h] Archbiſhop Wake, ibid.

uneaſy, when none knows it but himſelf? Why the Reflections upon a Life ſpent in Flagitiouſneſs fill him with Horror and Amazement, when he is going out of the World? Why ſhould this happen, I ſay, if his Mind did not ſtrongly ſuggeſt, that God will bring every ſecret Thing into Judgment, and reward every Man according to his Works?

[i] THE Conſcience of the greateſt Man, when irritated by ſome heinous Guilt, is neither to be over-awed by Power, nor charmed by Pleaſure, nor diverted by Buſineſs: It breaks through the ſtrongeſt Guards; makes its Way into the cloſeſt Retirement; and ſtrikes, without Regard to Perſons, with an impartial and inexorable Juſtice. This made Tiberius pine away with Anguiſh in the Midſt of Empire, and confeſs, that he thought himſelf as miſerable, as the Gods could make him, being not able to ſhake off the diſmal Expectation of a future Account, which purſues the Wicked wherever they go, and fills their Minds with Images of Horror. The Conſcience, on the contrary, of the meaneſt of Men, when they can acquit themſelves, as to the main; when they can give a fair Account, and look back with Pleaſure on a well-ſpent Life, enables them to bear the harſheſt Circumſtances with ſingular Fortitude and Unconcernedneſs. They have a natural Preſcience, that Providence will appear for them afterward; that Folly and Violence will domineer only in this Life, but Reaſon and Honeſty be conſidered in another; and this Perſuaſion buoys up their Innocence, and ſupports their Spirits, hardens their Reſolutions, and makes them almoſt impregnable againſt all Accidents and Injuries. This made Socrates appear ſo great and graceful at his Trial: [k] The Hopes of appearing before more equal Judges, after his Death, where his Cauſe ſhould be re-heard and juſtified, made him deſpiſe the Malice of his Enemies, and drink of that mortal Draught with as little Concern, as if he had been at an Entertainment: And ſo may any one adventure to die, when the Teſtimony of his Conſcience is this, that [l] in Simplicity, and godly Sincerity, he has had his Converſation in the World.

From the Adminiſtration of Providence.

ALL Men, that admit of the Being of a God, are agreed, we preſume, in this, that, as he is the Author of all Perfections in all other Things, ſo he can have nothing defective or imperfect in himſelf; that, as the World was not at firſt made by Chance, but by a moſt wiſe, and good, and powerful Being, ſo neither is it now governed by Chance, but by the Providence of the ſame God, who firſt made it. [m] Now if God is ſo infinitely perfect in himſelf, and this World be ſubjected to the Guidance of his Providence, then we muſt of Neceſſity acknowledge a Judgment to come, becauſe it is plain, that, as human Affairs are ordered in this preſent World, they ſhew no great Sign of an exact Juſtice and Goodneſs, in the Adminiſtration of them; ſince the beſt Men are oftentimes the moſt unfortunate, and the moſt profligate, the moſt happy, in the Enjoyment of the good Things of this Life. Either therefore we muſt altogether deny that there is a God, and that the World is governed by him, or we muſt ſay, that he is not Juſt and Good, and therefore minds not what becomes of thoſe, that are ſo; or that he is Ignorant or Impotent, either not knowing how Things paſs here below, or, if he knows, not able to redreſs them; (both of which do equally deſtroy the very Notion of a God, which includes an infinite Perfection in Juſtice and Goodneſs, as well as in Power and Knowledge) or, laſtly, if there be a God, and that God does take Care of the Affairs of Men, and is Good, and Juſt, and has ſuch Knowledge and Power, as we aſcribe to him, then it muſt remain, that there ſhall be a future Judgment, in which all theſe uncertain, irregular Diſpenſations of his Providence, as they appear to us, ſhall be cleared and ſet right, and the Good and Bad receive the juſt Recompence of what their Actions in this World have deſerved.

IN this World indeed, (to enlarge a little upon the Subject) there is a great deal of Darkneſs ſitting upon the Face of God's Diſpenſations. [n] The Fate of the Righteous and Wicked is ſhuffled in common and promiſcuous Events, as if the Diſtinctions of Good and Evil were nothing but empty Names, and Terms of Philoſophy. Nay, ſometimes a Man fares the worſe for his Integrity, and thoſe, who are Righteous, make themſelves a Prey; their Virtue is diſcountenanced and oppreſſed; they are perſecuted in their Fortune, and in their Fame; are purſued with a Succeſſion of croſs Accidents, and oftentimes ſtruggle with all Difficulties and Misfortunes of Life. The Author to the Hebrews hath told us, how roughly the moſt illuſtrious illuſtrious Saints, of whom the World was not worthy, were uſed; that they were expoſed to Penury and Contempt, as well as the Violence of cruel Men; [o] that they wandered about in Sheep-ſkins, and Goat-ſkins, in Dens and Caves of the Earth; that they were deſtitute, afflicted, tormented: On the other Side, it has been both obſerved, and not a little lamented, how ſtrangely Wickedneſs and Injuſtice have proſpered; what fair Returns of Advantage have been brought in by Fraud and Circumvention; how often Rapine and Oppreſſion have made their Way to Greatneſs and Power; and (what is more ſurprizing) how they ſeem to enjoy them with as much Serenity, as they acquired them with Injuſtice. It is the Obſervation of holy Job, that the [p] Wicked live, and become Old, and are mighty in Power; that their Seed is eſtabliſhed in their Sight with them, and their Offspring before their Eyes; that their Houſes are ſafe from Fear, neither is the Rod of God upon them; for they ſpend their Days in Wealth, and in a Moment, without any remarkable Judgment, go down to the Grave: And now, if there were no State after this, the Pſalmiſt's haſty Complaint were unanſwerable, and good Men, upon many Occaſions, might apply to themſelves, without retracting it, [q] that they had cleanſed their Hearts in vain, and waſhed their Hands in Innocency. But tho' Providence, for very good Reaſons, ſuffers Virtue and Vice to be unſuitably treated here; though God may connive at the Wicked for a while, either for their Repentance, or more exemplary Puniſhment; though he may try the Faith and Conſtancy of his Servants for their greater Advantage; yet the Marks of the Divine Favour or Diſpleaſure will not be always thus myſtical and concealed. When [r] the Book of Remembrance, which the Prophet mentions, is called over, then there will be a viſible and everlaſting Diſtinction made, and the whole intelligent Creation will plainly [s] diſcern between him that ſerved God, and him that ſerved him not. For, can we imagine, that God will for ever diſcountenance his own Orders, and make his Laws a Grievance to ſuch as keep them? Will he take no Notice of thoſe, who have denied their ſtrongeſt Paſſions, and renounced their faireſt Intereſt, in Obedience to his Commands? Will the Name of Virtue and Vice be undiſtinguiſhably buried in the Grave, and carried into the Land, where all Things are forgotten? Upon this Suppoſition, it is impoſſible to account, not only for the Adminiſtration of Providence, but even for the Inſtitution of our moſt holy Religion. For when God commands us to mortify our ſenſual Appetites, to crucify the Fleſh, with its Affections and Luſts, to pluck out our Right-Eyes, to cut off our Right-Hands, and to live above the Pleaſures of the Body; when he forbids the laying up for ourſelves Treaſures on Earth, the Indulgence of Pride and Ambition, the Affectation of ſecular Honour and Power; and, on the contrary, enjoins Meekneſs, and Patience, and Poverty of Spirit, a Converſation in Heaven, and a Contempt of the Things of this Life; of what Service or Tendency theſe Precepts and Prohibitions are, we cannot ſee, unleſs to make Life more miſerable than Nature made it, if this is the only Scene we are to be concerned in, and if, when we die, all our Expectations of a Retribution to be made us, vaniſh with our Breath.

[i] Collier's Sermons. [k] Plato Apol. Socratis. [l] 2 Cor. i. 12. [m] Archbiſhop Wake's Sermons. [n] Collier, ibid.

WHETHER therefore we look into the World, or into ourſelves, into the Adminiſtration of God's Providence, or the Diſpenſation of his holy Word, we cannot but learn this Leſſon, that as ſure as the Conſent of all Nations, and the Forebodings of our own Minds, are true, as ſure as God is juſt, and his Word infallible, ſo certainly there will be a future Judgment. And of what Nature and Extent that Judgment is to be, we come now, in the next Place, to enquire.

The Nature of the future Judgment, which is univerſal.

II. THE Scripture has aſſured us, that we ſhall all, of what Degree or Denomination ſoever, appear before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt. And the only Exception to be made of it is, [t] that mere Idiots, or Naturals, (as we commonly call them) who have no Uſe of their Reaſon, or Children and Infants, who died before they came to the Exerciſe to it, ſhall not be brought before the laſt Tribunal; becauſe the Reaſon, which the Apoſtle aſſigns, for our appearing there, is, that we may all receive according to what we have done, whether it be Good or Evil. Bating the Caſe then of thoſe, that are incompetent, we are given to underſtand, [u] that all the Sons and Daughters of Adam will be ſummoned into this great Aſſize; that none will be ſo great, as to be excuſed; none ſo mean, as to be overlooked; that no Proxies or Repreſentatives will be allowed; but every one muſt appear in his own Perſon, High and Low, Rich and Poor, one with another. This is a Poſition ſo

1. As to Perſons.

[o] Heb. xi. 37. [p] Job xxi. 7, &c. [q] Pſal. lxxiii. 13. [r] Mal. iii. 16. [s] Ibid. ver. 18.
[t] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [u] Collier's Sermons.

clear, that it needs no Proof: And all we ſhall do to evince farther the univerſal Extent of the Laſt Judgment, is only to remind ſome Perſons of it, whoſe Condi-tions in this Life are very different, and, upon that Account perhaps, are but too apt to make them forget it.

The Great and Rich.

I. GREAT Riches, and great Power, we ſee, make Men reverenced and adored, like ſo many Deities, in this World: * All Men court and flatter them, and place a great Diſtinction between them, and thoſe of a meaner Rank and Fortune, which is apt to ſwell their Minds, and make them proud. They look down upon the reſt of Mankind, as very much below them, and think they merit not a little, whenever they look up to God: They ſee that human Judicatures very often have great Reſpect to Mens Perſons, and they hope that God will conſider their Quality too, and deal with them like Princes and Nobles: So that, if they believe they ſhall be judged, yet they perſuade themſelves, they ſhall not be judged like other Men; that God will wink at their Faults, have Reſpect to their Rank and Quality, and excuſe them from the ſtrict Obſervation of ſome Laws, which, they fancy, were only made for meaner Perſons. But what a vain Imagination is this, that God will have Regard to earthly Greatneſs in judging the World? Great and Small, alas, are but comparative Terms: And every Rank and Degree of Men appears conſidera-ble to thoſe below them; ſo thoſe above uſe them as Inferiors, and are not afraid to judge and correct them for their Faults. Is there not then a much greater Di-ſtance between God and the greateſt Emperor, than between the greateſt Emperor and the meaneſt Subject? [z] If God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to Hell, and delivered them into Chains of Darkneſs, to be reſerved unto Judg-ment; how can any Man think, that his Power and Greatneſs, which, be it what it will, can never be compared with the Devils, ſhould excuſe him from the Judg-ment of God?

THE mighty Men of this World, we ſee, are expoſed to all the Chances and Viciſſitudes of Fortune, as well as others: Pain and Sickneſs ſtand in no Awe of their Greatneſs, and Death is no more afraid of them, than of a Beggar. Thoſe who are Gods on Earth, muſt die like Men; and after a little funeral Pomp is over, and they are laid in their Graves, with a little more Ceremony than ordinary, their Guards, and Retinue, and Dependants forſake them, and leave them a Prey to the Worms. And is this the Creature too great to reverence and worſhip God, or too big to be judged, whom Worms ſhall feed upon, and Beggars walk over his Grave? This, in ſhort, is the weak and frail State of the greateſt Men on Earth: They go naked and unarmed into another World, ſtripped of their Power and Fortunes, of Riches and Honours, which dazzled the Eyes of Men here; and when they are gone, all Men ſpeak their Minds freely of them; judge their Lives and Actions; arraign their Memories, and revenge their Injuries upon their Graves. And when they are become little enough to be judged by Men, ſurely they are not too great to undergo the Cenſure and Caſtigation of Almighty God. The dreadful Reflec-tion is, that as the Talents committed to their Truſt were more and greater, than what were beſtowed on others, ſo their Perverſion and Abuſe of them will make their Account and Condemnation more ſevere; for a ſharp Judgment, ſays the Author of the Book of Wiſdom [a], ſhall be to them, that are in high Places: Mercy will ſoon pardon the meaneſt, but mighty Men ſhall be mightily tormented. For he, who is Lord over all, ſhall fear no Man's Perſon, neither ſhall he ſtand in Awe of any Man's Greatneſs; for he hath made the ſmall and great, and careth for all alike: But a ſore Trial ſhall come upon the Mighty.

The Poor.

UPON this Preſumption, however, let not the poor Man think, that he ſhall be exempted from a future Judgment, as if God had intruſted nothing with him. Poor Men, indeed, ſhall not be examined about their Charity, when they had nothing to give; but they ſhall be examined about their Thankfulneſs to God, and their Bene-factors. They ſhall not be obliged to give an Account in what Manner they uſed the Riches, which they had not, but they may, and muſt give Account, in what Manner they bore their Poverty; whether it taught them Humility and Modeſty; Patience in Want and Sufferings; Contentment with a little; Submiſſion to the Will of God, and a chearful Dependance on Providence for their daily Bread. In ſhort, we are all equally God's Creatures; the Rich and the Poor, the Honourable and the Vile, the Prince and the Subject are alike unto him: Juſtice requires, that he ſhould reſpect no Man's Perſon in Judgment; and, to convince the World of this, it

* Sherlock, on Judgment. [z] 2 Pet. ii. 4. [a] Wiſd. vi. 5, 6, &c.

it ſeems reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he will not only judge us all alike, but judge us all together.

All to be judged together.

THE Providence of God in this World is very liable to the Charge of Partiality; I mean, not only with Reference to Men's Fortune and Station in this Life, that ſome are Rich, and others Poor, ſome Princes and Nobles, others Slaves and Beggars; but in Reſpect to their Souls: viz. That God has not taken equal Care to inſtruct all Men in their Duty, to acquaint them with the Danger of Sin, with the Certainty of a future Judgment, and the Eternity of Rewards and Puniſhments in another Life. This indeed is a great Difficulty; but the Juſtice of the Laſt Judgment will certainly clear it up: Otherwiſe we cannot imagine, that God would ſummon all the World together before his Tribunal, if he did not intend to deal equally by all. [b] How he will bring theſe Differences to an Equality is hard for us to ſay; but to make great Abatements and Allowances for invincible Ignorance and Miſtakes, for the Faults and Miſcarriages of Education, for the Wickedneſs and Corruption of the Age, wherein Men live, and for the Want of the Means of Grace and Knowledge; to exact Improvements proportionable to our Receipts, and to thoſe greater Advantages, we enjoy, and to increaſe and leſſen Rewards and Puniſhments by theſe Meaſures, will, in all Probability, bring Men pretty near an equal Level. And this, indeed, is the Rule whereby our Judge has told us, that he will proceed: [c] That Servant, which knew his Maſter's Will, and prepared not himſelf, neither did according to his Will, ſhall be beaten with many Stripes: But he, that knew not, and committed Things worthy of Stripes, ſhall be beaten with few Stripes. For unto whomſoever much is given, of him ſhall be much required; and to whom Men have committed much, of him they will aſk the more.

NOR is it only for the Vindication of God's Juſtice and Impartiality, but for the greater Manifeſtation of the Righteous, and Confuſion of the Wicked, that all Mankind ſhall be ſummoned to appear, and be judged at once. For, ſince many good Men have been a Scorn and Deriſion to their Neighbours, have done many good Actions in private, which no Eye, but that of Heaven hath ſeen; and had their Sanctity and Godlineſs traduced, as an Affectation of Singularity, or an artful Diſguiſe to conceal ſome latent Knavery; it is highly requiſite, that God ſhould vindicate theſe Men, who ſuffer Infamy and Reproach for his Sake. And what a glorious Vindication is this, to have our Integrity proclaimed, or our private Charity, and good Offices mentioned, and our Prayers, and Tears, and penitential Mournings highly commended and rewarded, in the general Aſſembly of Men and Angels, if we can but have Patience to wait for it? And, on the other Hand, though Wickedneſs be many Times very glorious and triumphant in this World, concealed from the Eyes of Men, or gilded over with the Form and Appearance of Godlineſs; [d] yet when a Light ſhall be ſtruck into all the Works of Darkneſs, through all the Receſſes of Subtlety, through all the Diſguiſes of Hypocriſy; when the Maſk ſhall be pulled off from all diſſembled Virtues, and every Vice appear in its proper Colours; when theſe great and arrogant Men ſhall be ſtripped of their Riches, and Honours, and Power, and ſee all their Admirers and Companions trembling for fear of what is coming upon them, as well as themſelves deſpiſed and ſcorned by God and his Holy Angels; it is impoſſible, but that Confuſion muſt cover their Faces, and their being expoſed to the publick Scorn and Cenſure add a great deal of Bitterneſs to their Condemnation. Nay, (what will aggravate their Shame, as well as prove a farther Argument for their appearing before the Judgment-Seat all at once) it is not unlikely, that thoſe, who have had any Relation, Intercourſe, or Concern in this Life; thoſe, who have obliged or outraged, reformed or debauched their Neighbours, ſhall be ranged, as it were, within View, and brought to a Re-acquaintance with each other. And if ſo, where ſhall the Sinner and Ungodly appear? How will the unrighteous Judge be abaſhed, when he is confronted by ſuch, as he has unjuſtly condemned; and the Oppreſſor turn pale, when he ſees thoſe he has harraſſed out of their Right, and robbed of their Eaſe and Satisfaction? What unacceptable Company will they be, at this ſecond Meeting, who have here been Brethren in Iniquity, in Chambering and Wantonneſs, in Strife and Envy; who have combined for publick Violence, and ſacrificed whole Towns and Kingdoms to their private Revenge? [e] The Alexanders and Cæſars, and all Nimrods of the Earth, how will they curſe the Madneſs of their Ambition, when thoſe thouſands of Orphans and Widows, they have made, appear before the the Throne againſt them? How will they be aſtoniſhed, when Armies and whole Nations of murthered Men ſtand round about, and clamour for Vengeance againſt them? On the contrary, what a reviving Sight will it be, to meet with thoſe, whom we have relieved in Neceſſity, reduced from Error, recovered from Vice, reſcued from Oppreſſion, and defended from unjuſt Reproach? Such Perſons will look like Guardian-Angels about us, and fortify us againſt the Terrors of that dreadful Day.

[b] Sherlock, on Judgment. [c] Luke xii. 47. [d] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [e] Collier's Sermons.

THE Sum then of our Argument thus far purſued is this, —— [f] That all Perſons, that ever were upon the Face of the Earth, none excepted, of what Sex or Age, of what Rank or Quality, of what Country or Nation, in what Times or Places ſoever they were born and lived; the greateſt Princes and Potentates, the deepeſt Stateſmen and Politicians, the moſt learned Clerks and Diſputers of the World, as well as the moſt ignorant Peaſant, or the meaneſt Slave; in ſhort, all, without any Diſtinction or Exception, without any Privilege or Reſpect of Perſons, ſhall at once appear before the dreadful Tribunal, and give an Account of themſelves, and their Behaviour: For ſo the Scripture has repreſented the univerſal Appearance, which Perſons of all Ranks and Conditions muſt make before God, and their vain endeavouring to hide themſelves from it; [g] And the Kings of the Earth, and the great Men, and the rich Men, and the chief Captains, and the mighty Men, and every Bondman, and every Freeman, hid themſelves in the Dens, and in the Rocks of the Mountains, and ſaid to the Mountains and Rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the Face of him, that ſitteth on the Throne, and from the Wrath of the Lamb; for the great Day of his Wrath is come, and who ſhall be able to ſtand? And who indeed ſhall be able to ſtand? conſidering,

The future Judgment univerſal, as to Things.

2. THAT the Univerſality of this Judgment extends not only to all Perſons, but to all Things. For God, ſays the Preacher, [h] will bring every Work into Judgment, with every ſecret Thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil; and [i] our Lord, as the Apoſtle tells us, will bring to Light the hidden Things of Darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the Counſels of the Heart, and then ſhall every Man have Praiſe of God.

Our Thoughts and Intentions.

Now the true Reaſon why the Thoughts and Intentions of our Hearts, as well as our moſt ſecret Actions, are to undergo the Judgment of the Laſt Day is, becauſe the formal Difference of moral Good and Evil depends preciſely upon the Deſign and Intention, wherewith the Thing was done; inſomuch, that the ſame Act in Appearance, when proceeding upon different Proſpects, and ſpringing from different Principles, as to its moral Conſideration, is by no Means the ſame. Thus one Man may give Alms out of Charity, and another out of Oſtentation; one may pray from real Devotion to God, and another may do it to be ſeen of Men; one may faſt for Mortification, and another may do it to acquire the Character of an extraordinary abſtemious Perſon; both give, and faſt, and pray, but, becauſe they do it not from the ſame Motive, they do not both meet with the ſame Acceptance and Succeſs. He, who does any of theſe upon a worldly Principle, hath, as our Lord tells us, [k] his Reward already: He did it to be ſeen of Men, and ſeen he is: This is Coin, wherein he deſired to be paid, and therefore he hath no Claim to any Wages beſides. But they who do theſe Things out of a pure Conſcience, and to approve their Love and Obedience to God, have an ample Compenſation in Reſerve, and ſhall not be Loſers at laſt, tho' no preſent Profit be paid down in Hand.

WHY the Nature of Virtue, and the Award of every Man's Recompence ſhould turn upon this Point, the Reaſon is obvious, becauſe the Power of doing well or ill is not always in our Diſpoſal, but the Will to do either can never be out of it; and for this we are ſtrictly anſwerable. He, that would do ill, but wants Means and Opportunity, contracts the ſame Guilt, as if the Thing had been actually committed; becauſe his Mind approves, and conſents to the Sin: And thus the Man, that [l] looks upon a Woman to luſt after her, is ſaid to have committed Adultery with her in his Heart. He, that has a ſincere Deſire and Diſpoſition to do Good, but cannot accompliſh it, hath all the Merit which thoſe Deſires, when fully effected, could give him: And thus the poor Widow's two Mites are interpreted a Liberality, far exceeding the Gifts of thoſe rich Men, [m] who, out of their Abundance, caſt in much to the Offerings of God.

THAT

[f] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. II. [g] Rev. vi. 15, &c. [h] Eccleſ. xii. 14. [i] 1 Cor. iv. 5.
[k] Matth. vi. 1, &c. [l] Ibid. v. 28. [m] Mark xii. 44.

THAT thus it is, and that thus our Intentions ought to be meaſured, the Rules of Equity and Juſtice among Men are a plain Demonſtration. To kill a Man is the ſame Act ſimply and abſtractly conſidered, whether it be done by Chance, or in one's own Defence, or with malicious Purpoſe; but yet the Law looks and animadverts upon it differently, with Regard to the Mind and Intent, wherewith the Thing is done. In the firſt Caſe, it is reputed pitiable and innocent; in the ſecond, excuſable, ſo far as to mitigate the Puniſhment; in the laſt it is capital, and ſuch as ought to exclude from all Mercy. Now the only Reaſon, why nothing but Words and Actions are tried and puniſhed here below, is, becauſe the Thoughts and Imaginations of Mens Hearts are what we cannot come to the Knowledge of, any farther, than their Words and Actions let us into them: But, in the Proceedings of the Laſt Day, God, no Doubt, who is [n] a Diſcerner of our Thoughts, and [o] a Searcher of our Hearts, and an [p] Underſtander of our firſt Motions and Imaginations, will not only expoſe our outward Actions to publick View and Cenſure, but will weigh and examine thoſe ſecret Springs likewiſe, upon which the very Nature of every good or evil Action principally turns, and accordingly determine our Doom.

Our Words.

IT is in the ancient Prophecy of Enoch, as St Jude tells us, [q] that the Lord ſhall come, with Ten Thouſands of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convince all, that are Ungodly, not only of their ungodly Deeds, which they have ungodly committed, but likewiſe of their hard Speeches, which ungodly Sinners have ſpoken againſt him. And, indeed, conſidering that Words are the firſt and moſt natural Indications of the Temper and Diſpoſitions of the Mind; that [r] evil Communications, of all Kind, corrupt good Manners, and ſome [s] eat like a Canker, and prey upon the very Vitals of Religion; that [t] the Tongue, though a little Member, defiles the whole Body, raiſes great Confuſion and Diſturbance in Neighbourhoods, ſets, as it were, on Fire the Courſe of Nature, and is itſelf ſet on Fire of Hell: Men certainly delude themſelves, if they think, that all their lewd and filthy Talk, all their raſh Oaths and Imprecations, all their Atheiſtical Diſcourſe, and profane Jeſts upon Religion, and the holy Scriptures; all their Calumnies and Slanders of good Men, all their officious Lyes, to ſerve a preſent Turn, or malicious Reflections, to do any Enemy a Diſkindneſs, ſhall paſs for nothing at the Judgment of the great Day. No; the Judge himſelf hath told us, [u] that every idle Word (by which, if he means not every unprofitable, he certainly means every wicked Word) that Men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give an Account thereof in the Day of Judgment; for by thy Words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy Words thou ſhalt be condemned.

Our own, and other Mens Actions.

NOR ſhall our own perſonal Words and Works only be brought into Judgment, but, in many Caſes, thoſe of other People, which, ſome Way or other, either by infuſing wrong Principles, or giving evil Counſels, by ſetting bad Examples, or withholding neceſſary Inſtruction, we have occaſionally made our own. Our bleſſed Saviour, we may obſerve, is very ſharp in his Language, and denounces repeated Woes againſt the Scribes and Phariſees, who, by their pernicious Doctrines, * ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven, neither going in themſelves, nor ſuffering them that would enter, to go in; who compaſſed Sea and Land to make Proſelytes; and, when they were made, made them twofold more the Children of Hell, than themſelves: And St Peter tells us of ſome, in the earlieſt Days of Chriſtianity, who [x] brought in damnable Doctrines, even denying the Lord that bought them; and, deluding others to their pernicious Ways, occaſioned the Way of Truth to be evil ſpoken of: But their Judgment, ſaith he, now of a long Time lingereth not, and their Damnation ſlumbereth not. [y] Theſe Menaces, it is true, do chiefly concern ſuch Seducers as ſet up for gaining Proſelytes to Infidelity, yet are they applicable to the Teachers of all falſe and wicked Principles whatever: Inſomuch, that every Doctrine, which ſlackens the Obligation of God's Laws, either by repreſenting good Actions not ſo neceſſary, or bad ones not ſo ſinful, as they truly are; which weakens the Motives to Obedience, by making the Glories of Heaven not ſo great, or the Torments of Hell not ſo grievous, as the Spirit of God in the Goſpel has pronounced them; ſuch Doctrine, wherever it is received, has a fatal Efficacy towards the Corruption of Mens Manners, and therefore all, who teach it, have not only a Share, but the greateſt and moſt criminal Share in the Guilt of thoſe Things, into which they lead others by advancing ſuch Principles.

And how we become accountable for them.

[n] Heb. iv. 12. [o] Pſal. cxxxix. 1. [p] 1 Theſſ. ii. 4. [q] Jude, ver. 15. [r] 1 Cor. xv. 33. [s] 2 Tim. ii. 17. [t] James iii. 5, 6. [u] Matth. xii. 36, 37. * Ibid. xxiii. 13, 15. [x] 2 Pet. ii. 1, &c. [y] Smalridge's Sermons.

How heinous, how exorbitant, how intolerable the Guilt of drawing others into Sin by evil Counſel is in God's Sight, we may judge by the Severity of that Law, which he was pleaſed to ordain againſt thoſe, who allured their Brethren from the Service of God, to idolatrous Worſhip. [a] If thy Brother, the Son of thy Mother, or thy Son, or thy Daughter, or the Wife of thy Boſom, or thy Friend, which is thine own Soul, entice thee ſecretly, ſaying, Let us go, and ſerve other Gods; thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither ſhall thine Eye pity, neither ſhalt thou ſpare, neither ſhalt thou conceal him; but thou ſhalt ſurely kill him,——becauſe he hath ſought to thruſt thee away from the Lord thy God. It may be pretended indeed, that it is not ſo great a Crime to allure Perſons to other Sins, as it is to Idolatry; [a] yet, ſince Mens Souls may as effectually be deſtroyed by an habitual Practice of any heinous Sin, as by Idolatry itſelf; ſince all deadly Sin hath in it ſomething of the Nature of Idolatry, as it draws us from the Love of God to the Love of the Creature; thoſe, who, by evil Counſels, allure unwary Perſons to the Commiſſion of any enormous Sin, are to be looked upon as Seducers, and, at the great Day of Accounts, will have their own Condemnation aggravated, in Proportion as their wicked Inſtigations have been prevalent to induce others to the Violation of God's Commandments.

How much Men are apt to be ſwayed by the Example of others, is obvious to common Experience: We learn to live and act, as much as we do to ſpeak and write, by Imitation: And therefore if human Nature is ſo apt to imitate, and to catch the Infection, it is plain, that all, who ſet ill Examples, are, in a great Meaſure, anſwerable, not for their own perſonal Sins only, but alſo for thoſe Sins, which others, by their Encouragement, commit. [b] Take Heed, ſays the Apoſtle, leſt, by any Means, this Liberty of yours become a Stumbling-block to them that are weak; for when ye ſin ſo againſt the Brethren, and wound their weak Conſcience, ye ſin againſt Chriſt: Now, if thoſe, who do Things in themſelves indifferent, (for it is of ſuch Things that the Apoſtle ſpeaks) may be ſaid to lay a Stumbling-block in the Way of ſuch, as, through Weakneſs, may take Occaſion, from thence, to do Things forbidden; if they are accuſed of deſtroying their Brethren, for whom Chriſt died, of ſinning againſt the Brethren, of wounding their Conſciences, and of ſinning againſt Chriſt; how much more deſervedly may this Accuſation be brought againſt thoſe, who lay Stumbling-blocks in the Way of others, by doing Actions notoriouſly and confeſſedly ſinful; Actions, that will appear evil, not only to ſome, but to all, that obſerve them; Actions, that would in themſelves be damnable, though they gave no Scandal, and are worthy of an heavier Judgment, becauſe they betray others into Sin and Damnation.

THERE is one Inſtance more, wherein we may become Partakers of other Mens Sins, and, conſequently, reſponſible at the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt, and that is, by with-holding ſuch Inſtruction, as is neceſſary to the Salvation of thoſe, that depend on us, and becomes our Duty to give them: For, if any provide not for his own, and eſpecially for thoſe of his own Houſe, he, in the Judgment of St Paul, hath denied the Faith, and is worſe than an Infidel: In what State and Character muſt we look on ourſelves, if we have taken no Care to relieve the ſpiritual Wants of our Children and Domeſticks? And how muſt it cut to the Heart, and pierce to the very Soul, to have them challenge us in the great Day of the Lord, and ſay to us, one by one; "Had you been as careful to teach me the good Knowledge of the Lord, "as I was capable of learning it; had you but been as forward to inſtruct me in "any Duty, as I was ready to have hearkened to it, it had not been with me, as it "is at this Day; I had been in a State of Salvation, and not ſtood trembling here "in a fearful Expectation of my impending Doom."

THUS we ſee what the Articles are, that, on the great Day of Judgment, will be exhibited againſt us: [c] That we muſt render an Account to our great Judge, for our inward, as well as outward, for our civil, as well as religious Actions; for our Behaviour towards Men, in our Dealing and Intercourſe with them; as well as for our Demeanour towards God, in the Duties of his more immediate Service and Worſhip. The Neglects and Omiſſions of our Duty, in any Kind, will then come under Conſideration, as well as our Commiſſions of Evil; and a ſtrict Account will be exacted of all the Talents, which were intruſted with us, of all the Abilities, Opportunities, and Advantages, we ever had of doing Service to God, and Good to Men, and whether whether we have made anſwerable Improvements of them. Nay, we muſt be accountable for our Thoughts and Intentions, as well as our Words and Actions; and for Words and Actions of leſs Moment and Conſequence, as well as for thoſe of greater Concernment; for thoſe, which were done in Secret, and in the greateſt Privacy, as well as for thoſe, which were done in Publick, and in the open View of the World; for the Good or Evil, which have been done by ourſelves, and in our own Perſons, as well as what others have done by our Command or Inſtigation, the Influence of our Counſel, or the Prevalence of our Example. All theſe Things will be ſurveyed, and ſearched into, and weighed in an equal Balance, that we may receive a Reward or Puniſhment proportionable to them. This is the Enquiry that we muſt undergo, and this is the Lot of every one, that appears before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt.

[a] Deut. xiii. 6, &c. [a] Smalridge's Sermons. [b] 1 Cor. viii. 9, &c. [c] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. III.

An Objection.

"BUT if the Enquiry is to be ſo minute, and the Perſons to be examined, ſo "many; if all Men, that ever have yet, and, for the Time to come, ever ſhall live "in the World, muſt give an Account of their Actions, and their Circumſtances; "of all their Words, and their Aggravations; of all their Thoughts, and their Ten-"dencies; all they did, or did not, as they had an Opportunity; it is hard to con-"ceive how this can be effected, and eſpecially in the Compaſs of one Day, as the "Scriptures ſeem to intimate." But how this may be done, we may, in ſome Meaſure, learn from the Operations of our Minds. [a] When we ſpeak, or think, or act any Thing, how come we to a Remembrance of it, after the Thing is done and paſt? Why is it not thus? Do not we, by ſeeking, find Images of the Things, we have ſpoken, done, or thought of, many Years before? Nay, do not theſe Images frequently preſent themſelves without our ſeeking, and make us perceive them, whether we will or no? Now this is a plain Argument, that theſe Images have a real Being, and Subſiſtence within us, that they are independent on our Will; for we cannot eraſe them as we pleaſe, we cannot do it, would we never ſo fain. Whatever therefore we ſpeak, or do, or purpoſe, or deſign, as far as theſe Acts are of a moral Concern, and bear Relation to Virtue or Vice, we may be ſatisfied, that they leave the Notices of themſelves upon our Conſciences, imprinted in Characters fair and intelligible, nay, I may add, indelible too. For though we forget many Things, which we have been conſcious of, yet, in that Caſe, the Prints and Notices of ſuch Things are not eraſed, but only covered over. Properly ſpeaking indeed, there is no Forgetfulneſs in a Spirit; its Forgetfulneſs is only accidental, and occaſioned by the Impediments of the Fleſh: And therefore we may reaſonably believe, that our Souls, whether in the State of Separation from the Body, or of Re-union to the Body, when defecated, and made free from Obſtructions, as our Bodies at the Reſurrection ſhall be; we may reaſonably believe, I ſay, that our Souls ſhall then have a clear View, and perfect Remembrance of all that we have done, though now moſt of their Impreſſions lie in us, like the Inſcriptions of a Marble, covered over with Duſt and Rubbiſh.

Anſwered.

And how this may be done in one Day.

Now, if Conſcience be thus like a written Book, and faithful Regiſter of our Behaviour; as there is no Room to doubt but that God can read this Book, as well as we, and read it through all the Impediments, that ſhade it, which we cannot; ſo he can, when he pleaſes, make it legible to all others, as well as to ourſelves: For he can ſo far elevate the Underſtanding, and open the Eyes of all Men to ſuch a ſpiritual Intuition, as that all ſhall be able, at a ſhort Glance, to read each other's Hiſtory, imprinted in their Conſciences in intelligible Signatures, as familiarly, as if they were graven on their Foreheads, or printed in a Book. And thus we may probably conceive, that thoſe Books, (mentioned by the Prophet Daniel, and by St John in his Revelation) that are to be opened in order to the univerſal Judgment, are no other, than that Volume of Things, recorded in every Man's Conſcience, which, being opened and expoſed to View, will make a Kind of Tally or Counterpart to that Memorial, which God himſelf keeps of all we do. By this Means the Proceſs of the great Day will apparently be cut ſhort: But we need not take the Word Day in ſo ſtrict a Senſe as to reſtrain it to the narrow Compaſs of an artificial or natural Day, of twelve, or four and twenty Hours: It very often ſignifies [c] a longer Period of Time, as the whole Time of the Iſraelites Pilgrimage is called the Day of their Temptation in the Wilderneſs;

What is meant by a Day, and how long the Time of Judgment may laſt.

[a] Young's Sermons, Vol. I.

[c] If we conſult Mr Mede, in the third Book of his Commentary on the Revelations, we ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied, that in the New Teſtament likewiſe, the Word Day ſignifies a long Time, as in Matth. vi. 11. compared with Wilderneſs; and therefore we may very ſafely ſuppoſe, that the Time of Chriſt's holding the grand Aſſize, and executing all judicial Proceedings, will be of a greater Extent and Duration than one Day.

IF we ſpeak indeed of what he can do, as God, there is no Queſtion, but as he could have made the World, ſo he can judge it in an Inſtant; but it ought to be remembered, that, as he was pleaſed to take up ſix Days in creating it, ſo he will very probably be many Days in judging the Inhabitants of it. Conſidering indeed, that the whole Proceſs of this Day is to be ſolemn and auguſt, which it cannot be, unleſs it be of ſome Continuance, and that, beſides the Trial of all Mankind, ſeveral other Matters are to be adjuſted; that all the myſterious Trains of Providence muſt be unfolded; all neceſſary Difficulties cleared; the ſtrange Problem, concerning the Sufferings of the Righteous, and the Proſperity of the Wicked, explained, and no Objection or Scruples left unſatisfied; that the Decrees and Purpoſes of God, which are not nicely to be ſearched into, and cannot be comprehended now, ſhall then be marvellouſly laid open; and thoſe peculiar Doctrines of the Goſpel, which at preſent are doubted of, and by ſome ridiculed, ſhall then be demonſtrated agreeable to Reaſon; that many Intrigues, and entangled Scenes of Things, which puzzled the ſobereſt and moſt conſiderate, are then to be diſcuſſed, and fairly laid open to the full Information of the moſt inquiſitive Minds: Conſidering, I ſay, that Almighty God is concerned to clear his Juſtice and Wiſdom, and to make his Majeſty and Power known, as well in the cloſing up of the World, as in the creating and preſerving it, to convince all Sinners, before he dooms them, and to ſilence all their Objections, before he paſſes a final Sentence upon them; we can hardly forbear concluding, that the Tranſaction of the general Judgment will be a Work of conſiderable Time, although, in the Stile of the Scripture, it is called no more than a Day. And ſo we proceed in the next Place,

The Solemnity and Proceſs of the Day of Judgment.

III. To deſcribe the Solemnity and Proceſs of it: And in this the Holy Scriptures have been very particular. They tell us, that, before the Approach of this terrible Day, on the Earth * there ſhall be Diſtreſs of Nations, with Perplexity, the Sea and the Waves roaring, and Mens Hearts failing them for Fear, and for looking after thoſe Things, which are coming; and that, in the Heavens, there ſhall be Signs in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars; [f] the Sun ſhall be darkened, the Moon ſhall not give her Light, the Stars ſhall fall from Heaven, and all the Powers of Heaven ſhall be ſhaken: That then ſhall [g] the Son of Man appear in a Cloud, with Power and great Glory, coming [h] in his own Glory, and in his Father's, and in his Holy Angels, whereof [i] Thouſands of Thouſands ſhall miniſter unto him, and Ten thouſand Times ten Thouſand ſtand before him; and coming [k] in flaming Fire, to take Vengeance on them who know not God, and obey not the Goſpel: That, to this Purpoſe, [l] he ſhall ſend his Angels, with a great Sound of a Trumpet, which ſhall reach from one End of Heaven to the other, and they ſhall gather together the People of all Nations, from the four Winds; for [m] the Sea ſhall give up her Dead, and Death and Hell ſhall deliver up their Dead, which was in them: That, this being done, and he taking his Seat upon [n] a great white Throne, even the Cloud, whereon he came from Heaven, all the Dead, both ſmall and great, ſhall ſtand before him: That, as they appear, the Angels ſhall [o] ſeparate them from one another, even as a Shepherd divideth his Sheep from the Goats, the Sheep on the Right-Hand, and the Goats on the Left, whereupon the [p] Books ſhall be opened, and the Dead judged out of thoſe Things, which are written in the Books; every Man according to his Works: That the Righteous ſhall come upon their Trial firſt, and, no ſooner ſhall they be acquitted, but their Judge ſhall ſay unto them; [q] Come unto me, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the Beginning of the World; whereupon they ſhall immediately be [r] caught up into the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air, and ſo ſhall be ever with the Lord: That the Wicked, in the mean Time, ſhall ſtand trembling and quaking in Horror and Amazement at their impending Doom, their Thoughts accuſing them, and with Luke xi. 3. and alſo in John xvi. 26. Nay, we read in 2 Pet. iii. and the laſt Verſe, the Day of Eternity, as we find it rendered in the Margin of our Bibles, according to the Original ἡμέρα αἰῶνος. But, notwithſtanding this, we can hardly be of his Opinion, when he extends the Day of Judgment to a Thouſand Years, and makes it the whole Time of the Millennary Reign. Lib. IV. p. 841.

* Luke xxi. 25, 26. [f] Matth. xxiv. 29. [g] Luke xxi. 17. [h] Ibid. ix. 26.
[i] Dan. vii. 10. [k] 2 Theſſ. i. 8. [l] Matth. xxiv. 31. [m] Rev. xx. 13.
[n] Ibid. xx. 11, 12. [o] Matth. xxv. 32, 33. [p] Rev. xx. 12. [q] Matth. xxv. 34.
[r] 1 Theſſ. iv. 17.

and * their Hearts failing them for Fear, and for looking after thoſe Things, which are ready to come upon them; and that, no ſooner ſhall they be arraigned, convicted, and condemned, but their Judge ſhall pronounce their Sentence, [s] Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels; whereupon the whole Atmoſphere ſhall be in a Blaze about their Ears, [t] the Heavens ſhall paſs away with a great Noiſe, and the Elements ſhall melt with fervent Heat, the Earth alſo, and the Works which are therein, ſhall be burnt up; for the Heavens and the Earth, which are now, as the Apoſtle tells us, are kept in Store, reſerved unto Fire againſt the Day of Judgment, and Perdition of ungodly Men.

AND now the Almighty Judge, having ſeen his dread Sentence put in Execution, will ariſe from his Throne, and thence return to the Seat of the Bleſſed, in a ſolemn and glorious Triumph, with all his Myriads of Angels and Saints, who, as they follow him through the Air, with loud Hoſanna's, and triumphant Acclamations, will celebrate the Praiſes of their Redeemer; while thoſe other Myriads, that are about the Throne of the Majeſty on High, with Songs and Magnificats ſhall congratulate their Arrival; for ſo we read, [u] and I heard, as it were, the Voice of a great Multitude, and as the Voice of many Waters, and as the Voice of mighty Thunderings, ſaying, Hallelujah; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give Honour to him; for the Marriage of the Lamb is come, and his Wife hath made herſelf ready: Bleſſed are they, which are called unto the Marriage-Supper of the Lamb!

THIS is the Proſpect, which the Scriptures give us of the Order and Solemnity of the Laſt Judgment, very glorious and very terrible: But before we come to deſcribe the different Reſentments of Men at this Time, according to their different Expectations, it may not be amiſs to take Notice of one or two heightening Circumſtances of it.

Some particular Circumſtances of it, as, 1. The Coming of the Judge.

1. † WHEN our bleſſed Saviour came to ſuffer for the Sins of the World, he took upon him the Form of a Servant, and ſtooped to the loweſt Humiliation; being content to bear all the Hardſhips of Poverty, the Scorns of Contempt, the Inſolence and Outrage of Power, and Malice, and Cruelty: But, at the End of the World, when he appears to execute Judgment upon the Ungodly, and to revenge all the Injuries done to him, and his Servants, he will then aſſume his own proper Greatneſs, and make his Appearance ſuitable to the Dignity of his Office. In that Day there ſhall go before him [x] Fire, and Vapours, and Pillars of Smoke, Thunderings and Lightnings, Gloomineſs and thick Darkneſs, Prodigies and fearful Sights; the Light of the Sun ſhall be put out, the Moon turned into Blood, the Stars ſtart from their Orbs, and the Heavens be ſhrivelled up like a flaming Scrowl, while the Earth ſhall tremble and quake, and the very Foundations alſo of the Hills ſhake, and be removed, becauſe he was wroth. In that Day his ſovereign Perfections ſhall ſhine out, and his Omnipotence become viſible in opening the Graves, in aſſembling all Nations and Ages of Men, and compelling the moſt mighty, and the moſt unwilling, to obey the unwelcome Summons. In that Day he will come in his own Glory, viz. in a Body of a pure and immaculate Splendor, with his Hair ſhining like Threads of Light, his Eyes ſparkling with Beams of Majeſty, his Face diſplaying a moſt beautiful Luſtre, and his whole Subſtance ſhedding forth, from every Part, a dazzling Glory round about him; for ſuch is the Deſcription we have of him in Scripture: [z] In the Midſt of the ſeven Candleſticks was one like the Son of Man, his Head and his Hair were white like Wool, as white as Snow, his Eyes were as a Flame of Fire, and his Countenance was like the Sun ſhining in its Strength. In that Day he will come in his Father's Glory: For, though he will ſtill continue the ſame, that he was on Earth, yet his Divine Eſſence will be ſo viſibly prevalent and conſpicuous, that his human Nature will ſeem, as it were, abſorped in the Radiancy of the Godhead, and the Majeſty of his Preſence become ſo inſupportably great, that (as St John's Viſion repreſents it) Nature will ſink under it; [a] from his Face the Earth and the Heavens ſhall flee away, and there ſhall be no more Place found for them. In that Day he will come in the Glory of his Holy Angels: [b] Thoſe pure and exalted Spirits, ranged in their hierarchal Order, ſhall be cloathed in their Robes of State, and diſplay the Luſtre and Excellencies of their Nature, to augment the Splendor of his Appearance. And now, when all theſe bright and glorious, theſe great and terrible

* Luke xxi. 26.
† Collier's Sermons.
[s] Rev. i. 13, 14.
[t] Matth. xxv. 41.
[u] 2 Pet. iii. 10, 17.
[x] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.
[z] Ibid. xx. 11.
[a] Rev. xix. 6, &c.
[b] Collier, ibid.
[y] Pſal. xviii. 7.

terrible Things ſhall meet at once, who may abide the Day of his Coming, or ſtand at his Appearing? If one of theſe celeſtial Meſſengers is ſo ſurprizing to us now, what a terrible Spectacle muſt it be, when the Curtain between both Worlds is drawn, as it were, and all the Inhabitants of Heaven, and poſſibly of Hell too, preſent themſelves before us? If Daniel, one ſo remarkable for his Courage, for his Innocence and Virtue, could not ſuſtain the Preſence of one ſingle Angel, but was perfectly ſtupified and overwhelmed with the illuſtrious Viſion, how ſhall we bear the united Glories of them all? How ſhall we ſupport the Converſe of the Deity itſelf? Of Neceſſity, God muſt work a Change in his Creatures to enable them to ſtand before him? their Senſes muſt be fortified and refined; their Bodies muſt be hardened into a firm and immortal Texture, otherwiſe his very Preſence will deſtroy them, and not leave them Life enough to receive their Sentence, or feel their Puniſhment. But,

The Raiſing of the Dead.

2. As ſoon as the great Judge of all the World ſhall, in this pompous Array, deſcend from Heaven, and place his Throne in the Air, at a convenient Diſtance from the Earth; the Dead, we are told, ſhall be raiſed, be ſummoned to appear, tried, and acquitted, or condemned. But, when their Reſurrection comes, [c] with what Horror and Reluctancy will bad Souls enter into their Bodies again, not to enjoy their old Senſualities, but to be judged for them; when the very Sight of their Bodies will call to Mind all the Villainies they acted in them; when they muſt appear before their Judge with thoſe very Bodies, [d] whoſe Members they made Servants to Uncleanneſs, and to Iniquity unto Iniquity; with Eyes full of Adultery; with Hands ſtained with Blood, with Bribes, with Rapine; with a blaſpheming, a lying, a reviling, a perjured Tongue? To unite a Soul to ſuch a Body again, is like tying a Man to his murthered Friend, which will both ſcare his Conſcience, and poiſon him with a noiſome Stench. On the contrary, holy Souls will give a better Welcome to their Bodies; Bodies, which were preſerved pure and clean from all ſenſual Luſts; which were the ready Inſtruments of Righteouſneſs and Virtue; which were offered up living, holy, and acceptable Sacrifices to God; which ſuffered Loſs, and Want, and Torment, and Death, for the Sake of Chriſt. In ſuch Bodies as theſe, good Men would deſire to be judged, ſeeing they are viſible Teſtimonies of their Faith, and Patience, and Self-denial; Members of Chriſt, and the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt.

When the Wicked, all in one Body, come to make their Appearance, what a tragical Spectacle will it be! [e] An innumerable Company of ſelf-condemned Wretches, aſſembled together before the Tribunal of an almighty and implacable Judge, quaking and trembling under the dire Expectations of a fearful and irrevocable Doom, with weeping Eyes, pale Looks, and ghaſtly Countenance, abiding the miſerable Fate that attends them, and [f] crying out to the Rocks and Mountains, to fall upon them, and to hide them from the Face of him that ſits upon the Throne, and from the Wrath of the Lamb. But, on the other Hand, what a lovely Sight! when the glorious Company of the Apoſtles, the goodly Fellowſhip of the Prophets, the noble Army of Martyrs, the Holy Church throughout all the World ſhall meet, and preſent themſelves before their bleſſed Redeemer; who, looking down from his exalted Throne, ſhall, at one View, ſee all the Congregation of his Saints before him, and, with infinite Complacency, ſurvey the Fruit of the Travel of his Soul, and the mighty Purchaſe of his moſt precious Blood.

When they ſhall be brought upon their Trial, what inexpreſſible Horror and Confuſion muſt ſeize on thoſe wretched Souls, which ſtand convicted by their own Conſciences; when they ſhall find all their ſecret Machinations, dark Cheats, lewd Imaginations, and hypocritical Pretences, detected and expoſed; when they ſhall ſee themſelves publickly unmaſked, and forced to ſtand forth, like ſo many loathſome Spectacles, before God and his Angels, without any Excuſe or Retreat for their Shame, without any Vail to hide their Infamy and Bluſhes! But, on the contrary, how muſt the Righteous lift up their Heads with Joy, when not only their Innocence ſhall be vindicated, and that Infamy and Scandal, wherewith their Enemies beſpattered them, publickly wiped off; but all thoſe brave and unaffected Acts of ſecret Piety and Charity, to which none but God and themſelves were conſcious, ſhall be brought into open Light, and, to their everlaſting Renown, proclaimed through all the vaſt Aſſembly of Spirits!

Lastly,

[c] Sherlock, on Judgment. [d] Rom. vi. 19. [e] Scott's Mediator. [f] Rev. vi. 16.

LASTLY, when Sentence ſhall be paſſed upon them, [g] what horrible Outcries and Lamentations will be heard among thoſe that are condemned! For, if a Take him, Jaylor, from any earthly Judge, be able to extort ſo many Sighs and Tears from a Criminal here, what will a Go ye Curſed do, from the Mouth of the righteous Judge of all the World? As, on the contrary, no ſooner ſhall the Sentence of the Righteous be pronounced, but immediately will reſound joyful Acclamations through Heaven and Earth, [h] Hallelujah, Salvation, and Glory, and Power be to the Lord our God; for true and righteous are his Judgments. [i] Salvation to our Lord, that ſitteth on the Throne, and to the Lamb; [k] for wonderful are thy Works, O Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy Ways, O thou King of Saints!

3. As ſoon as theſe Sentences are paſſed, there is this one Circumſtance more, to heighten the Terror of that Day, and that is, the diſmal Change and Conflagration, which will happen to the World. That the World ſhall at laſt be deſtroyed by Fire, has been a Tradition of very ancient Date, and what, probably, came from Noah [l] at firſt, and ſo deſcended to his Poſterity; becauſe we meet with no Nation, [m] whether Civil or Barbarous, but what univerſally believed it. And therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find the Holy Scriptures ſo clear and expreſs in ſuch Aſſertions as theſe; [n] That Chriſt will deſcend from Heaven, in a flaming Fire, to take Vengeance on thoſe, that know not God; that [o] his Throne ſhall be like the fiery Flame, his Wheels as burning Fire, and a fiery Stream ſhall iſſue and come forth before him; and that then [p] the Heavens, being on Fire, ſhall be diſſolved, the Elements ſhall melt with fervent Heat, and the Earth alſo, and the Works that are therein, ſhall be diſſolved. But then by what natural Cauſes this great Cataſtrophe is to be wrought, whether by a nearer Approach of the Sun to the Earth, or by an Eruption of the central Fire, or by a certain Preparation of the combuſtible Stores, which the Earth and the Air contain; as well as [q] how far this Conflagration will extend, whether to the Ætherial Heavens, and all the Hoſt of them, or to the Aerial only, is not ſo material to be conteſted here; ſince it is agreed, on all Hands, that the Conflagration will not be effected, without the particular Order and Appointment of God. The Conflagration of the World.

OF what Uſe the Burnings and Vulcanos, which are upon the Face of the Earth, the Minerals, and mineral Juices and Concretions, capable of Inflammation, within the Bowels of it, as well as the Meteors and Exhalations, which are ingendered and formed in the Air, will be to ſet the World on Fire, [r] a learned and ingenious Enquirer has abundantly evinced, concluding his Enquiry with this Obſervation, "That "in general, there is a great Analogy between two Deluges, that which has been of "Water, [g] Scott's Mediator. [h] Rev. xix. 1. [i] Ibid. vii. 10. [k] Ibid. xv. 3.

[l] In the firſt Ages of the World, after the Flood, when Noah and his Children peopled the Earth again, as he gave Precepts of Morality and Piety for the Conduct of their Manners, which are uſually called, Præcepta Noachidarum, frequently mentioned by the Jews and Chriſtians, ſo alſo he delivered to them certain Maxims and Concluſions about Providence, the State of Nature, and the Fate of the World; and theſe, in Proportion, may be called, Dogmata Noachidarum, the Doctrines of Noah, and his Children, which made a Syſtem of Philoſophy, or ſecret Knowledge among them, delivered by Tradition from Father to Son, but eſpecially preſerved among their Prieſts, or ſacred Perſons, or ſuch others as were addicted to Contemplation. Burnet's Theory, Vol. II.

[m] That the Romans, who had their Learning from the Grecians, were of this Opinion, is plain from thoſe well-known Verſes of Ovid:

Eſſe quoque in fatis reminiſcitur, affore tempus,
Quo mare, quo Tellus, correptaque regia cœli
Ardeat, & mundi moles operoſa laboret. Metam.

Among the Egyptians, (as Plato in his Timæus tells) it was the Doctrine of their Prieſts, that the fatal Cataſtrophes of the World were by Fire and Water. The Perſians made their beloved God, Fire, at length, to conſume all Things that are capable of being conſumed: And the Chaldeans (as we have it from Beroſus, in Seneca's Nat. Quæſt.) not only taught the Conflagration, but alſo fixed it to a certain Period of Time, when there ſhould happen a great Conjunction of the Planets in Cancer, &c. Burnet, ibid. All Sects of Philoſophers, indeed, but the Ariſtotelians, who held the Heavens to be incorruptible, embraced the Notion of the World's Conflagration; but then their Opinion of it differed very much from that of Chriſtians. The Stoicks and Epicureans held it to be, not a Conſumption, but a Purgation and Reſtoration of the World: The Platoniſts held, that there ſhould be a ſucceſſive Renovation of all Things, after certain Intervals and Revolutions; this was called, by them, περιοδικὴ παλιγγενεσία, a Periodical Regeneration; for they held, that, after a certain Return of Years, all Things ſhould periſh by Fire, and then there ſhould ſucceed a Reſtitution or Reſtoration of them, and that innumerable ſuch Renovations and Succeſſions ſhould happen to the Univerſe. So that theſe Gentiles were not of the ſame Opinion with Chriſtians, who acknowledge only one ſingle Conflagration; and yet we may obſerve, that both our Saviour and his Apoſtle St Peter have made Uſe of the very ſame Terms, which the Philoſophers did, whereby to expreſs this univerſal Burning. Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

[n] 2 Theſſ. i. 8. [o] Dan. vii. 9, 10. [p] 2 Pet. iii. 10, 12. [q] Ray's Phyſico-Theological Diſcourſes.

[r] Burnet, ibid. c. vii. The Things above-named may, indeed, contribute ſomewhat towards a general Conflagration, but the firſt and principal Cauſe, if I miſtake not, is, that the heavenly Bodies ſhall be put into unſpeakable Diſorder; for, as our Saviour himſelf tells us, the Stars ſhall fall from Heaven, and the Powers of Heaven ſhall be ſhaken; upon which preternatural Concuſſion, there will be a ſtrange Confuſion among the ſtarry Bodies, which, like Fire out of its Place, will do infinite Miſchief; firſt ſet the upper Regions on Fire, and afterwards thoſe below. Edwards, ibid.

" Water, and that which will be of Fire; that, as at the former, the Windows of " Heaven were opened above, and the Abyſs was opened below, and the Waters of " theſe two joined together to overflow the World; ſo, at the Conflagration, God " will rain down Fire from Heaven, as he did once upon Sodom, and, at the ſame " Time, the ſubterraneous Store-Houſes of Fire will be broken open, which an- " ſwers to the Diſruption of the Abyſs; and theſe two, meeting and mingling to- " gether, will involve the Earth, and the elemental Heavens in Flames."

A Deſcription of it.

IMAGINE all Nature then ſtanding in Expectation to receive its Doom, the deſtroying Angels having their Inſtructions, and every Thing ready for the fatal Hour; upon our Lord's giving the Signal, all the ſublunary World breaking into Flames, the Treaſures of Fire opening in Heaven, and the Stores of Vengeance, which are lodged in the Heart of the Earth, (thoſe Springs of Fire, which have fed Ætna and Veſuvius for ſo many Ages) exhauſting their Strength at once, and rending whole Countries into Pieces at their Eruption; every Element, and every Region, as far as the Bounds of the Fire extend, in a Tumult and a Fury; the whole habitable World diſſolving into its firſt Chaos, and rolling in tempeſtuous Confuſion; and whereunto can we liken the Dreadfulneſs of this Scene, or with what Compariſon can we compare it? The moſt aſtoniſhing Thing in this World ſeems to be the battering and ſtorming of a Town, where there is nothing to be heard but the Roaring of Cannons, and the Shrieks of the Vanquiſhed; where the Streets are cracking in Flames, and ſtrewed with Carcaſſes of the Slain; where all Places are filled with Smoke and Blood, with Deſpair and Deſolation. But, alas! this is but a faint Image, a very imperfect Reſemblance of that Devaſtation, Miſery, and Terror, which will accompany the final Period, when the laſt and fatal Aſſault ſhall be made upon the Globe at once; when the whole Frame of Things ſhall be torn and diſjointed with Tempeſts, and Thunder, and Earthquakes; when Iſlands and Continents ſhall be daſhed againſt each other, and Sea and Land thrown out of all Diſtinction, and ſhuffled into a wild Maſs of Diſorder.

How vain (may we ſay upon this Occaſion) and tranſient is the Glory of all this habitable World, when, by the Force of one Element breaking looſe upon the reſt, all, that we admired and adored before, as great and magnificent, is obliterated and vaniſhed! [s] " Where are now the great Empires of the World, and their great " Imperial Cities? Their Pillars, Trophies, and Monuments of Glory? Shew me " where they ſtood: Read the Inſcription: Tell me the Victor's Name. What " Remains, what Impreſſions, what Difference and Diſtinction do you ſee in this " Maſs of Fire? But it is not Cities only, and the Works of Mens Hands, but the " everlaſting Hills, the Mountains and Rocks of the Earth are melted, as Wax be- " fore the Sun, and their Place is no where found. Here ſtood the Alps, a prodi- " gious Range of Stone, the Load of the Earth, that covered many Countries, and " reached their Arms from the Ocean to the Black Sea; this huge Maſs of Stone " is ſoftened and diſſolved, as a tender Cloud into Rain. Here ſtood the African " Mountains, and Atlas with its Top above the Clouds: There was the frozen " Caucaſus, and Taurus, and Imaus, and the Mountains of Aſia; and yonder, to- " wards the North, ſtood the Riphæan Hills, cloathed in Ice and Snow. All theſe " are vaniſhed and dropped away, as the Snow upon their Heads, and ſwallowed " up in a Red-Sea of Fire. [t] Great and marvellous are thy Works, Lord God Al- " mighty, juſt and true are thy Ways, thou King of Saints."

Mens different Sentiments upon the Coming of the Day of Judgment.

AND if the Day of Judgment, and the Things to be done thereon, are ſo terrible in Contemplation, think, O think, what a Tumult of Diſorder and Confuſion muſt fill our Minds, when we ſee them actually executed. What Terrors and Diſtraction will then ſeize thoſe guilty Breaſts, whom this Day overtakes, as we are told it ſhall do many, unawares: Not unawares, for Want of ſufficient Warning, much might be then alledged in their Excuſe; but unawares, for Want of neceſſary Preparation, and attending to that Warning, which leaves no room for Apologies? [u] What Thoughts will then ſtart up, and force themſelves upon thoſe obſtinate, thoſe diſſolute Sons of Pleaſure and Vanity, who, in Defiance of their baptiſmal Vows, and better Education, make ſuch a Jeſt of a crucified God, and laugh at the Threatenings of his judging the World, as a Fable deviſed to keep ſilly Souls in Awe, the Artifice of Politicians, and the Talk of Churchmen? What a diſmal Change will then enſue, when

[s] Vid. Burnet's Theory, Vol. II. and Collier's Sermons. [t] Rev. xv. 3. [u] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

when the inſolent Mockeries of God and his wiſe Diſpenſations, the profane Burleſques of Scripture, and that filthy nauſeous Froth, which is now thought to give ſuch a Reliſh to Converſation, ſhall ſink into fruitleſs Confeſſions of Truth found too late; when every blaſphemous Tongue ſhall be ſtruck dumb with Guilt and Deſpair, and, in the Place of loud Laughter at the moſt ſacred Things, ſhall ſucceed Weeping and Wailing, trembling Knees, wringing Hands, and gnaſhing Teeth, thenceforth, and for ever?

WHAT Hills will the prophane Swearers call to fall upon them, what Mountains to cover them, when he, whoſe Blood and Wounds have been ſo wantonly toſſed upon their Tongues, ſhall come in flaming Fire, to revenge theſe rude Affronts of his moſt holy Name and Sufferings? Nay, where ſhall even thoſe, in Compariſon, modeſt Sinners ſtand, who in Words are content to own the Lord, whom in Works they too palpably deny, and diſcredit, at leaſt a Religion, which they do not profeſſedly diſclaim? The intemperate and laſcivious, the greedy Worldlings, and glittering great ones, that ſpend their Time and Wealth in Vice and Vanity, muſt then render a ſtrict Account, not only how they got, but how they employed, their Poſſeſſions; and be pierced through and through with this ſtabbing Reflection, —— That the Riches, which they ſquandered away in ſtately Buildings, coſtly Apparel, numerous Equipage, and worldly Grandeur, are now become Inſtruments of their Ruin; which, if expended in cloathing the naked, and feeding the hungry Members of Chriſt, might have opened them a Paſſage into everlaſting Habitations of Bliſs and Glory. * Here indeed the Paſſions of the Soul do in a great Meaſure ſleep, and are heavy and languid, for Want of Objects ſtrong enough to call them up; but Heaven and Hell, when they are once in View, and are preſented to our Senſes, are ſuch mighty moving Things, as will be ſure to awaken the Powers of the moſt lethargic Mind, and raiſe all the Force and Paſſions of Nature to the utmoſt Degree. When Men can ſhelter themſelves no longer in Infidelity, but are forced to believe they are loſt for ever; when they are powerfully convinced that Fire, and Fiends, and Eternity are the diſmal Ingredients of their Puniſhment; when Damnation ſtands before them, and the intolerable Sentence is ready to be executed; what inexpreſſible Agonies will they then fall into, what Amazement and Exceſs of Horror muſt then ſeize upon them? Nothing certainly, but the Puniſhment itſelf, can be more aſtoniſhing, than the Dread of it, at ſo near a Diſtance.

BUT praiſed be the Divine Mercy for it, there is a bright Side of this Judgment too. [x] For though it cannot be ſuppoſed, that the very beſt of Mortals can look ſtedfaſtly on this Tribunal, and all its terrible Pomp, without any Manner of Miſgiving or Concern; yet, if they look up to Jeſus, that Lamb ſlain to take away the Sins of the World, the Apprehenſions of a Judgment will be tempered with Hope, and holy Truſt in his Sacrifice; and the Plagues and Fears, which wound the Wicked mortally, fly over the good Man's Head, and not one of them touches him. The good Man can behold the Glories and Triumphs of infinite Mercy in the Son of God, now bright and all divine, once condeſcending ſo low, as to die for his Sake: He can depend upon all fair Allowances for Infirmities and Temptations from one, who hath felt the Weakneſs of human Nature in his own Perſon; inſomuch that, were he allowed the Liberty to chuſe his own Judge, Prudence and Intereſt would direct him to ſuch an one, as is infinitely good in his own Nature, and has been inexpreſſibly kind to him. He looks upon Judgment therefore, as the Pardon of his Tranſgreſſions, the Recompence of his Sufferings, his ſpeedy and intire Deliverance from Danger and Temptations, from Corruption and Mortality, and (what is more than all) from Frailty and Imperfections, and the very Poſſibility of ſinning any more. He looks upon it as the Renewal and Glorification of his Nature, when his Body ſhall be transformed into Beauty, and Vigour, and Immortality; his Soul be likened to the Divine Excellencies; every Power and Faculty enlarged; and himſelf, from thenceforth, ſeeing, admiring, praiſing, loving, living, and reigning with his Lord for ever. And for theſe Reaſons, he looks upon thoſe Things, which are coming upon the Earth, with Unconcern; and can behold a flaming World, and all the Things that are conſumed therein, without Uneaſineſs or Regret; becauſe he knows he has a more abiding City, [y] whoſe Builder and Maker is God, and [z] an Inheritance, incorruptible and undefiled, that fadeth not away, reſerved in Heaven for him.

* Collier's Sermons.
[x] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.
[y] Heb. xi, 10.
[z] 1 Pet. i. 4.

Concerning the Time of the future Judgment, and whether known to Chriſt and Angels.

IV. AFTER our Saviour had been diſcourſing to his Diſciples concerning the future Judgment, and foretelling the ſeveral Signs which ſhould precede it, we find him concluding with this Declaration, [a] but of that Day and Hour knoweth no Man, no not the Angels which are in Heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only; whence ſome concluded it to be one of thoſe Times and Seaſons, which the Father hath put in his Power, and, conſequently, that it is a Kind of Impiety to make any Search into the particular Period of it: Whilſt others have been ſo little apprehenſive of any Danger herein, that they have purſued their Enquiries far enough to imagine, that they have attained to an exact Computation of it: It ſeems not a little ſtrange however, (whatever we may think of thoſe celeſtial Miniſters, who continually behold the Face of God, and are to make up the Train of the Judge, when he cometh) it ſeems not a little ſtrange, I ſay, that the Son of God, who came from the Boſom of his Father, and was therefore intimately acquainted with his Counſels; that he, whom God hath ordained to be the Judge of the World, and who knew his Office, and the Time of its commencing ſo well, that he certainly predicted ſeveral Forerunners of it: Nay, that he, in whom all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge, and all the Divinity does ſubſtantially reſide, ſhould not be acquainted with the Time of this Judgment; and therefore, to ſolve this Difficulty, ſeveral Interpretations of this Text have been deviſed. [b] Some diſtinguiſh between Chriſt's human and divine Nature, and thereupon argue, that though he knew of the Day of Judgment as God, yet he was not acquainted with it as Man; for they readily ſuppoſe, that the Divine Wiſdom, which dwelt in our Saviour, did not communicate itſelf to his human Soul ſo fully, but that his human Nature might, at certain Times, be ignorant of ſome particular Things. Others, conſidering Chriſt in the Capacity of a Prophet, ſent into the World to reveal his Father's Will, and thereupon delivering, not all that his Godhead knew, but only what the Spirit of God thought fit to reveal, have thence inferred, that as he ſpake nothing of himſelf, but only as the Father, which ſent him, gave him Commandment, what he ſhould ſpeak; and ſo, the Knowledge of the Day and Hour of the final Judgment, being no Part of his prophetic Office, as the Son of Man, and as barely the Meſſenger and Miniſter of God, he knew nothing of it. The Words οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, which we render knoweth no Man, ſome have imagined, might properly enough ſignify, no Perſon revealeth, or maketh known; and thence they ſuppoſe, that though the Angels might, and our bleſſed Saviour certainly did know the Time of the Coming of the Day of Judgment; yet God, in his great Mercy to Mankind, and for Reaſons hereafter mentioned, laid a Reſtriction upon them, that they might not make it known.

[c] IN which ſoever of theſe Senſes we underſtand our bleſſed Saviour's Words, we cannot from them deduce any Inferiority in his Godhead, or any Ignorance in him, with Regard to the Time, when the Laſt Judgment is to commence. And though, when our Saviour ſpake theſe Words, the Angels might not be able to ſee through all Events to the End of the World, and, conſequently, be ignorant of the preciſe Time of the Judgment-Day; yet it does not therefore follow, that they do not know it now, when, in the Courſe of almoſt ſeventeen hundred Years, many Things are come to paſs, that may be Marks and Directions to them, to make Judgment of what remains, and of the laſt Period of Things.

What Enquiry ſeveral People have made into the Day of Judgment.

SOME of the ancient Aſtronomers pretended to calculate the End of the World from the fixed Stars, and the Firmament. [d] They ſuppoſed, that theſe Bodies beſides the Hurry of their diurnal Motion, from Eaſt to Weſt, quite round the Earth, in four and twenty Hours, had another retrograde Motion from Weſt to Eaſt, which moves ſlow and leiſurely; and that, when they have finiſhed this Circle of Retrogradation, and come up again to the ſame Place, from whence they ſet out at the Beginning

[a] Mark xiii. [b] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. III.

[c] Excellent to this Purpoſe are the Words of Dr Lightfoot. "It is one Thing, ſays he, to underſtand the Son of "God, barely and abſtractedly, for the ſecond Perſon in the Holy Trinity; another, to underſtand him for the "Meſſias, or the ſecond Perſon incarnate. To ſay that there is any Thing, which the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity "knows not, is blaſphemous; to ſay ſo of the Meſſias, is not ſo; who nevertheleſs was the ſame with the ſecond "Perſon in the Trinity. For although the ſecond Perſon, abſtractly conſidered, according to his mere Deity, was "co-equal with the Father, co-omnipotent, co-omniſcient, co-eternal with him, &c. yet the Meſſias, who was God-"Man, conſidered as Meſſias, was a Servant and a Meſſenger of the Father, and received Commands and Authority "from him. So that thoſe Expreſſions, The Son can do nothing of himſelf, &c. will not in the leaſt ſerve the Arian "Turn, if you take them in this Senſe, which you muſt neceſſarily do, i. e. the Meſſias can do nothing of himſelf, be-"cauſe he is a Servant and a Deputy." In Locum.

[d] Burnet's Theory, Vol. II.

Beginning of the World, then this Courſe of Nature will be at an End: But, as this Fiction of a ſolid Firmament, upon which this Hypotheſis relies, has been long ſince exploded, and the Stars being found not to be fixed in one Surface, or at an equal Diſtance from the Earth, but placed in ſeveral Orbs, higher and higher, to fill and beautify the immenſe Spaces of the Univerſe: So have they no Motion common to them all, nor any Motion ſingly, unleſs upon their own Centres: And therefore as they never leave their Stations, ſo they can never return to that common Station, which, as theſe Men imagined, they had at the Beginning of the World; and, conſequently, this grand Period, whereby they pretend to meaſure the World's Duration, is purely chimerical, and deſtitute of any Foundation, in the true Nature and Motion of celeſtial Bodies.

THE Jews have a remarkable Prophecy among them, [e] of a very ancient Date, and wherewith [f] ſeveral Fathers of the Chriſtian Church ſeem to be ſatisfied, viz. that the World ſhall ſtand for Six Thouſand Years, which they diſtribute into this Order, Two Thouſand, before the Law; Two Thouſand, under the Law; and Two Thouſand, under the Meſſiah. But [g] the great Difference of Computation, between the Hebrew Copies and the Septuagint, which amounts to more than 1300 Years, how long a Time it is, ſince the World firſt began, makes it impoſſible to draw any certain Concluſion, even ſuppoſing the Prophecy to be true, how long it will be before it ends. The Samaritan Copy of the Pentateuch ſeems to moderate between theſe two; but, even taking them all together, we are ſtill at the ſame Loſs, and left only to multiply our Conjectures; which made [h] a very great Enquirer into this Period propoſe it as a Conſideration to the Pious, Sober, and Judicious; "Whether, "with all due Reverence to the Divine Writ, there may not be ſome ſecret Diſpoſi- "tion of Divine Providence in this Variety of Computation, to prevent our Curio- "ſity, in counting the exact Time of the Day of Judgment, and ſecond Appearing "of Chriſt; and that as the ambitious Tower of Babel was hindered by the Con- "fuſion of Languages, ſo whether our Curioſity, in this Particular, be not, by a "like Providence, prevented by ſuch a Diverſity of Computations."

The Prophecies which God has given us of it.

SEVERAL of the ancient Prophets have, in ſeveral Places, foretold the Converſion and Reſtoration of the Jews, as previous to the Conſummation of all Things. But, alas! what Appearance is there of this in the preſent Situation of Affairs? And what Judgment can we make of a Sign, that is not yet come to paſs? Our Bleſſed Saviour has likewiſe foretold us of ſeveral Diſorders, in the natural World, as Forerunners of his coming to Judgment: But theſe being the very Pangs of Death, and Strugglings of Nature, as it were before her Diſſolution, it will be too late to be aware of our Ruin, when it is thus knocking at our Door. The laſt Revelation, we are to expect, is the Apocalypſe of St John, wherein are ſeveral Prophecies, which reach to the Concluſion of the World. The ſeven Seals, the ſeven Trumpets, the ſeven Vials, do all terminate upon that great Period; but then theſe are hiſtorical, not chronological Prophecies: They tell us, in their Language, the Events, but do not expreſs the Time, wherein they come to paſs; and though others there are, that may be called chronological, ſuch as [i] the treading under Foot the holy City, forty [e] This Prophecy is called, Traditio Domûs Eliæ: But then there were two of this Name, Elias the Tiſhbite, and Elias the Rabbin or Cabbaliſt, and it is ſuppoſed to belong immediately to the latter of theſe: Yet this does not hinder, but that it might come originally from the former Elias. It might be preſerved in the School of this Elias the Rabbin, and firſt made publick by him; or perhaps he might add that Diviſion of the Time into three Parts, and ſo get a Title to the Whole. For I cannot eaſily imagine, that a Doctor, who lived two hundred Years, or thereabouts, before Chriſt, when all Prophecy had ceaſed, for many Ages among the Jews, ſhould take upon him to dictate a Prophecy, about the Duration of the World, unleſs he had been ſupported by ſome antecedent Tradition, which being kept more ſecret before he took the Liberty to make it publick, came, by that Means, to be fathered on him. Nor can it be ſuppoſed, but that the old Prophet Elias was a very proper Perſon to be inſpired with the Knowledge, and to tell the firſt News of that fatal Period, ſince we are told, (Mal. iv. 5, 6.) that he is to come again, and bring the firſt Alarm of it. Burnet's Theory, Vol. II.

[f] Of this Opinion was St Barnabas, (Epiſt. Cath. c. xv.) where he argues, that the Creation will be ended in Six Thouſand Years, as it was finiſhed in ſix Days, every Day, according to the ſacred and myſtical Account, anſwering to a Thouſand Years. Of the ſame Judgment were Irenæus, Lib. V. c. xviii. Hyppolytus, his Diſciple, as we may ſee in Photius, c. ccii. Lactantius, in his Divine Inſtitutions, Lib. VII. c. xiv. Cyprian, in his Exhortation to Martyrdom, c. xi. And the Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers, Ad Orthodoxos, in Juſtin Martyr, who tells us, That, from ſeveral Places in Scripture, we may conjecture, that thoſe are in the right, who ſay Six Thouſand Years is the Time prefixed for the Duration of this preſent Frame of Things. Burnet, ibid.

[g] Mede's Works, Lib. V. Where he ſuppoſes, that the ſeventy Interpreters, tranſlating, as they did, in Egypt, might voluntarily, and, on Set purpoſe, increaſe the Years of the firſt Generations, which he makes to be thoſe, not before, but after the Flood, in order to make them reach the Antiquity of ſome Stories of the Egyptians, and thereby exceeded the Hebrew Computation above 1300 Years.

[h] Mede, ibid. [i] Rev. xi. 2.

forty and two Months; [k] the Witneſſes oppoſing Antichriſt, One Thouſand Two Hundred and Sixty Days; [l] the Flight of the Woman into the Wilderneſs, for a Time, Times, and half a Time; and [m] the War of the Beaſt againſt the Saints, Forty-two Months; yet, even admitting that ſome of theſe extend (as all do not) to the End of the World, ſince we do not certainly know, where to fix their Beginning, even though we were agreed as to the Things themſelves, we muſt ſtill be at a Loſs, when, or in what Year, they will expire. The beſt Conjectures, indeed, that can be made concerning this Matter, muſt be taken from a judicious Examination of theſe Points; and, according as we gather up the Prophecies of this Revelation, in a ſucceſſive Completion, we may ſee how, by Degrees, we draw nearer and nearer to the Concluſion of all: But till ſome of theſe Prophecies are accompliſhed, we are like a Man, that awakes in the Night, and knows not how far it is ſpent, until the Light appears, and the firſt Glimpſe of that reſolves his Doubts.

That the Apoſtles, in their Days, did not think it near at Hand.

THUS we have examined the Obſervations which Men have made, and the Prophecies, which God hath given us concerning the Laſt Day, and muſt ſtill remain ignorant of the Time of its coming. "And well may we be ſuppoſed to be ignorant, "when the Apoſtles themſelves, as ſome imagine, were ſo groſſly miſtaken in their "Computation, that they verily believed themſelves ſhould have lived to be Spectators "of the World's Cataſtrophe, and that the ſecond Coming of Chriſt was not to be de-"ferred much beyond the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as their Words and Exhortations "ſeem to import." [n] It cannot be denied, indeed, but that, at the Beginning and firſt ſetting out of the Goſpel, ſome of theſe holy Men were guilty of Miſtakes, and ſufficiently diſcovered their erroneous Surmiſes; but after the Holy Ghoſt was ſent in an extraordinary Manner to enlighten them, and its Office was to teach them all Things, even ſuch Things as they were not able to bear before; it is impoſſible that they ſhould conceive any Error, much more commit it to Writing, or that they ſhould teach any falſe Doctrine, or delude their Fellow-Chriſtians with falſe Hopes and Encouragements, as they muſt have done, had this been their real Perſuaſion. [o] For if, when St Paul tells the Corinthians; [p] Brethren, the Time is ſhort, and the Faſhion of this World paſſeth away, he ſpeaks not of the Time of human Life, and the Relation Men have to the World, and the World to them, but of Chriſt's coming to Judgment, and the Deſtruction of all Things here on Earth; if, when he tells the Hebrews, [q] yet a little while, and he that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry, he means this, not of Chriſt's coming to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of the Jewiſh State and Nation, but of his coming to the final Judgment, he certainly teaches falſe Doctrine, and endeavours to ſupport them with falſe Hopes, which cannot but impair his Credit in other Matters. If therefore the Apoſtle may be allowed to explain his own Meaning, he has, in another Place, given us a full Interpretation of it, which we find him introducing in this ſolemn Manner: [r] Now we beſeech you, Brethren, τῆς παρουσίας, not by, but concerning the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and our gathering together unto him, that ye be not ſoon ſhaken in Mind, or troubled, neither by Spirit, i. e. any pretended Revelation, nor by Word, nor by Letter, as from us, as that the Day of Chriſt is at Hand. Let no Man deceive you by any Means, for that Day ſhall not come, except there come a falling away firſt, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the Son of Perdition: Which plainly enough ſhews, that the Apoſtle diſowned any ſuch Doctrine himſelf, and accounted thoſe Deceivers, who did inſinuate it. When therefore he tells the Corinthians, [s] We ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed in a Moment; and in like Manner, when he tells the Theſſalonians, [t] We that are alive, and remain unto the Coming of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them which are aſleep; it is perverting his Senſe, to apply theſe Paſſages to himſelf, and the Chriſtians then in Being, which have ſo plain a Reference to Chriſtians in all Ages; or to infer from them the ſurviving of that Generation to the Coming of our Lord, when his Meaning is apparently no more than this,——That they (whoſoever they be) who ſhall be alive at the general Reſurrection, ſhall undergo a Change inſtead of Death.

The Reaſons for their expreſſing themſelves as they did.

WE can hardly ſuppoſe, that the Apoſtles were ſo little verſed in the Writings of Ezekiel, Daniel, and the reſt of the Prophets, eſpecially when our Saviour had expounded the Scriptures to them, and taught them [u] the Things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, after his Reſurrection, as to think that the Goſpel-State would not continue one Century. St Paul, in particular, tells us, that he expected a general Apoſtacy

[k] Rev. xi. 3. [l] Ibid. xii. 14. [m] Ibid. xiii. 5. [n] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.
[o] Whitby on 2 Cor. v. 9. [p] 1 Cor. vii. 29, 31. [q] Heb. x. 37. [r] 2 Theſſ. ii. 2, &c.
[s] 1 Cor. xv. 51. [t] 1 Theſſ. iv. 15. [u] Acts i. 3.

Apoſtacy, and the Revelation of Antichriſt, before the great Day; and St Peter, to engage their Patience and Perſeverance, deſires that the Chriſtians, in his Days, might * not be ignorant of this one Thing, that one Day is with the Lord, as a Thouſand Years, and a thouſand Years as one Day. Their Perſecutions, it is likely, which were very heavy upon them, cauſed them to wiſh for ſome ſudden Deliverance, and inclined them to believe, that Chriſt would ſpeedily come to take Vengeance on their Adverſaries; and therefore, * ſince the Time of Judgment was uncertain and unknown, it was but fit, that the wiſer Courſe ſhould be taken, and that Men ſhould rather be alarmed into ſudden and immediate Expectations, than tempted to delay and put off this Day. This is all, that we find the Apoſtles doing, and indeed all they could do. They could only ſpeak in general Terms, of the Nearneſs of this Day; they could not fix, or limit it to any particular Time; and, if they were moved by the Spirit to ſpeak of it, in ſuch a Manner, as might induce others to make ſuch particular Applications, as might be beneficial to all in every Age, I can ſee no Fallacy in this; eſpecially conſidering, that, as Death and Judgment are the ſame Things, in Reference to our Eternity, the Apoſtles might both wiſely and properly ſpeak of the Day of Judgment in ſuch Language, as might move every Man daily to expect it.

THIS however muſt not be diſſembled, that theſe, and the like Paſſages in Scripture, gave Occaſion [y] to ſucceeding Chriſtians to think, that the Day of Judgment was near at Hand; and have ſince made ſome Perſons, otherwiſe ſober and judicious, too bold and daring in this Particular; their ardent Deſires of Chriſt's coming, and the great Preſſures and Afflictions, which they laboured under, and wiſhed to be delivered from, puſhing them on to aſſign the preciſe and punctual Time. The Unſucceſsfulneſs of their Conjectures however may be of Uſe to convince us of this Truth, that he, who hath appointed this Day, hath alſo, for good and wiſe Reaſons, determined to hide it from the Knowledge of all Men, that they may not be puffed up with Pride and Conceit from their Foreſight of Futurities; that frail Minds may not intermeddle with Divine Secrets; that the Deſigns and Myſteries of Providence may not be interrupted, but ſhewn them all at once; that Security and Preſumption, if the Day were diſtant, Horror and Diſtraction, if it were near, may not invade Mens Minds; and that, looking upon every Day, as what may bring their great Judge from Heaven, they may live in continual Watchfulneſs and Preparation for his Coming: And this the rather, becauſe (how little ſoever they know of the Time when) they are certainly no Strangers to this, that the Day of the Lord ſhall come as a Thief in the Night, when all Things are wrapped up in Silence, in Sleep, and Security; and that the laſt Age ſhall be as much ſurprized at the burning, as that of Noah was at the drowning of the World. They will be eating and drinking, buying and building, projecting glorious Deſigns, and engaged as eagerly in the Buſineſs and Entertainments of Life, as ever; and when they cry Peace and Safety, promiſe themſelves vaſt Returns from their Undertakings, and think their Proſperity impregnable; then ſhall the fatal Day ruſh in unawares, and overwhelm them with ſwift and irreſiſtible Deſtruction. When the Voluptuous are revelling in the Exceſs of Riot; when the Ambitious are graſping at Power, making themſelves great by Slaughter and Deſolation, and raiſing their Trophies upon the Miſery of their Neighbours; then ſhall all their Enjoyments, and all their Hopes be unexpectedly raviſhed from them, and their Conqueſts ſwallowed up in the univerſal Ruin. [z] Wherefore beloved, ſeeing that ye look for ſuch Things, be diligent, that ye may be found in him in Peace, without Spot and blameleſs.

Why Men are left ignorant of this Day.

Whenever it comes, it comes ſuddenly,

I KNOW not what Strength may be thought in the Apoſtle's Reaſoning now, * but let the hardieſt Sinner ſuppoſe the Day of Judgment come, and fancy himſelf ſurrounded with the thouſand Terrors of it: Let him conceive Nature diſſolving in Agonies; and therefore it is Wiſdom to provide for it.

* 2 Pet. iii. 8. [x] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. I.

[y] Thus Lactantius (Inſtit. Lib. VII. c. xxv.) aſſerted, that there was not above two hundred Years Space, between the Time when he wrote, and the End of the World: And before him Tertullian and Origen concluded, from the Words of St Paul, Brethren, the Time is ſhort, it remains, that thoſe that have Wives, be as though they had none, 1 Cor. vii. 29. that Doomſday could not be far off. St Chryſoſtom, in one of his Sermons, (de Virginitate) tells his Hearers, that this preſent Time runs to an End, and the final Reſurrection is, as it were, at the Door: And among later Writers, Martin Luther (in his Colloq. Menſal. c. xxxiv, xxxviii) has theſe warm Sayings; "I verily believe, that the Angels are already "up in Arms, that they are putting on their Harneſs, and girding their Swords about them: For the Day of Judgment "draweth near, and two hundred Years hence the Voice will come, and ſound, Behold the Bridegroom cometh."

[z] 2 Pet. iii. 14. * Lucas, ibid.

Agonies; the World flaming, the Trumpet of the Arch-Angel ſounding; the Glory of God diſplaying itſelf in the Perſon of Chriſt, and Armies of Angels; the Roaring of the Sea, the Convulſion of the Earth, the Falling of Rocks and Mountains; dreadful Flaſhes of Lightning, and Volleys of Thunder; the Shrieks and Howlings of Devils, and diſtreſſed Sinners attacking him from every Quarter, and a guilty Conſcience, at the ſame Time, ſtabbing and terrifying him from within: Let, I ſay, the hardieſt of Sinners make this Suppoſition, and then he will not fail to be convinced of the Reaſonableneſs, and great Importance of the Apoſtle's Admonition, * ſeeing then that all theſe Things ſhall be diſſolved, what Manner of Perſons ought we to be in all holy Converſation and Godlineſs? That when Chriſt ſhall be revealed from Heaven to take Vengeance on his Enemies, as well as to glorify his Saints, we may be found of him without Spot or Blemiſh, and, having our Fruits unto Holineſs, may, in the End, be made Partakers of everlaſting Life.

SECT. I.

Of HEAVEN.

The Happineſs of Heaven, why ſo inexplicable.

BELOVED, [a] now are we the Sons of God, and it does not yet appear what we ſhall be, ſays St John, deſcribing the Privileges of the Goſpel-State: And if ſo great an Apoſtle, as St John, to whom ſo many Revelations were vouchſafed; to whom [b] a Door in Heaven was opened, and the [c] Throne of God, and the [d] New Jeruſalem, and [e] the River of Life, and [f] the Tree of Life, and [g] the Light of the holy City were exhibited, was unable to give us a Deſcription of the heavenly State, how ſhall any, but thoſe bright Miniſters of God, who continually ſtand in his Preſence, and are employed about the great Arcana of his Kingdom, be ſufficient to diſplay the tranſcendent Felicities, that are there? [h] Our Perception of any Object, we know, depends ſo much upon its juſt Proportion and Agreement with the Faculty, by which we muſt perceive it, that where the Object is either very remote, or very diſproportionate, the Perception muſt needs be dark and confuſed. Now this is the Caſe of the Happineſs we are going to treat of. It ſtands at a mighty Diſtance, and cannot be attained in the Life, that we now lead: It requires many Alterations to be made in our Perſons, in order to qualify us, both for the Perception and Enjoyment of it: It does not manifeſt itſelf to us by any Light of its own, nor is it to be diſcovered by ſuch Collections or Inferences, as Reaſon and our natural Powers are wont to make, concerning Matters near at Hand, and commenſurate to them: It is the free Gift of God; the Product of his Will and Bounty to his Creatures; and therefore the Ingredients, whereof it conſiſts, as well as the Conditions, whereupon it is beſtowed, can only be learnt by ſuch Declarations, as he has been pleaſed to make, for our Support and Encouragement in this Life. Some Preſages and Expectances indeed of a future Happineſs, after Death, have been entertained by the beſt and wiſeſt Men of all Ages; but, for a firm Perſuaſion and certain Account of this Matter, we are beholden to Jeſus Chriſt, who therefore is truly ſaid to have brought Life and Immortality to Light through the Goſpel: And yet it may not be amiſs to obſerve, even as to the Goſpel itſelf, that the Declarations, which are made therein, are not, in all Points, ſuited to the Nature of the Thing, but expreſſed in Terms full of Condeſcenſion. They are accommodated to the Capacities of Men, dwelling in Bodies of Fleſh, converſing with groſs and material Objects, and moved by ſenſible Impreſſions; and the Language, wherein they are delivered, is ſuch, as we underſtand, rather than what deſcribes them.

THIS is the Ground of all thoſe Metaphors and Parables, which figure out to us the Joys of the Bleſſed, by eating and drinking at Chriſt's Table; by ſumptuous Banquets; by Marriage-Feaſts; by fertile Paſtures, beautiful Dwellings, magnificent Cities, whoſe Sun never ſets; and by Thrones, and all the Enſigns of Honour, peculiar to Princes upon Earth: And yet we are ſufficiently forewarned againſt taking theſe Paſſages in their literal Senſe, when we are told, that the Children of the Reſurrection ſurrection [i] neither hunger nor thirſt, neither marry, nor are given in Marriage; and conſequently, that there will be an End of all ſuch Gratifications of Senſe, when both the Neceſſities, that require, and the Appetites, that purſue and recommend them to us, ſhall be no more. This however we are given to underſtand by ſuch Metaphors and Alluſions, that all the Satisfaction, which can poſſibly reſult from the greateſt Plenty, the higheſt Honour, the moſt exquiſite Beauty, and every rational and truly manly Pleaſure; as much, and more, than the moſt Senſual can enjoy, or imagine, or wiſh for, will be, not only equalled, but vaſtly exceeded in the Happineſs of the next World: For the very great Variety of Figures, made choice of to this Purpoſe, intimates, that there is no Sort of Joy, whereof we are capable in that State, but what will be conferred upon us in its utmoſt Perfection. And, with theſe Obſervations, we ſhall proceed now to take a View of the Plan, which the Scriptures have given us of the Celeſtial State; and obſerve, as we go along, I. Wherein its chief Glories and Felicities will conſiſt: And, II. Upon what Account there will be ſuch Degrees and Varieties of them.

* 2 Pet. iii. 11. [a] 1 John iii. 2. [b] Rev. iv. 1. [c] Ibid. ver. 2, 3. [d] Ibid. ch. xxi. 2. [e] Ibid. ch. xxii. 1. [f] Ibid. ver. 2. [g] Ibid. ver. 5. [h] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. ii.

I. THAT there is a certain Place, appointed by God to be the Receptacle of the Bleſſed, in the upper Regions of the World, and above the ſtarry Orbs, and therefore called [k] the third Heaven; that this Place is remote from the Fogs of this lower World, and out of the utmoſt Projection of the dark Shade, made by any Bodies here below, and therefore called [l] the Regions of Light; that this is a very pleaſant and delightful Place, and therefore, in Alluſion to the Garden of Eden, called [m] a Paradiſe; nay, a Place of unutterable, inconceivable Pleaſure and Delight, and therefore called the [n] Paradiſe of God; that this Place God the Father honours with his more immediate Preſence, and therefore very often is called the Father of Heaven; that here God the Son has his Reſidence, and therefore is ſtiled [o] the Lord of Heaven; that here God the Holy Ghoſt, the third Perſon in the ever bleſſed Trinity, inhabits, and therefore is ſaid to be [p] ſent down from Heaven; and that this Place, finally, is the Court of the great King, where all his glorious Miniſters ſtand ready to obey his Commands, and therefore they are called [q] the Angels of Heaven: Theſe are Truths, ſo plainly revealed in Scripture, that whoever is ſatisfied of its divine Authority, cannot call in Queſtion the Reality of this beatifick Place. Whatever therefore ſome Enthuſiaſts may tell us of an Heaven within, the only one, which God has provided for departed Souls, and that the Notion of a local Heaven is too mercenary, and carnal, and what ſavours of Mahometiſm: The ſober Chriſtian, who reads theſe Words of our Lord, [r] In my Father's Houſe are many Manſions; if it were not ſo, I would have told you: I go to prepare a Place for you; and if I go, and prepare a Place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myſelf, that where I am, ye may be alſo; cannot but believe, that thoſe who, at the final Judgment, ſhall receive the happy Sentence, ſhall be admitted into the ſame Empyrean Heaven, where their Saviour Chriſt, God bleſſed for evermore, ſitteth at the Right-Hand of his Father.

The Locality of Heaven.

AND indeed the Doctrine of a determinate Place, where good Men ſhall be recompenſed after this Life, and enjoy an uninterrupted State of Happineſs, is what not only Jews and Chriſtians, but even Infidels and Pagans have profeſſed. The Elyſian Fields, Places, which the Imagination of [s] their Poets have deſcribed with all the Advantages, that can give the moſt agreeable Entertainment to the Mind, and excite in the Heart the moſt eager Deſires, are marked out for the Abode of the Juſt. [t] Nay, the Heathen Theology went ſo far, as to transform thoſe great Souls into Divinities, who being raiſed above the common Rank of good Men by their extraordinary Virtues, had acquired the glorious Name of Heroes; and Flattery, founded upon the Opinion of a Glory and Happineſs more than human, in Favour of theſe great Men, has by little and little been ſo bold, as to flatter, with an Apotheoſis, the Ambition of Kings and Emperors. Had theſe been the Flights and Flatteries of their Poets only, a good deal of Fiction might have been ſuſpected in them; but when it appears, that the wiſeſt and graveſt of their Philoſophers were of this Opinion; when we find the Divine Plato affirming, that the Good and Virtuous ſhall, after this Life, go [u] to the Iſlands of the Bleſſed, enjoy all Happineſs, and be free from all Evil, which Iſlands he places in the ætherial Regions; when we find the great Cicero affirming, * that, [i] Rev. vii. 16. Luke xx. 35. [k] 2 Cor. xii. 2. [l] Iſa. xxx. 26. [m] 2 Cor. xii. 4. [n] Rev. ii. 7. [o] 1 Cor. xv. 47. [p] 1 Pet. i. 12. [q] Matth. xxiv. 36. [r] John xiv. 2, 3. [s] Vid. Hom. Odyſ. Lib. IV. & Virg. Æn. Lib. VI. [t] Martin, of Natural Religion. [u] Εἰς μακάρων νήσους οἰκεῖν, ἐν πάσῃ εὐδαιμονίᾳ, κακῶν ἐκτὸς, In Phædone. * Tuſc. Quæſt. L. I.

that, in the Empyrean Orb, the Soul fixes herſelf in her Aſcent after Death, where ſhe wants nothing, but is ſuſtained with the Food, that the Stars are nouriſhed with, and from thence ſurveys the whole World, and all that is contained in it, at one View; we cannot but conclude, that a certain Abode for the Souls of the Righteous after Death, in full Poſſeſſion of all Joy and Felicity, was the general Perſuaſion of all, who had any Notion of their Immortality.

Its outward Beauty and Magnificence.

THE [x] Poets indeed have employed the utmoſt Streſs of their Fancy, and called up all the agreeable Ideas imaginable, to compleat the Deſcription of thoſe Abodes; but all they have ſaid is nothing comparable to what St John, in the Revelation, hath told us of the new Jeruſalem, [y] the Building of whoſe Walls was of Jaſper, and the City was pure Gold, like unto Glaſs, and the Foundation of the Wall of the City was garniſhed with all Manner of precious Stones. The firſt Foundation was Jaſper, the ſecond Sapphire, the third a Calcedony, the fourth an Emerald, the fifth Sardonyx, the ſixth Sardius, the ſeventh Chryſolite, the eighth Beryl, the ninth a Topaz, the tenth a Chryſophraſus, the eleventh a Jacinth, the twelfth an Amethyſt, and the twelve Gates were twelve Pearls; every ſeveral Gate was one Pearl, and the Streets of the City were pure Gold, as it were tranſparent Glaſs; and the City had no Need of the Sun, nor of the Moon to ſhine in it; for the Glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof. Theſe Expreſſions we grant are figurative, but ſtill they convey a Notion of a Place, full of Beauty and Magnificence, as we muſt needs imagine the ſupreme Heaven to be, whenever, in a clear Winter's Night, we caſt our Eyes up to thoſe ten thouſand Times ten thouſand Stars, that deck and adorn the Regions, which are but the Outworks, and Pavements, as it were, of the grand Empyreum.

Its rational Pleaſures and Enjoyments.

BUT the Happineſs of a Man, conſidered as a rational Creature, conſiſts not ſo much in the Nature of the Place, as in the free and vigorous Exerciſe of his intellectual Faculties, upon proper and deſerving Objects: And therefore, [z] ſuppoſe we, that theſe bleſſed Abodes are inhabited with intelligent Beings, full of Contemplation, and thirſty after the Knowledge of the Truth; what can be imagined more grateful to them, than to be admitted to the very Fountain of all Truth and Reality, there to quench their Thirſt, and ſatisfy their Deſires, with the free and eaſy, but ſtill freſh Diſcoveries of his infinite Glories and Perfections, in the Wonders of Nature, of Providence, of Grace! But then, ſuppoſing that their Minds are ſo raiſed, and their Apprehenſions ſo quick and ſagacious, that they can all know whatever they have a Mind to know, without the Difficulty of Study, and diſcern the Dependence and Connection of Things, without any laborious Deduction; with what unſpeakable Satisfaction muſt they needs peruſe this infinite Volume of Divine Being and Perfections!

[a] IT is a known Rule, given by Divines for the better underſtanding of Scripture, "That the Words, which ſignify Senſe and Knowledge, are very often to be underſtood ſo, as comprehending in them thoſe Effects and Affections, which Senſe and Knowledge are apt to produce in us;" and therefore, when we are told, that, upon our Admiſſion into Heaven, [b] we ſhall ſee God as he is, not [c] through a Glaſs darkly, but Face to Face, and ſhall then know him, even as alſo we are known; we are given to underſtand, that we ſhall not only attain to a Knowledge of the Divine Excellencies, the moſt perfect, that we can poſſibly receive, but ſhall likewiſe experience a Pleaſure in ſuch Knowledge, far above what we are now able to imagine. For if, in many Inſtances, Men of Contemplation feel even now, from an imperfect Diſcovery of ſome beloved Truth, a Satisfaction not to be equalled by all the Pleaſures of the moſt indulgent Epicure; what can we think muſt be the Joy, the Gaiety, the Triumphs of thoſe Souls, who ſee in God the Truth and Excellencies of all Things, as in their common Source and Centre; who in him are continually ſeeing all that is lovely, and loving all they ſee, and poſſeſſing all they love? [e] Suppoſe we then a Society of intelligent Beings, placed in ſuch a State, wherein they have an Object of infinite Perfections always before them, and no Evil from within or without to check or divert them, exerting all their Faculties upon him, in the moſt

[x] Devenere locos lætos, & amœna vireta.
Fortunatorum nemorum, ſedeſque beatas.
Largior hic campos Æther, & lumine veſtit
Purpureo; ſolemque ſuum ſua ſidera norunt, &c. VIRG. Æn. Lib. VI.

[y] Rev. xxi. 18, &c. [z] Scott's Chriſtian Life, P. I. [a] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. III. [b] 1 John iii. 2.
[c] 1 Cor. xiii. 12. [d] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III. [e] Scott, ibid.

moſt rational Actions: Suppoſe them as full of Love and Duty to him, as ever their Hearts can hold, copying his Perfections, adoring his Excellencies, and breathing forth themſelves in chearful Praiſes and Hallelujahs; in a Word, exerciſing themſelves about him, to their utmoſt Strength and Power, in all thoſe bleſſed Offices, which his Nature, and their Relation to him, require: Suppoſe all this, I ſay, and we have before us the very Top and Quinteſſence of the Heaven of a rational Creature, who, in this bleſſed State, is, as it were, in his own proper Element, and moves and acts according to its moſt natural Tendency.

BUT this is not all: The Author to the Hebrews, as ſomething additional to the ſupreme Felicity, which the Viſion of God lets us into, gives us a Catalogue of the bleſſed Company, which inhabit the City of God, the heavenly Jeruſalem; and tells us, that, when we come to Mount Sion, we ſhall be adjoined to [f] an innumerable Company of Angels, to the general Aſſembly and Church of the Firſt-born, to the Spirits of juſt Men made perfect, and to Jeſus, the Mediator of the New Covenant; and certainly every Soul, [g] that has any Spark of cordial Love for Jeſus, the beſt Friend of Souls that ever was, any grateful Remembrance of what he did and ſuffered for our Sakes, cannot but eſteem it a mighty Felicity, to be admitted into his Preſence, and to behold the happy Change of his paſt woeful Condition; to ſee him, that was once ſo cruelly treated upon Earth, raiſed now to be Head and Prince of all the Hierarchy of Heaven. But, oh! when that bleſſed Perſon ſhall not only permit us to ſee his Glory, but introduce us into it, and make us Partakers of it; when we ſhall not only behold his beloved Face, but be admitted into his dear Converſation, and dwell in his Arms and Embraces for ever; when we ſhall hear him record the wonderous Adventures of his Love; through how many woeful Stages he paſſed, to reſcue us from Miſery, and make us happy; and, in the mean Time, ſhall have a moſt raviſhing Feeling of that Happineſs; how will our Hearts ſpring with Joy, and burn with Love, and our Mouths overflow with Praiſe and Thankſgiving to him! But this is not all ſtill: In the heavenly State, we ſhall not only live in a Participation of our bleſſed Saviour's Preſence, but in the happy Society of Saints and Angels, thoſe pure and immaculate Spirits, who, being endowed with large and comprehenſive Underſtandings, as well as perfect Good-Nature and moſt generous Charity, cannot fail of making moſt excellent Company. When therefore this wicked and unſociable World being at an End, [h] and all Things which offend, and them which do Iniquity, caſt into a Furnace of Fire, we, as ſoon as we arrive at the Courts of the Great King, ſhall, [i] with infinite Congratulations for our ſafe Eſcape, be conducted into the Company of Patriarchs and Prophets, Apoſtles and Martyrs, and introduced into an intimate Acquaintance with them, and with all thoſe brave and generous Souls, who, by their great Examples, have recommended themſelves to the World; when we ſhall be familiar Friends with Angels and Arch-Angels, and all the Courtiers of Heaven ſhall call us Brethren, and bid us welcome to their Maſter's Joy; when we ſhall be received into this glorious Society, I ſay, with all the Endearments of ſuch heavenly Lovers, invited to enter into the Choir, and have our Harps ſtrung by their celeſtial Singers, to join with them in aſcribing [k] Power and Riches, and Wiſdom, and Strength, and Honour, and Glory and Bleſſing, unto him that ſitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever: Such a mighty Acceſſion will all this be to our Happineſs, that we may omit to mention the great Alteration which will then paſs upon our Bodies, when [l] there ſhall be no Wants or Infirmities, no Importunity of Appetite, no Unevenneſs of Paſſion, no Hunger or Thirſt, no Wearineſs or Sleep, no Pain or Sorrow, no Feebleneſs or Decay, no Sickneſs or Old-Age, no Dying any more, but Beauty for Aſhes, and Joy for Mourning, [m] a Joy, which no Man taketh from us, and a Beauty, which outwears Time itſelf, and [n] ſwallows up Mortality in Life.

THUS we have given a ſhort View, as far as we have Light from Scripture, of the Glories and Beatitudes of the World to come: And, from the whole, we may obſerve, that Holineſs is neceſſary to our future Happineſs; or, in other Terms, that it is impoſſible to enjoy Heaven, without an heavenly Diſpoſition. [o] For, ſuppoſing it ſhould pleaſe Almighty God to take us all up immediately into the higheſt Heavens, and there place us around our Bleſſed Saviour; all ſuch as are real Saints among us, as love God above all Things, and have prepared their Minds for ſpiritual Enjoyments, Holineſs neceſſary to the Enjoyment of Heaven.

[f] Heb. xii. 22, &c. [g] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Part I. [h] Matth. xiii. 41, 42. [i] Scott, ibid. [k] Rev. v. 12, 13. [l] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III. [m] John xvi. 22. [n] 2 Cor. v. 4. [o] Beveridge, on the Happineſs of the Saints in Heaven.

ments, how glad would they be to ſee their Redeemer ſhining in all his Glory? How ſuddenly ſhould they ſtrike up with the Choir of Heaven, in ſinging forth the Praiſes of him that brought them thither? What infinite Pleaſure would they take in the Place, the Employment, the Company, and every Thing they ſee there? But as for others, who are ſtill in their Sins, and mind only earthly Things, how ſad and diſconſolate would they be? They would wonder to ſee the Saints ſo pleaſant and joyful; for, as for their Parts, they would ſee nothing there to take Delight in; in the Midſt of Light, they would be ſtill in Darkneſs, and in Sorrow, in the Midſt of Joys. They could not hear the heavenly Muſick, or if they did, it would ſound harſh, and be all Diſcords to them: They could not taſte thoſe ſpiritual Dainties, or if they did, they could not reliſh or find any Sweetneſs in them: They could not ſee the Face of God, or if they did, they would not be pleaſed, but terrified and confounded at it; and all this, for want of a Principle of true Grace and Holineſs, without which a blind Man may as well delight in Pictures, the deaf Man in Muſick, or a brute Beaſt in Metaphyſicks, as Men of ſuch Tempers either in Heaven, or in God himſelf. [p] The Truth is, God, in his Wiſdom, hath ſo ordered the Matter, ſo admirably contrived our Nature and our Duty, that Virtue and Happineſs, Grace and Glory are one and the ſame Thing, differing only in the Circumſtances, and ſeveral Proſpects, we conſider and view them under. The good Man begins his Heaven upon Earth, and finiſhes there, what was imperfect here: For the more he maſters his ſenſual Appetites, and gets above the World, the more he improves his Mind in the Study of Religion, and acquaints himſelf with God by frequent Prayer and heavenly Meditation, the more he is ſpiritualized, and, as the Apoſtle expreſſes it, made meet to be Partaker of the Inheritance with the Saints in Light. [q] As ever therefore we deſire to go to Heaven, when we die, we muſt take Care, while we live, to get our Hearts purged from all corrupt Affections, our Minds enlightened, and our Souls ſanctified throughout, that ſo we may go out of this World rightly diſpoſed and fitted to behold the Light of God's Countenance, to ſolace ourſelves in it, as the higheſt Object of our Deſires, and to let in the Beams of Happineſs, which are eternally proceeding from it, according to our ſeveral Capacities of receiving them: For ſo we are led to affirm,

Different Degrees of Glory and Happineſs in Heaven, proved from Reaſon,

II. THAT there will be different Degrees of Glory and Happineſs in the other World, according to our different Improvements in this. And, indeed, if a pure ſpiritual Mind, free from all carnal Luſts and Paſſions, be abſolutely neceſſary to put us into a fit Capacity of reliſhing thoſe refined Joys that are above; it will from hence naturally follow, that the more ſpiritualized, raiſed, and exalted our Diſpoſitions are, the quicker, the ſtronger, the more pleaſing will be our Taſte of thoſe heavenly Pleaſures, and, conſequently, the greater, the more enlarged and comprehenſive will our Happineſs be. God, indeed, is the common Fountain of the Celeſtial Bliſs, and the Emanations of Happineſs, from him, are diffuſed every where, and, perhaps, fill all the Saints alike; but then, though every Capacity ſhall be full, yet, their Capacities being unequal, ſome may receive a greater Meaſure and Proportion than others; juſt as the Light of the Sun is the ſame, and yet its Rays are received in a greater or leſs Quantity, according to the Make and Texture of the Body it ſhines upon. [r] Chriſt, it is true, is the common Saviour of all, his Blood is alike ſufficient, and was alike ſhed for the Redemption of all; but it does not therefore follow, that the Rewards, purchaſed by that Blood, will alike be beſtowed on all, any more, than that the ſame Degrees of Holineſs and Sanctification will, through the Efficacy of that Blood, be alike communicated to all. The Man, who by a ſincere, tho' late Repentance, has pacified his offended God, for the many Errors of a miſ-ſpent Life, ſhall never have his Sins riſe up againſt him, in order to his Condemnation; and yet it is incongruous to ſay, that theſe Sins will not leſſen his Reward, will not diminiſh his Happineſs, will not detract from his Glory; nor can it be conſiſtent with the Righteouſneſs of the Judge of all the Earth, to place ſuch an one in the ſame State of Eminence with thoſe, who, by an early Piety and uninterrupted Courſe of Righteouſneſs, have excelled in the Work of the Lord; or of thoſe, who, [s] in Labours more abundant, in Stripes above Meaſure, in Priſons more frequent, in Deaths often, [t] have ſuffered the Loſs of all Things, and counted them but Dung, that they might win Chriſt.

THE

[p] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.
[q] Beveridge, on the Happineſs of the Saints in Heaven.
[r] Smalridge's Sermons.
[s] 2 Cor. xi. 23.
[t] Phil. iii. 8.

THE Lord in the Vineyard indeed, as he is repreſented in the Parable, paid all the Labourers alike, [u] making thoſe, who had wrought there but one Hour, equal unto them who had bore the Heat and Burden of the Day: But, if we look into this Parable, we ſhall ſoon find, that the Pay, here given, muſt neceſſarily be underſtood of the Gift of Grace, and cannot poſſibly be extended to the Gift of Glory; becauſe we find, that it is given to the Envious and Unthankful, even to thoſe, of whom it is expreſſly ſaid, that they are not choſen. * The Scope of the Parable, in ſhort, is deſigned to juſtify God's Proceedings, in the Diſpenſation of his Grace towards the Church of the Jews, and that of the Gentiles; the latter of which was not called, till a long Time after the former, and yet was made equal in the Bleſſings and Benefits of the Goſpel-Covenant; which has nothing at all to do with the Matter now in Queſtion. But, even admitting the analogical Senſe of the Parable, all that we can infer from it is this,——[x] That Men of conſtant Holineſs ſhall go to Heaven, and ſo ſhall ſincere Penitents; that the Martyrs, and all that ſuffered much in the Profeſſion of the Faith, ſhall be crowned, and ſo ſhall all Chriſtians, who lived well, and died in Peace: But whether all their Crowns ſhall be equally bright; whether their Degrees of Glory and Felicity ſhall be the ſame, this the Parable, in its moſt extenſive Application, acquaints us not with, and many other Paſſages of Scripture there are, which acquaint us with the very contrary.

FOR when our Saviour informs us, that [y] in his Father's Houſe are many Manſions, and ſome of the higheſt Places, in thoſe heavenly Habitations, the Prophet Daniel hath appropriated to thoſe, who convert Sinners from the Error of their Ways; for [z] they that be wiſe, ſaith he, ſhall ſhine as the Brightneſs of the Firmament, and they that turn many to Righteouſneſs, as the Stars for ever and ever; when Chriſt addreſſes himſelf to his Apoſtles in theſe remarkable Words, [a] Ye are they, that have continued with me in my Temptations, and I appoint unto you a Kingdom, that ye may [b] eat and drink at my Table, in my Kingdom, and [c] ſit on Thrones; judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael; when the Sons of Zebedee requeſted of their Maſter, that [d] they might ſit, the one on his Right-Hand, and the other on his Left, in his Kingdom; and our Saviour, though he does not promiſe this Degree of Eminence to them, does yet plainly aſſert, that it ſhall be given to thoſe of his Followers, for whom it is prepared of his Father; from theſe, and ſeveral other Paſſages in Scripture, we may certainly be allowed to infer thus much, that there are ſome particular Marks and Inſtances of Glory, wherewith the Apoſtles, and thoſe, that imitate them in the Apoſtolic Office, wherewith Perſons of uncommon Zeal, and more eminent Sanctity, ſhall be honoured above other Chriſtians. Though therefore all [e] the Righteous ſhall ſhine in the Kingdom of their Father; yet [f] as there is one Glory of the Sun, and another Glory of the Moon, and another Glory of the Stars, (for one Star differeth from another Star in Glory) ſo alſo is the Reſurrection of the Dead: Thoſe, that are raiſed to everlaſting Life, ſhall indeed all be glorious, but ſtill the Glory of ſome ſhall be greater, than that and from Scripture.

[u] Matth. xx. 12.

* Bull's Sermons, Vol. II. and Stanhope's Sermons, on ſeveral Occaſions.

[x] Stanhope, ibid.

[y] John xiv. 2. The Multitude of Manſions in Heaven ſeems hardly intelligible, without admitting a Difference of Degrees in the heavenly Glory. For, if all the Saints ſhall be placed in one and the ſame Degree or Station of Bliſs, they would have all one and the ſame Manſion in Heaven; but in our heavenly Father's Houſe there are μοναὶ πολλαὶ, many Manſions, ſome higher, ſome lower, according to the Meaſure of Proficiency in Virtue, to which Men have attained in this Life. So Clemens Alexandrinus, There are with the Lord many Rewards and Manſions, according to the Proportion of Mens Lives, Strom. iv. So Tertullian, how are there many Manſions with the Father, but according to the Variety of Mens good Works? And ſo the Fathers of the Church afterwards alledged this Text againſt Jovinian, who held a Parity of Rewards in the Life to come. Biſhop Bull's Sermons, Vol. I.

[z] Dan. xii. 3.

[a] Luke xxii. 28, &c.

[b] It may ſeem a little ſtrange, that our Saviour ſhould here promiſe his Apoſtles the Privilege of eating and drinking at his Table, when it is certain, that, in the Kingdom of Heaven, their glorified Natures would ſtand in Need of no ſuch Repaſts. But this, we muſt know, is ſpoken in Alluſion to temporal Princes, who make it a particular Mark of Diſtinction, and a Note of the Perſon's Eminence, whoſoever they pleaſe to receive to their Table. Whitby, in Locum.

[c] To ſit on Thrones, judging (or governing, or being over) the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, is a metaphorical Expreſſion, taken, as Grotius well obſerves upon the Place, from the ancient State of the Kingdom of Iſrael, in which οἱ φυλαρχοι, the Princes, or Heads of the Tribes, came neareſt in Dignity to the King's Majeſty, and, in the publick Aſſemblies, ſat next the Royal Throne, in Chairs of State made of Ivory.

[d] Mark x. 37, 40. To ſit at the Right-Hand of a King, according to the Eaſtern Cuſtom, is the very next Place of Dignity to the King himſelf. Hence Solomon, ſitting on his Royal Throne, commanded his Mother to ſit on his Right-Hand, 1 Kings ii. 19. conſequently, the third Place of Dignity in the Kingdom is deſcribed by ſitting on the King's Left-Hand: For accordingly, as any Man was greater in the Kingdom, ſo, in the publick Aſſemblies, he ſat nearer to the King's Perſon. Bull's Sermons, Vol. II.

[e] Matth. xiii. 43.

[f] 1 Cor. xv. 41, 42.

that of others; and upon this Principle the Apoſtle earneſtly preſſes the Corinthians to a liberal Contribution to their diſtreſſed Brethren; [g] he that ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap alſo ſparingly, and he that ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap alſo bountifully, whereby, without all Manner of Doubt, he means, that the greater Charity we exerciſe in this World, the greater Happineſs and Felicity attends us in the next; and ſo, on the contrary, the thinner our Seeds of Charity are ſown here, the leſſer will our Harveſt of Glory be hereafter.

Upon what Account this is ſo.

IN the Parable of the Talents, wherein our Lord, under the Similitude of [h] a certain Nobleman going into a far Country, allots a different Reward to every Man, in Proportion to the different Improvement he made of the Talent committed to his Care, we have not only a Diſtinction made between two Servants, though both confeſſedly juſt and faithful to their Lord, but are directed likewiſe to that Rule and Meaſure, according to which their different Rewards were proportioned. To the good Servant, whoſe Pound had gained him ten Pounds, our Lord thus addreſſes himſelf; Well done, thou good Servant, becauſe thou haſt been faithful in a very little, have thou Authority over ten Cities. And when the ſecond came, ſaying, Lord, thy Pound hath gained five Pounds, he ſaid likewiſe to him, be thou alſo over five Cities. Both the Servants, as we are told, were diligent, and both therefore were rewarded for their Diligence: But the Diligence of the one had far exceeded that of the other, and his Reward therefore was proportionably greater. Great Caution however is to be obſerved, how we expreſs ourſelves upon this Subject; for when we ſay, with the holy Scriptures, [i] that every Man ſhall receive his own Reward, according to his own Labour, we do not mean, that there will be an exact Proportion between a Man's Labour and his Reward; for it is certain, that the higheſt Degree of Grace can never equal the loweſt Degree of Glory, nor can the beſt of Saints, by all that he can do, deſerve ſo much, as to be a Door-Keeper in the Houſe of his heavenly Father: But the Proportion here is between the Work and Reward of one good Man, compared with the Work and Reward of another, and in this Compariſon the Proportion is exact.

In what Senſe Men are rewarded according to their Works.

"SUPPOSE, for Inſtance, (as [k] a learned Father of the Church makes the Simi-
"litude) three Huſbandmen were employed in cultivating and dreſſing the Field
"of ſome great Prince, one for one Day only, another for three Days, and a third
"for ſix Days. Now, if the Prince, out of his Royal Bounty, ſhall give to the firſt
"a thouſand Talents, to the ſecond three thouſand Talents, and to the third ſix
"thouſand; it is evident, that the Reward is meaſured out to each of thoſe accord"ing to the different Meaſure of their Labour; but yet it were ridiculous to con"clude from hence, that the Labour of him who wrought ſix Days deſerved ſix
"thouſand, yea, or ſo much as ſix Talents, yea, or ſo much as one Talent, and ſo
"in the reſt. And in like Manner may we conceive of the divine Remuneration.
"For although we affirm, that God meaſures out to every Man a different Degree
"of Glory, according to the different Meaſure of his Labour; yet it doth not follow
"from hence, that between the Work and the Reward of one and the ſame Man,
"there is an Equality of Proportion, but only, that between the different Works
"and Rewards of different Men, there is an Equality of Proportionality: So that "if the Work of any Man be compared with his Reward, which is eternal Life,
"we may preſently diſcern an infinite Inequality between them; but, if the Works
"of different Men and the Rewards of different Men be compared according "to the Degrees of Eminence in the ſame eternal Life, there will appear an "exact Proportionality." And in this Senſe ſhall every Man be rewarded according to his Labour.

[l] "PROPERLY ſpeaking indeed, and in ſtrict Juſtice, the moſt perfect Man upon Earth cannot be ſaid to merit the very loweſt Degree of Glory: The leaſt Reward in Heaven will be an Happineſs that is eternal; and there is no Proportion between an eternal Reward and a ſhort momentary Service, though it be that of the beſt of Saints. Our Holineſs itſelf, as well as that eternal Life, is the free Gift of God, and the good Actions we do, we thankfully aſcribe to his aſſiſting Grace; but though we dare not preſume to appeal to his Juſtice, we may, with an humble Confidence, rely upon his Mercy; though we cannot juſtly challenge any Reward from God, yet God, we know, will not forget our Work and Labour of Love; though our good Works

[g] 2 Cor. ix. 6. [h] Luke xix. 12. [i] 1 Cor. iii. 8. [k] Davenant, de Juſt. Act.
[l] Smalridge's Sermons.

Works are not the Cauſe, for the Sake of which, yet they are the Conditions, upon the Performance of which, we ſhall receive our Recompence; though, after all we can do, we are ſtill but unprofitable Servants, yet, if we do all we can, we ſhall in no wiſe loſe our Reward.

Each Saint ſhall be ſatisfied with his own Degree of Happineſs.

THUS it appears, that the Saints in Heaven, compared with each other, ſhall have different Degrees in Happineſs, proportioned to their different Improvements here: But what is the particular Happineſs of the State, [m] this Difference ſhall occaſion no Uneaſineſs, but to every Saint his own Degree ſhall be a ſatisfactory Beatitude. In this lower World, indeed, the Narrow-hearted are apt to repine at each other's Gain, and the Ambitious to envy the Promotion or Splendor, which ſome poſſeſs above others; but where there is no Envy, (and ſure we are, that there can be none in thoſe peaceful Regions, which are above) the great Happineſs of another can by no Means diminiſh any one's Joy, nor can it be feared, that the exalted Bliſs of others ſhould impair or diſturb the Felicity of any the leaſt Saint, in that bleſſed Place, where every one will reliſh his own Happineſs the more, becauſe others abound in theirs. Tho' therefore there will be many Veſſels, (to make Uſe of a common Similitude) of different Sizes and Capacities, to receive thoſe Rivers of Pleaſure, which flow from the Right-hand of God, yet all of them ſhall be full. He that gathered much of the Manna in the Wilderneſs, had nothing over, and he that gathered little, had no Lack; and ſo it ſhall be here: They that are ſeated in the higheſt Manſions of Glory, ſhall not look down with Contempt on thoſe that are beneath them, nor ſhall theſe lift up an envious Eye towards the other, but without any the leaſt Pride, or Grudging, or Diſcontent, they ſhall love and take delight in one another, and, by an inexpreſſible Union of ſublimated Charity, make each, what the other enjoys, his own: And ſo altogether, tho' in different Notes, compoſe one ſweet harmonious Concert, in the Praiſes of God, the Fountain of their Bliſs.

Other curious Queſtions relating to that State.

BUT over and above the Celebration of the Praiſes of God, [n] what the particular Work and Employment of the Saints in Heaven will be, and in what Manner God will communicate himſelf to them; whether our glorified Bodies will have the ſame Senſes and Affections, or altogether different; be able to take in Objects, at never ſo diſtant a View, or, in ſome Meaſure, be limited in their Operations, as they are now; [o] whether our Souls will be able to comprehend the Eſſences and Ideas of Things, as they are contained in the Divine Underſtanding, and behold every Thing there as in a Glaſs; whether we ſhall perfectly ſee the intellectual Syſtem of the World, I mean, all the Orders of Angels together, and what Kind of Converſation we ſhall have with them, as well as how far we ſhall know, and be known by one another; and whether, in any particular Manner, we ſhall ſtand affected to thoſe, that were our Friends, and Relations, and Acquaintance in this Life: Theſe, and perhaps a thouſand Things more, which may concern the Glories of that State, are Queſtions that we can come to no certain Reſolution in. The Revelation, we have of theſe Matters, is delivered to us in general Terms, and whoever pretends to deduce Particulars from it, runs a manifeſt Hazard of being deceived in his Conjectures. Since, however, we are aſſured of this Truth, [p] that every Degree of Grace, which we advance to here, will raiſe us to a Degree higher in a future Glory, and the greater and more induſtrious our Labour in God's Service has been in this Life, the greater and more copious and abundant ſhall our Reward be in the Life to come; the Senſe of this, one would think, ſhould rouſe and awaken us out of the Remiſſneſs and Negligence in Religion, that too often ſeizeth us, and animate us to generous Attempts, even of heroic Virtue, which, in this degenerate Age, are derided as romantic Enterprizes. At leaſt, it ſhould often call us from our idle Solitude, or unprofitable Society, to our Prayers and Devotions, and make us readily embrace, nay, ſtudiouſly ſeek after frequent Opportunities of doing Good, [q] that ſo an Entrance may be adminiſtered to us abundantly into the everlaſting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

[m] Bull's Sermons, Vol. I. [n] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. III. [o] Burnet, de Statu Mort. & Reſur.
[p] Bull, ibid. [q] 2 Pet. i. 11.

SECT. II.

Of HELL.

The Nature of Hell.

THAT there is a particular Place, appointed by Almighty God, for the Reception and Punishment of the Wicked, both Men and Angels, and therefore called [a] a Place of Torment; that this Place is at a wide Remove from the Supreme Heaven, the Court of God, and Habitation of the Righteous, and therefore called [b] the Abyss, and bottomless Pit; that it is a Place of exquisite and most intolerable Torments, and therefore called [c] Tophet, in the Old Testament, and [d] Gehenna in the New; that those Torments are inflicted with actual Fire, and other horrid Ingredients, and therefore the Place is called a [e] Furnace of Fire, and a [f] Lake of Fire and Brimstone, where there is [g] Smoke and [h] Darkness, [i] utter Darkness, and [k] Blackness of Darkness, &c. and that this State of Punishment is to be eternal, without any Mitigation, or Hopes of End, and therefore the Fire, wherein the Wicked suffer, is called [l] everlasting, [m] never to be quenched, but enduring [n] for ever and ever: These are Truths as obvious, as any that occur in the Word of God, and may therefore justly occasion our Wonder, why either the Reality of the Place, or the Materiality of the Fire therein, should be called in Question. To satisfy such Questions, however, after we have, 1. Proved the Reality of Hell, and mentioned some Conjectures, where possibly its Place may be; we shall, 2. Attempt a short Description of the Miseries therein comprized; and then, 3. Consider the Degrees of its Punishments, and the Reasons of their Eternity.

The Reality of its Fire.

I. WHEN our Blessed Saviour put forth a Parable to the Multitude, concerning [o] the good Seed sown by the Owner of the Ground, and the Tares sown by the Enemy, and his Disciples requested him to explain it unto them; the Explanation which he gives them is this:——He that soweth the good Seed, is the Son of Man; the Field is the World; the good Seed are the Children of the Kingdom; but the Tares are the Children of the wicked One; the Enemy, that sowed them, is the Devil; the Harvest is the End of the World, and the Reapers are the Angels. As therefore the Tares are gathered and burnt in the Fire, so shall it be at the End of the World: The Son of Man shall send forth his Angels, and they shall gather out of his Kingdom all Things that offend, and them which do Iniquity, and shall cast them into a Furnace of Fire, there shall be Wailing and Gnashing of Teeth. [p] Now, when a Parable is expounded, it is natural to suppose, that it should be done in plain and proper Language, otherwise the Explication will breed a greater Confusion in the Minds of the Hearers, than the Parable itself: Consequently, the Fire, into which the Workers of Iniquity are cast, must be a Reality, and not a parabolical Allusion, because by it the Obscurity of the Parable is explained. In like Manner, when our Blessed Lord, describing the great and terrible Day of Judgment, tells us, that his final Sentence upon the Wicked will be, [q] Depart from me, ye Cursed, into everlasting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels; we cannot but suppose, that as these Words are the Sentence of a wise and impartial Judge, they ought to be delivered in as plain and intelligible Terms as possible. The Intent of Allegories and Parables is to hide the Meaning of the Speaker, and darken the Understanding of the Hearer, [r] that seeing he might see, and not perceive,

[a] Luke xvi. 28. [b] Rev. ix. 2. and xx. 3.

[c] Isa. xxx. 33. Tophet was a Place in the Valley of Hinnom, near Jerusalem, where the idolatrous Israelites made their Children pass through the Fire to Moloch, 2 Kings xxviii. 10. Jer. vii. 31. It has its Name (for Tophet is from Tophash, pulsavit; or from Taph, Tympanum) from the Drum and Tabret, which the Idolaters played upon, all the Time the Children were sacrificed to Moloch, that the tender Parents might not hear their Cries. And from hence we may gather, upon what Account this Place was afterwards made Use of by the Jews, to set forth the Torments of Hell-Fire, and the horrid Cries and Groans of those that suffered there.

[d] Matth. v. 22, 29, 30. Chap. x. 28, &c. Γέεννα is derived from Hinnom, i. e. the Valley of Hinnom, mentioned just now; which being abused to such execrable Purposes, was by King Josiah turned into a Dunghil, where dead Carcasses were disposed of, and Malefactors buried or burnt, (2 Kings xxiii. 10. 2 Chron. xxviii. 3.) for which Purpose there being always a Fire kept, it still continued to be thought, by the Jewish Doctors, a very fit Emblem of Hell. Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II.

[e] Matth. xiii. 42, 50. [f] Rev. xix. 20. [g] Ibid. xiv. 11. [h] Jude, ver. 6. [i] Matth. viii. 12. [k] Jude, ver. 13. [l] Matth. xxv. 41. [m] Mark ix. 43. [n] Rev. xiv. 11.

[o] Matth. xiii. 24, &c. [p] Swinden's Enquiry into the Nature and Place of Hell. [q] Matth. xxv. 41.

[r] Mark iv. 12.

perceive, and hearing he might hear, and not underſtand: But the Laſt Judgment of Chriſt is for a quite different Purpoſe, viz. that the whole World may not only hear it with their Ears, but underſtand it too with their Hearts, and ſee it executed with their Eyes. It is evident therefore, that the general and final Sentence, by which the Wicked ſhall be judged to everlaſting Fire, muſt have in it no Figures or Allegories, but plain and proper Speech only; becauſe the Guilty muſt thereby perceive what their Doom is; the Angels, who are the Miniſters of that Judgment, muſt know what they are to execute; and the Saints, who ſhall concur with Chriſt in Judgment, diſcern what they are to aſſent to and approve.

VEXATION of Mind, and the Burnings of an enraged Conſcience, will certainly be no ſmall Part of the Puniſhment of the Damned; but if, by unquenchable Fire, we are to underſtand nothing more than this, we ſhall be under ſome Difficulty to make tolerable Senſe of theſe Words of our Lord, [s] It is better for thee to enter into the Kingdom of God with one Eye, than, having two Eyes, to be caſt into Hell Fire, where the Worm dieth not, and the Fire is not quenched. If the Worm and the Fire, I ſay, be all one, and mean no more than the Remorſe, and Uneaſineſs of Mind, that attends on Guilt, beſides the Indecency of the Tautology, how forced and unnatural muſt it be to ſay, that it is better to enter into the Kingdom of God with one Eye, than, having two, to go into the eternal Puniſhment of the Wicked, into Vexation of Mind, that ſhall never ceaſe, where their Vexation of Mind never ceaſeth? This muſt be the Conſtruction of the Words, if we take Fire in a figurative Senſe: And therefore to abſolve our Lord from the Imputation of any ſuch Abſurdity, the Γέεννα τῦ πυρός muſt denote the Place of Torment, and the Fire itſelf be taken in a literal, not a figurative Senſe: For ſo the venerable Bede, upon the Text, acquaints us, that by the WORM, Chriſt noteth the too late Repentance of Sin, which will never ceaſe to bite the Conſcience of the Damned in their Torments, as by FIRE, the Burning of Hell; that the Fire might be a Torment outwardly raging, and the Worm a Grief inwardly accuſing.

How immaterial Beings may be tormented with Fire.

How outward Fire may burn and continue for ever, without Impair and Diminution, and affect immaterial Beings with Pain and Anguiſh, are Queſtions eaſily reſolved, if we do but once conſider the Hand, that hath prepared it, which can give it a Quality quite different from culinary Fire, viz. not to conſume, but repair what it preyeth upon, ſince [t] the Breath of the Lord, like a Stream of Brimſtone, doth kindle it continually. And though it be difficult to conceive, how material Fire can act upon ſpiritual Subſtances; yet, if we conſider what Pain is, we ſhall ſoon find, that pure Spirits are as capable of it, as Spirits in Conjunction with Bodies. [u] The human Soul, in its own Nature, is as much a Spirit as Angels, yet it has a painful Senſation of Fire, or any other afflicting Evil, that ſtrikes upon the Senſes. It muſt be owned, however, that it is not the Body only that feels Pain; it paſſes through the Body to the Soul; and many Times, when the Soul is employed in a ſtrong Diverſion of Thought, the Body becomes inſenſible of it. Now, if God, by a natural Conſtitution, has ordered, that the Body, touched and moved after ſuch and ſuch a Manner, ſhould excite a painful Senſe in the Soul; what ſhould hinder, but that he may have likewiſe ordained, that Devils ſhould feel the Impreſſion of material Fire, in the Place which he hath appointed for their Confinement?

That there is a Hell at preſent.

WHETHER, from the Beginning of Things, and at the firſt Revolt of the Apoſtate Angels, God appointed a certain Place for their Confinement, as well as for the Puniſhment of thoſe wicked Souls, which ſucceſſively depart this Life; or whether they are both permitted to roam, but under ſome proper Reſtriction and Limitation, and, till the Day of Judgment, are ſubjected to no other Pains, but what are mental, i. e. ſuch as ariſe from Grief and Deſpair, and dire Expectations, has been a Matter of ſome Debate among the Curious. The Devils, indeed, who had entered into the two Gergaſens, cried out to our Saviour, as he was going to diſpoſſeſs them, * What have we to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the Time? Which Words ſeem to imply, that the Time appointed for their Puniſhment was not yet come. But when it is conſidered, that theſe very Devils beſought our Saviour, [x] that he would not command them to go out into the Deep, εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον, whereby all Interpreters underſtand Hell; when it is conſidered, that they are ſaid to be [y] reſerved in everlaſting Chains of Darkneſs, unto the

[s] Mark ix. 47, 48.
[x] Luke viii. 31.
[t] Iſa. xxx. 33.
[y] Jude ver. 6.
[u] Bates, of Hell.
* Matth. viii. 29.

the Judgment of the great Day; and the Fire, which the Wicked are to ſuffer, is ſaid to be originally prepared for them; we cannot but conclude, that, even at this Time, there is a local Hell, the Place of their Confinement, though not of their ultimate Puniſhment; where they ſuffer much, but not all that they are to ſuffer; for that is not to be inflicted, until the Coming of the univerſal Judge; when, together with him, as the prophetick Book expreſſes it, [z] Fire ſhall come down from God out of Heaven, and devour the Wicked, and the Devil, that deceived them, ſhall be caſt into the Lake of Fire and Brimſtone, where the Beaſt and the falſe Prophet are, and ſhall be tormented Day and Night for ever and ever. But, in what Part of the World this Lake and burning Abyſs is ſituate, the Conjectures of the Learned have been various.

The Place of Hell, whether in the Center of the Earth,

[a] THAT there are many great Cavities in the Earth, ſtored with Fire, and all Kinds of combuſtible Matter, is manifeſt from thoſe terrible Eruptions, which burning Mountains are known to make, and thoſe Rivers of liquid Fire, which break out of their Bowels, or are ſpewed out of their Mouths. From this Phænomenon moſt of the Ancients were of Opinion, that at the Center of the Earth, there was a certain inexhauſtible Treaſure of Fire, which fed all theſe Vulcanos, and was itſelf the Place of Hell: And for their Confirmation in this, they had not only the Conſent of moſt Philoſophers, both Greek and Latin, but, in ſome Meaſure, the Teſtimony of Scripture, which repreſents Hell, as a [b] Lake of Fire, and a [c] low Place beneath the Earth. But, on the contrary, others have imagined, that the Center of the Earth is filled with Water, rather than Fire, becauſe the Pſalmiſt declares, [d] that God founded the Earth upon the Seas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the Floods. [e] It is certainly true, that Fire cannot ſubſiſt without Air to ſuſtain it, as well as Fewel to feed it; and therefore allowing, that there is a ſufficient Quantity of combuſtible Matter in the Heart of the Earth, yet how the Air ſhould penetrate ſo far, and ſo eaſily, conſidering the vaſt Thickneſs of the ſolid Part of the Earth, as to be able to ſupport the Violence and Rapidity of theſe everlaſting Flames, is inconceivable: Nor can we imagine, that the Center of the Earth can be ſpacious enough to contain thoſe Myriads of fallen Angels, and innumerable Company of the Sons and Daughters of Men, who ſhall be deſtined to the infernal Priſon.

or in the Sun,

UPON theſe Preſumptions ſome have forſaken the common Opinion, and from the Nature of the Body of the Sun, its Magnitude, and Poſition, have deviſed a new Hypotheſis, which makes it to be the Seat of Hell. [f] That the Body of the Sun is Fire, appears from the intenſe Heat which it darteth; that it is of ſufficient Bigneſs to contain all Apoſtate Angels, as well as all the Sons and Daughters of Perdition, the Computation of the moſt ſkilful Aſtronomers of this Age, who make it more than eleven hundred thouſand Times bigger than the Earth, may convince us; and that, according to the Copernican Syſtem, which ſuppoſes the Sun, and not the Earth, to be placed in the Center of the World, the Empyrean Heaven is at the fartheſt Diſtance, and moſt direct Oppoſition to the Sun, (which makes this Opinion ſomewhat more tolerable) cannot be denied: But then conſidering, that ſo bright and radiant a Body cannot well be thought the proper Manſion of Darkneſs and utter Darkneſs, as Hell is deſcribed to be; and among the many Uſes, for which God ordained this bright Luminary, no Mention is made of its being deſigned for the Puniſhment of the Wicked: Nay, conſidering withal, that the Devil and his Angels are ſo far from being confined to this, or any other determinate Place, that he is repreſented, as the Prince of the Power of the Air, i. e. the Chief or General, of the whole Army of evil Spirits, that frequently range up and down in the Air; and not in the Air only, [z] Rev. xx. 9, 10.

[a] It is very wonderful what Alphonſus Borellus, a learned Mathematician at Piſa, who, after the great Eruption in the Year 1669, went into Sicily, while the Fact was freſh, to view and ſurvey what Ætna had done, tells us of that Matter, viz. That the Quantity of Matter thrown out of the Mountain, at that Time, amounted to ninety three Millions, eight hundred thirty-eight Thouſand, ſeven Hundred and fifty cubical Paces; which, had it been extended in Length upon the Surface of the Earth, at the Breadth and Depth of three Feet, would reach farther than ninety-three Millions of Paces, which is more than four Times the Circuit of the whole Earth, taking a Thouſand Paces to a Mile. All this Matter, it is true, was not actually inflamed or liquid Fire, but ſixty Million Paces of it, as the ſame Author computes, were ſo, and came out of the Mouth of the Pit in that Form. This made a River of Fire, ſometimes two Miles broad, according to his Computation, but according to the Obſervation of others, who alſo viewed it, the Torrent of Fire was ſix or ſeven Miles broad, and ſometimes ten or fifteen Fathoms deep, and forced its Way into the Sea near a Mile, preſerving itſelf alive in the Midſt of the Waters. Burnet's Theory, Vol. II. and State of the Dead, Vol. II. Ray, on the Diſſolution of the World, and Swinden's Enquiry into the Nature and Place of Hell.

[b] Rev. xix. 20—xx. 10, 14, 15—xxi. 8. [c] Pſal. lxxxvi. 13. Deut. xxxii. 22. [d] Pſal. xxiv. 2. [e] Swinden, ibid. [f] Swinden, ibid.

only, but on the Earth likewiſe, where, like roaring Lions, they walk up and down, ſeeking whom they may devour; there ſeems to be more Probability in their Opinion, who ſuppoſe, that [g] though the Region of Fire in the Bowels of the Earth be the Place of Hell ſignally ſo called; yet, largely ſpeaking, Hell is not one ſingle Place, ſince not only dark and thick Air, but even the Sea and Waters may ſometimes be the Habitation of the Devils and damned Spirits. They are not ſo confined and ſhut up, but that they have Liberty to leave their capital Priſon ſometimes; nor ſhall they be abſolutely fixed to one Place, till after the Day of Judgment: But, as ſoon as that is paſſed, they ſhall then for ever be confined, not to a narrower Compaſs than before, (for Hell ſhall rather be enlarged) but to a perpetual enduring of the Flames, which they were not obliged to before: For then ſhall the whole Earth and Air be turned into one vaſt Fire, and, while the Saints are making their Way to Heaven with all Speed, the Wicked will be left below to be tormented for ever in this ſpacious Hell; to which Purpoſe a learned Author [h] of our own has thus expreſſed it: "At the Conflagration of the Earth, the great Channel of the Sea "ſhall be left dry, and all the Rivers ſhall be turned into Smoke and Vapour, ſo that "the whole Earth ſhall be enveloped in one entire Cloud of unſpeakable Thick-"neſs, which ſhall cauſe more than Egyptian Darkneſs, clammy, and palpable to "be felt; and this, being added to the choaking Heat and Stench which is there, "will compleat this external Hell: A Place of Torment, appointed not only for the "profane Atheiſt and Hypocrite, but alſo for the Devil and his Angels, where their "Pain will be proportioned, according to the Untamedneſs of their Spirits, and the "Unevenneſs of their perverſe Conſciences."

or rather on the Earth, at its Conflagration.

II. SUPPOSE we, then, a Place wherein dwells nothing but Sorrow and Deſpair, Pain and Horror, and whatever is capable of making it intolerable to be endured, and yet impoſſible to be evaded; a Scene that repreſents no other Proſpect, but the Wrath and Indignation of an angry God: Where thick Darkneſs and the moſt intenſe Heat reign, but no Mixture of Light allowed to the condemned Priſoners, but what may help them to ſee the many hideous and doleful Spectacles, that do ſurround them: Where wicked Men and Devils are blended together in one promiſcuous Crowd, the Wicked entirely given up to the Malice and Inſults of mercileſs Fiends, and, from the preſent State of inſupportable Torments, whetting their Fury againſt their Fellow-ſufferers, in order to maintain a continual Intercourſe of mutual Miſchiefs and Vexations: Where nothing, in ſhort, is heard, but Weeping and Wailing, loud Shrieks and diſmal Groans, ſore Lamentations and dire Upbraidings, occaſioned by the Severity of the Torments they feel, and their former Folly and Madneſs in drawing one another into that deteſted Place: Suppoſe this, I ſay, and we have, in ſome Meaſure, a faint Image and Repreſentation of the diſmal Abode and Converſation, wherein the Wicked is to live for ever.

A Deſcription of Hell, and its ſad Eſtate.

BUT, beſides this phyſical, there is a moral Hell, which the Wicked bears about in his Breaſt, I mean, the Laſhes of his guilty Mind, and thoſe vexatious Paſſions and Reflections, which will follow him into the other World, and there be let looſe upon him with inexpreſſible Vehemence. [i] For, when the Wicked ſhall be no longer cloathed with ſuch Bodies of Fleſh, as now mightily obſtruct and preſs down the Soul in her Operations, but ſhall put on ſpiritual Bodies, Bodies, in which their Souls ſhall freely and uncontroulably exert their utmoſt Powers; their Apprehenſions and Reſentments of Things muſt neceſſarily become vaſtly more quick and vigorous, and, conſequently, the Senſe of their own Folly, Guilt, and Miſery, and their Remorſe and Anguiſh thereupon, exceedingly more keen and poignant, than ever they felt them before. Nor can we forbear thinking, but that the Divine Vengeance will both add new Stings to the inbred ones, and, in ſome ſupernatural Manner, ſo whet and ſharpen the Points of the old ones, that whereas, in this State, their Conſciences did only chaſtiſe them with Whips, in that which is to come, they will chaſtiſe with Scorpions.

SUPPOSE we, then, an innumerable Company of ſelf-condemned Wretches, confined in this direful Place of Torments, with a ready Remembrance of all the abominable Deeds of their former Lives, with a clear Perception of God, the Fountain of Bliſs, and of thoſe eternal Joys in Heaven, which they have loſt, with a [g] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II.

[i] Archbiſhop Dawes's Sermons.
[h] More's Grand Myſtery of Godlineſs, Book VI.

quick Senſe of the Torments they ſuffer, and a ſure Proſpect of their eternal Duration and uninterrupted Continuance; and then conſider, what Shame, and Sorrow, and ſad Remorſe, what Rage, and Fury, and wild Deſpair muſt alternately take Poſſeſſion of their Minds, and make them break out into loud Laments, and ſuch fruitleſs Wiſhes as theſe: [k] "O that I had not given Way to the Spirit of Luſt and Uncleanneſs, of Luxury and Wantonneſs, which betrayed me into innumerable Miſcarriages in my Life! O that I had not followed the Dictates of Malice and Revenge! O that I had never defiled my Lips with profane Swearing and Blaſphemy! O that I had never been unmerciful and uncharitable, that I had never injured or oppreſſed the Poor, but had relieved their Neceſſities, and made them Partakers of my Abundance! Had I done this, and, inſtead of purſuing criminal Pleaſures, made the Salvation of my Soul my Care and Study, I might now, inſtead of frying in theſe Flames, been in yonder bright and glorious Manſions, ſinging Praiſes and Hallelujahs among the bleſſed Saints, and with them, communicating in the Preſence and Enjoyment of God, and his Chriſt. But from thence I am eternally baniſhed: The Gulph, the mighty Gulph, the Decree, the irreverſible Decree of an angry God has made a Separation, which can never be ſurmounted: And here muſt be thy ſad Abode: Theſe Fiends muſt be thy Companions and Tormentors: This Fire, the Element wherein thou muſt live, and this Worm muſt gnaw greedily upon thee for ever. O dreadful Word, for ever! When ten thouſand times ten thouſand Ages are paſt and gone, thy Miſery will be the ſame, and not a Moment nearer its Expiration. All the Sufferings thou canſt endure, in an infinite Succeſſion of Ages, will not appeaſe the enraged Deity, or incline him to relent. To recover his Favour is a Thing impoſſible, and therefore, [l] farewel Hope, and, with Hope, farewel Fear; farewel Remorſe; all Good to me is loſt: Evil, be thou my Good." And thus the wretched Creature goes on, loading himſelf with Curſes and Execrations, envying and raging at the Bleſſed above, reproaching and ſnarling at his Fellow-Sufferers in Hell; and, as he reflects on his loſt Condition, and the unrelenting Wrath of Heaven, raging and blaſpheming even God himſelf. O ſad Eſtate, which turns every Thing into Poiſon, and will make the Wretched curſe the very Fountain of Happineſs, thereby precluding all Hopes of Reconciliation, and perpetuating their Puniſhment for ever!

Different Degrees of Puniſhment in Hell, and upon what Accounts.

III. THESE are ſome of the ſad Ingredients, which will conſtitute the Hell, and forlorn Condition of the Reprobates hereafter; and from hence it will follow, that, though their Puniſhment will be ſevere, yet will it not be in all alike, but differ, in Proportion to the Degree and Aggravations of their Iniquities. * One great Part of the Puniſhment of Hell conſiſts, as we ſaid, in the Remorſe of Conſcience, ariſing from the Senſe of Guilt; and therefore, where the greateſt Guilt is, there muſt be the greateſt Remorſe, i. e. the greateſt Puniſhment from the Senſe of it. Whilſt Men are in this World, indeed, they have a great many Ways to divert theſe bitter Reproaches, there is ſtill room for Hope; and they may ſtill deceive themſelves with the fruitleſs Expectations of a future Repentance and Reformation; but when they are once paſſed into another World, theſe Torments are unallayed and unintermitted: Their Thoughts are always awake, and upon the Stretch, and perpetually employed in the mortifying Conſideration of their own Sin and Madneſs. Now, if the Torments of the Reprobate do, in a great Meaſure, conſiſt in a bitter Reflection upon their own paſt Folly and Ingratitude, the more fooliſh and ungrateful they have been, the more heavily will this Reflection ſit upon them, the more ſenſibly will it touch them, the more grievouſly will it torment them. When they conſider (and they will always be conſidering) thoſe many Opportunities they had of knowing their Duty, and thoſe mighty Aſſiſtances that were afforded them, to enable them to perform it, (a Mercy not equally vouchſafed to all Men) the Senſe of their Miſery muſt needs be increaſed, in Proportion to the Divine Favours and Advantages, which they have ſo wilfully neglected and deſpiſed.

ALL Sinners will, no Doubt, be extremely and inſupportably miſerable, upon the View of their being for ever excluded from the Preſence of God, and from the Fruition of thoſe Pleaſures, that are at his Right-Hand for evermore: But we have no Reaſon to think, that the Senſe of this Loſs will afflict each particular unhappy Soul equally; we have rather ſufficient Grounds to believe, that thoſe, who have been been Aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, and Strangers to the Covenant of Grace, will be leſs tormented by this Conſideration, than thoſe who had the Benefit, either of the Law, or Goſpel, to guide and direct them in the Knowledge of God, and in their Way to Heaven. For how deplorable above Meaſure muſt their Condition be, how particularly ſevere muſt be their Torments, who are conſtantly employed in conſidering, what a fair Capacity they were once in, what particular Opportunities they once had of enjoying that God, and thoſe Pleaſures, which they muſt now loſe for ever? The more frequent Calls and Invitations a Man has had to Repentance here in this World, the more wilfully and preſumptuouſly he hath neglected the Means of Grace, and the more he hath reſiſted the good Motions of the Holy Spirit of God, the greater will his Remorſe be, and the more terrible his Puniſhment; the more will he be torn by the Worm, which never dies, and the more furiouſly will the Fire, which ſhall never be quenched, prey upon him.

[k] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [l] Milton's Paradiſe Loſt. * Smalridge's Sermons.

To be ſhort, all anxious and tormenting Paſſions ſhall be let looſe upon every impenitent and condemned Sinner, and at once diſtract and torment every loſt Soul: But then conſidering, that theſe Paſſions are as much capable of Degrees in the other World, as they are in this, the more ſcandalouſly a Man has miſplaced, or miſemployed them, the more ſinfully he has indulged them, the more irregularly he has abuſed them in this World, the more ſeverely will they uſe him, the more grievouſly will they afflict him, the more intolerably will they torment him hereafter in the next. So that in the very Nature of the Thing, there muſt be an Inequality of future Torments, in Proportion to Mens Guilt, even though the Divine Juſtice did not interpoſe. But when the ſacred Records acquaint us, that [m] the Servant, which knew his Maſter's Will, and did not according to it, ſhall be beaten with many Stripes; and that [n] the Scribes and Phariſees, who devoured Widows Houſes, and, for a Pretence, made long Prayers, ſhall receive the greater Condemnation: When they tell us concerning the wicked Inhabitants of Capernaum, that [o] it ſhall be more tolerable for the Land of Sodom, in the Day of Judgment, than for that City; and concerning the Gueſt, (who, notwithſtanding the Favour vouchſafed him of being admitted to the Marriage-Feaſt, [p] came without a Wedding-Garment) that he was caſt into utter Darkneſs, i. e. not only ſhut out of the Bride-Chamber, as other unworthy Gueſts were, but removed to the fartheſt Diſtance from heavenly Light and Happineſs; we cannot but conclude, that God, who can perfectly diſtinguiſh between different Degrees of Wickedneſs, and is abundantly able to puniſh every Sinner according to his Deſert, whatever Inequalities may be here, is determined in the future State, to proportion the Torment to the Guilt, and to inflict ſuch diſtinct Puniſhments, as are peculiarly due to each particular Offender.

Their Eternity proved from Scripture.

But though there ſhall be different Degrees of Torment in the other World, yet this can be no Conſolation to a thinking Man, when he knows, that the Puniſhment which is denounced, and will certainly be executed upon every impenitent Sinner, (whether he be under the Dominion of the greateſt, or the ſmalleſt Sin) will undoubtedly be eternal. Origen indeed, as [q] it is reported of him, was of a different Opinion: He ſuppoſed, that the Torments of all the Damned, even of the Devils themſelves, after a determinate Number of Years, ſhould have an End. After him, others maintained, that all Mankind, under the Condemnation, ſhould in Time get rid of their Torments, and leave the Devil and his Angels only Heirs of eternal Vengeance; others again, that, if not all Mankind, at leaſt all Chriſtians, ſhould, after a certain Period, be releaſed from the Pains of Hell; and laſtly, others, that, if not all Chriſtians, to be ſure all ſuch of them, as were given to Works of Charity, however great Sinners in other Reſpects, ſhould at length find a Redemption. [r] But theſe Opinions, as they ſeverally aroſe, were ever held heretical, and repugnant to the plain Word of God. And indeed, when we read of [s] everlaſting Burnings, of [t] everlaſting Shame and Contempt, of [u] everlaſting Fire, of * everlaſting Puniſhment, of [x] everlaſting Deſtruction, of [y] eternal Judgment, of [z] eternal Damnation, of [a] the Fire, that is never quenched, of [b] Blackneſs of Darkneſs for ever, and of [c] the Smoke of the Torment of the Wicked, which aſcendeth up for ever and ever, we can hardly ſuppoſe, that ſuch a Variety in Expreſſions, and the ſtrongeſt of their Kind, that the Scripture-Language affords, were ever ſet to denote a temporary Duration only.

The

[m] Luke xii. 47. [n] Matth. xxiii. 14. [o] Ibid. xi. 24. [p] Ibid. xxii. 12, 13.
[q] Aug. de Civit. Dei, Lib. XXI. [r] Archbiſhop Dawes's Sermons. [s] Iſa. xxxiii. 8. [t] Dan. xii. 2.
[u] Matth. xviii. 8. [*] Ibid. xxv. 46. [x] 2 Theſſ. i. 9. [y] Heb. vi. 2. [z] Mark iii. 29.
[a] Ibid. ix. 43. [b] Jude ver. 13. [c] Rev. xiv. 11.

The [d] Words indeed, which we render eternal and everlaſting, for ever, and for ever and ever, are ſometimes in Scripture uſed in a limited Senſe, to ſignify a long Continuance only; but then they are frequently (as where Eternity is attributed to God, and he is ſaid to live for ever and ever, and where eternal Happineſs is promiſed to good Men, that they may be ever with the Lord) uſed in a larger Senſe, and ſo denote an endleſs and indeterminable Duration: And therefore, ſince the very ſame Words and Expreſſions are applied to the Puniſhment of the Wicked in another Life, what ſhould hinder why we may not underſtand them in the ſame Extent? Nay ſince, in one and the ſame Sentence, the Duration of the Puniſhment of the Wicked is expreſſed by the very ſame Term, that is uſed for the Duration of the Happineſs of the Righteous, (for theſe, ſays our Lord, ſpeaking of the Wicked, ſhall go away, εἰς κόλασιν αἰώνιον, into eternal Puniſhment, but the Righteous, εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, into eternal Life) [e] as there is no Ground to ſuppoſe, that the ſame Word, in the ſame Verſe, when applied to Oppoſites, ſhould be taken in a different Senſe; ſo there is great Reaſon to believe, [f] that our bleſſed Lord, in the Application, purpoſely intended to prevent our making any Difference in the Happineſs of the Righteous, or Miſery of the Wicked, as to their Eternity; but that, while we thought ourſelves concerned to believe the one, we might, at the ſame Time, be conſtrained to acknowledge the other.

An Objection. " [g] BUT how much ſoever God has declared in Scripture, that impenitent Sin-
" ners ſhall be everlaſtingly puniſhed, yet theſe Declarations are certainly to be ſo
" mollified and underſtood, as that we may be able to reconcile them with the " eſſential Perfections of the Divine Nature. Now it can in no Senſe be ſaid to " agree with the Juſtice of God, to puniſh temporary Crimes with eternal Puniſh-
" ments, becauſe, if Juſtice always obſerves a Proportion between Offences and Pu-
" niſhments, between temporary Sins, and eternal Puniſhments, there is no Manner
" of Proportion. And if it be ſo hard to reconcile this with the Juſtice of God, it " will be much more ſo, to explain how it can poſſibly conſiſt with that infinite
" Mercy and Goodneſs, which we ſo much aſcribe to him." This is the great Objection againſt the Eternity of Hell-Torments: And to give it a full Solution, we ſhall produce moſt of the Anſwers that have been alledged, in order to prove a Conſiſtency herein with the Divine Juſtice and Goodneſs. And the Anſwered.

1. From the Nature of Sin. FIRST of theſe is taken from the Nature of Sin; which, being an Offence againſt an eternal God, ought, according to the ſtrict Rules of Juſtice, (which require that the Puniſhment of Offenders bear Proportion to the Dignity of the Perſon offended) to have eternal Torments for its Puniſhment. [h] To live for a long while in an habitual Neglect and Contempt of the Sovereign Lord, Creator, and Governor of the World; to ſpend a whole Life, or great Part of it, in defying infinite Power, in diſparaging infinite Wiſdom, in deſpiſing infinite Goodneſs, in hating infinite Perfection; to have no Gratitude for the greateſt of Benefactors, no Duty for the moſt rightful of Governors, no Honour for the moſt glorious of Potentates, no Awe for the moſt tremendous of Majeſties; in one Word, to be continually affronting and provoking every Perſon of the bleſſed Trinity; to deſpiſe the Riches of God's Goodneſs, in ſending his Son into the World to ſeek and ſave us; to trample upon the Son, and to count the Blood of the Covenant, whereby we are ſanctified, an unholy Thing; to do Deſpite unto the Spirit of Grace, and turn the deaf Ear to all his kind Calls and Admonitions; to ſay all at once, to refuſe eternal Happineſs, to fly from every Thing that is good, and purſue every Thing that is evil; what is all this put together, but ſuch a prodigious Maſs of Sin and Folly, ſuch an intolerable Complication of every Thing that is offenſive and provoking to Almighty God, as no Puniſhment can be too great, no Torments of too long a Continuance, to avenge? Even in this Life we ſee, that, for the Support of human Governments, the ſupreme Power has a Right, not only in the Caſe of habitual Offences, but even of ſingle Acts of an heinous Nature, to inflict perpetual Baniſhment or Impriſonment, nay, even perpetual poſitive Torments, ſuch as labouring in the Mines, at the Gallies, or the like: And if it be thought juſt and lawful among Men, for very great and outrageous Crimes, to inflict ſuch Puniſhments upon Offenders, as ſhall affect the whole Duration of their Lives, (which is all of their Beings that we have any Power over) it cannot, ſure, be thought unjuſt in God, to inflict ſuch Puniſhments upon Sinners, as ſhall affect the whole Duration

[d] Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [e] Ray, on the Diſſolution. [f] Archbiſhop Dawes's Sermons.
[g] Archbiſhop Tillotſon, ibid. [h] Archbiſhop Dawes, ibid.

Duration of their Beings, becauſe there is manifeſtly in this Caſe as much Difference in the Crimes, as in the Duration of the Puniſhments. * For, even in human Societies, an Offence againſt a Magiſtrate is of an higher Nature, and attended with more ſevere Puniſhment, than Crimes committed againſt private Perſons; and ſo, as the Magiſtrate is more eminent and honourable, the Injuries and Indignities offered to him, are ſtill eſteemed more heinous, and have greater Puniſhments annexed to them, in Proportion to the Eminency and Honour of the Perſon offended: And therefore, ſince our Sins are Rebellion againſt God, who is infinite in Glory, and Power, and all Perfections, the Guilt of them ſeems to be infinite; and, upon this Account, ſince we are incapable of undergoing Puniſhment infinite in Degree, the infinite Duration of it is no more than proportionate to our Guilt. And as from the Nature of Sin; ſo,

2. FROM the Temper and Diſpoſition of Sinners, the Juſtice and Equity of God's puniſhing them eternally may not improperly be inferred. Sinners indeed are but allowed a temporal Life in the State of Trial and Probation, and, conſequently, have it not in their Power to ſin actually to all Eternity; but, ſince they have contracted and ſettled themſelves into ſuch wicked Habits, as, without the Aſſiſtance of God's Grace (which at laſt may be juſtly denied, where it has been ſo often ſlighted and deſpiſed) do naturally infer a Neceſſity of ſinning for ever; it is highly probable, that were they allowed to live eternally, they would eternally go on in their Sins: Whereupon it becomes the great Juſtice of our Judge, ſays Gregory, [l] that they, who in this Life, would never be without Sin, ſhould, in the next, never be without Puniſhment. 2. From the Nature and Diſpoſition of Sinners.

* THE Heathens indeed ſuppoſed, that the Fire of Hell had a certain cleanſing Quality in it, which, in ſome conſiderable Tract of Time, would purify moſt Sinners (for ſuch as were very flagitious, they thought incapable of Purification) from the Guilt and Pollution of their Offences; but this was a groſs and carnal Conceit. How fit ſoever that Element may be to purge material Things, it can have no ſuch Quality for Souls, immaterial Subſtances, whoſe Droſs and Filth (as I may ſo call it) lies all in the Will and Affections, and can be reached and ſeparated from thence, by no other Fire, but that of the Holy Ghoſt. The only Way, we know of, to remove the Guilt of paſt Tranſgreſſions, is either to repent of them, or to offer a ſufficient Atonement to the divine Juſtice for them: But neither of theſe the Wicked are capable of doing. Among themſelves they cannot find out a Satisfaction, foraſmuch as they are all condemned Perſons, and their utmoſt Suffering is no more, than the juſt Deſert of their Sins: And the general Satisfaction which was made for them, and for all Mankind, this they have ſo often, and ſo ſcornfully rejected, [l] that there remaineth no more Sacrifice for Sin, when Judgment has ſeized them, and a fiery Indignation is conſuming them. Their Torments indeed may make them repent of their Sins, I mean, ſo far repent of them, as to wiſh they had not brought themſelves into that ſad Place, by Reaſon of them. For who can feel Pain, and not wiſh to be out of it? But what is this towards a thorough Reformation of Heart and Life; of hating Vice, and loving Virtue, for their own Sake, and upon Account of the Acceptableneſs of the one, and the Odiouſneſs of the other in the Sight of God, wherein the Nature of true Repentance does conſiſt? Or what Expectation can there be, that when Men are given up to the Tormentor, and kept in Chains of Darkneſs, they will have the leaſt Thoughts of growing better, under the Inſtigations and Tyranny of this great Enemy of God and Goodneſs?

3. THAT it is conſiſtent with infinite Juſtice, to ſet before Men Life and Death, Rewards and Puniſhments, and deal with them according to their own Choice, is too ſelf-evident to need any Proof. [m] If the Rewards indeed, on the one Hand, were not proportionate to the Puniſhment on the other, there might be ſome Plea againſt Providence for making us ſuffer eternal Torments for a ſhort Life of Sin, when there was not an eternal Happineſs propoſed to as ſhort a Life of Virtue; but, ſince the Rewards and Puniſhments are equal, it is not neceſſary, that there ſhould be an exact Proportion between the Offence and Puniſhment, conſidered in itſelf, and without Reſpect had to the Reward, becauſe the Eternity of the Reward anſwers to the Eternity of the oppoſite Puniſhment. If therefore God, in propoſing theſe Rewards and Puniſhments, does but deal with us candidly and ſincerely, we have nothing to blame but ourſelves, if we miſs of the one, and incur the other. Now the Method 3. From God's Proceedings with us.

* Lupton's Sermons.
[l] Heb. x. 26, 27.
[l] Moral. Lib. XXXIV. c. xii.
[m] Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs of Chriſtianity.
* Archbiſhop Dawes's Sermons.

of God's proceeding with us in this Reſpect, is exactly this,—He propoſes everlaſting Rewards, and everlaſting Puniſhments to our Choice; he exhorts us, with the greateſt Earneſtneſs, and moves and aſſiſts us, with the continual Influences of his Grace, to avoid the Puniſhments; and he as earneſtly invites, and as ſufficiently enables us, to obtain the Rewards. Himſelf moſt ſolemnly declares, that he hath no Pleaſure in the Death of the Wicked, but that the Wicked ſhould turn from his Way, and live; for that he is merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in Goodneſs and Truth, keeping Mercy for Thouſands, and forgiving Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion, and Sin; but then it is added, that he will by no Means clear the Guilty, i. e. the wilful and pertinacious Sinner. Thus he exhorts, he invites, he promiſes, he threatens, he promiſes eternal Happineſs, he threatens eternal Miſery, to give all the Diſcouragement to Vice, and all the Inducement to Virtue, that is poſſible; and yet, after all, he takes Men at no Advantage, but makes all reaſonable Allowances, in Conſideration of the Frailty of human Nature, and in Condeſcenſion to their Infirmities: He exacts no abſolute Perfection, or impoſſible Obedience, but only a faithful and ſincere Diligence, or, when we fail therein, Repentance and Reſolutions of more Care and Circumſpection for the future. But if Men either diſbelieve or diſregard theſe Things; if they neither care for God's Promiſes, nor fear his Threatenings; if they refuſe his Calls, and make Scorn of his Invitations, ſo that all the Methods of his Mercy and Goodneſs are loſt upon them; there remains no other Remedy, but that Juſtice ſhould have its Courſe: If, when Men are told ſo long beforehand, what Danger they are running upon, they will continue obſtinate in their Diſobedience, after ſo many Encouragements to Repentance, and ſo long a Courſe of Importunity and Forbearance, they have no Reaſon to complain of the Severity of that Sentence, which ſo often they have been threatened with, and ſo often have deſpiſed. The ſhort is this,——Since the Rewards and Puniſhments are both eternal, the Terms on both Sides are equal; and ſince it is in our Power, by the Help of divine Grace, to avoid the Puniſhments, and obtain the Rewards, the Condition is ſuch, that any wiſe Man would be thankful for it; far from complaining, that the Terrors of Puniſhments are joined to the Encouragement of Rewards; that all Motives concur to make him happy, and that God, in his great Mercy, hath uſed all Means, both inward by his Grace, and outward by his Threats and Promiſes, to bring him to Salvation. For,

4. And the neceſſary Sanctions of his Laws.

FOURTHLY, and laſtly, conſidering the Perverſeneſs of our fallen Nature, and the bewitching Qualities of Sin, God was obliged to annex an eternal Puniſhment to the Violation of his Laws, becauſe a leſſer would not have been a ſufficient Motive to ſecure our Obedience to them. [q] That a leſſer Puniſhment would have been ineffectual, is clear in Experience, ſince we ſee, that the Penalty of eternal ſuffering, even as it is now threatened, fails of its Purpoſe, in the greateſt Part of Sinners: And if Terrors of this Kind will not frighten Men from their wicked Courſes, how can it be expected, that any Denunciations of a leſſer Weight would work in them a ſaving Impreſſion? [r] The only true Meaſure and Proportion then between the Crime and the Puniſhment, is the Suitableneſs of the Puniſhment to enforce the Obedience of the Law. For if the Law be good and neceſſary, and cannot ſo well and ſo effectually be obeyed without a very ſevere Puniſhment to enforce it, the Severity of the Puniſhment is ſo far from being a Cruelty, that it is a juſt and wiſe Proviſion to ſecure Obedience to the Law, and to procure the Benefit deſigned by its Inſtitution. Even human Legiſlators, we ſee, are not ſo ſollicitous in the Sanction of their Laws, to make the Penalty commenſurate to the Offence, as to make it ſufficient to enforce Obedience to the Law; and therefore God, perfectly underſtanding the Temper and Inclination, the Stubbornneſs and Perverſeneſs of Mens Hearts, ſo prone to Vice, and ſo averſe to all that is good, foreſaw that the threatening of a leſs Penalty, than eternal Sufferings, would not prevail with Men to forſake their Sins, in order to attain everlaſting Life.

An Objection.

"BUT though God hath thought fit, in order to deter Men from their Sins, to "threaten at this high Rate, * yet the Power of Execution is ſtill in his own "Hands.

[q] Ray, of the Diſſolution. [r] Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. and Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs, Vol. II.

* Archbiſhop Tillotſon, ibid. 'Tis the Misfortune of the great Man, whoſe Words we have here quoted, that he hath fallen into the very ſame Sentiment, as to this Particular, with Mr Hobbes, who (in Append. ad Leviat.) has this Paſſage: We cannot prove from the Juſtice of God, which hath threatened eternal Torments upon Sinners, that their Torments will really be eternal: For though he is unjuſt, who doth not perform the Good, which he owes to any one, nevertheleſs he, who doth not execute the Evil or Harm, which he hath threatened, is not unjuſt, but merciful; how much leſs ſhall God, who is infinitely merciful, be accounted unjuſt for mitigating either the Largeneſs, or Intenſeneſs of our deſerved Puniſhments?

"Hands. He is not obliged to execute what he hath threatened, any farther than "the Reaſons and the Ends of Government do require. Nay, he may, without "doing any Wrong or Injuſtice, remit and abate as much as he pleaſeth of the "Puniſhment that he hath threatened: And this, without any Impeachment of his "Truth and Faithfulneſs, any more than it is eſteemed, among Men, a Piece of "Falſhood, not to do what they have threatened." To this we may reply, in the Words of a bad Man indeed, but what have a very great Truth in them, [s] God is not a Man, that he ſhould lye, neither the Son of Man, that he ſhould repent. Hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it? Or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good? Some Threatenings, indeed, God is not obliged to make good, becauſe the Scripture itſelf aſſures us, that his Threatenings of temporal Judgments are very often conditional, and, conſequently, if the Condition, upon which they are ſuſpended, intervenes, he ought not to proceed to Execution. But then, on the other Hand, there are ſome Threatenings, ſuch, eſpecially, as he hath confirmed with an Oath, that are confeſſedly abſolute and immutable: And, accordingly, 'tis generally inferred, that the Wicked ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, becauſe God has ſworn, that [t] they ſhall not enter into his Reſt; for what he hath ſworn, is irrevocable, inaſmuch as [u] he abideth faithful, and cannot deny himſelf.

Anſwered, by ſhewing, that God is obliged to make good his Threats, 1. From his Oath.

BUT allowing theſe Words to relate only to that earthly and temporal Reſt, which God had provided for his People in the Land of Canaan; * yet, in other Reſpects, he hath done ſo much towards the Confirmation of his Threatenings, as is certainly equivalent to the moſt ſolemn Oath. He hath ſent his only begotten Son into the World, to be the Revealer of this his Wrath, againſt all Ungodlineſs and Unrighteouſneſs of Men: Him, whom he hath ordained to be our Judge, he appointed to deſcribe the whole Proceſs of that great and terrible Day, and to give us an Account, beforehand, of the very Sentence, that ſhall then be pronounced upon the Wicked, and the immediate Execution of it: And could any Oath whatever give us a more ſolemn Ratification of his Threatenings, than all this has done? Can we think, that God ſent his Son, only to ſpeak big, but vain Words? That our Judge himſelf frightened us with a Sentence, that ſhall never be executed? Nay, and foretold the certain Execution of it, which yet ſhall never come to paſs: Our Saviour, in ſhort, who is the Mediator of the Covenant between God and Man, has ſealed the Truth of his Threatenings, as well as of his Promiſes, with his Blood; and who then ſhall dare to ſay, that they are not abſolute, or that he is concerned to perform the one, though not under the like Obligation to inflict the other?

[x] THE Threats of Men, indeed, may frequently be remitted, becauſe they are, many Times, made in Paſſion, and may exceed the Rules of Juſtice; or becauſe ſometimes the Perſon threatened repents, and begs Pardon, and returns to his Duty: But as the Damned cannot be ſuppoſed to do this, ſo neither can any culpable Exceſs be incident to an all-perfect Being. [y] Whoever therefore will give himſelf Time to conſider who God is, and how unchangeable his Nature is, cannot but perceive that, however he may ſometimes defer the Execution of temporal Evils, all his known Attributes are concerned to inflict eternal Puniſhment upon impenitent Sinners. He is an holy God, and therefore [z] hateth all the Workers of Iniquity; he is a juſt God, [a] who will by no Means clear the Guilty, nor let the Sinner go unpuniſhed; he is an Almighty God, able to execute the Vengeance threatened againſt Sinners; for, [b] who can ſtand in his Sight, when once he is angry? And what gives a ſad Accent to all this, he that is thus Holy, and Juſt, and Powerful, continues ever the ſame; will never alter or put off theſe Properties; will never ceaſe to hate Iniquity, and to be an implacable Enemy to all that perſiſt in their Sins.

2. From his Nature.

* HUMAN Juſtice, indeed, frequently does, and many times ought, to remit ſomething of thoſe Penalties, which it has affixed to its Laws, becauſe no human Wiſdom can foreſee all thoſe Circumſtances, which may extenuate the Guilt of an Action, and in ſome Meaſure excuſe the Perſon, in hopes that he may bethink himſelf, and reform; but the Divine Juſtice, which is ſubject to no ſuch Imperfection, cannot be thus obliged to alter his Determinations, or reverſe the Sentence, which he has pronounced. Infinite Wiſdom has already weighed and conſidered every poſſible Circumſtance of the Actions of Men: He hath known, from all Eternity, both his own own and others Works, and therefore nothing new can poſſibly intervene, which might make it juſt or neceſſary for him to change his Reſolution, or alter the Thing that is gone out of his Lips. Mercy, indeed, is one of his darling Attributes, yet we are to conſider it, as conducted by his Wiſdom, and conſiſtent with his Holineſs, Juſtice, and Truth, and theſe will always plead more ſtrongly for the Puniſhment of Sinners, than the other can for their Releaſement. To ſpeak properly, indeed, [c] Mercy and Pity is not a Paſſion in God, as it is in Men, but a Perfection, founded on the higheſt Reaſon and Equity: And, therefore, tho' the Miſery of Sinners be never ſo intenſe, and the Number of the Miſerable never ſo great, yet, when the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of the Caſe does not require it, there is nothing to move God for their Relief, becauſe he acts by the ſtanding Rules of Reaſon and Wiſdom, not by any Fondneſs or Weakneſs of Paſſion.

[s] Numb. xxiii. 19. [t] Heb. iii. 18. [u] 2 Tim. ii. 13. * Archbiſhop Dawes's Sermons.
[x] Whitby's Appendix to 2 Theſſ. i. [y] Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [z] Pſal. v. 5.
[a] Exod. xxxiv. 7. [b] Pſal. lxxvi. 7. * Rogers's Sermons, Vol. III.

THE Number of Criminals, indeed, is apt to move Compaſſion among Men: But this proceeds, partly from the Sympathy and Frailty of our Nature, and partly from the Conſtitution of human Affairs. To deſtroy Multitudes, to depopulate Cities and whole Countries, would be bringing an Affliction upon many innocent Perſons, who were the Friends and Relations of them that are deſtroyed. But the Matter is not ſo in the preſent Caſe. There will be no Want of Numbers in Heaven: The Righteous will be everlaſtingly happy, and perceive no Diminution of their Happineſs from the Damnation of ſuch, as were never ſo dear to them in this World. Nay, what is more, their Damnation will contribute not a little to the greater Stability of the Righteous, as well as Augmentation of God's Glory.

3. From the Benefits which will accrue upon the Puniſhment of the Damned.

ALL Angels, at their firſt Creation, ſeem to be in the Situation with thoſe, that are now ſurrounding the Throne of God. [d] They had no Tempter to ſeduce them, nor wanted they any reaſonable Motives to ſecure their ſtanding; and yet great Numbers of them made a Shift to rebel, and to forfeit their celeſtial Places. An Addition therefore of ſome new Motive, to make them more ſecure in the everlaſting Poſſeſſion of their Happineſs, ſeems not unrequiſite for them, and though the dreadful Fate of thoſe of their own Kind might be ſufficient for this Purpoſe, yet when, over and above this, they ſhall perceive the Wicked of the Race of Mankind, whom God loved ſo tenderly, as to ſend his Son into the World to ſeek and to ſave them, ſentenced to everlaſting Damnation likewiſe; who can doubt, but that this will ſtill make the Motive, to beware of falling, more cogent to them, and every Moment yield them a fuller Conviction, that there can be no poſſible Hope of rebelling againſt God, and eſcaping his righteous Judgment.

THE Saints in Heaven, without all Queſtion, ſhall be for ever confirmed in their Glory and Beatitude; but then they ſhall no otherwiſe be confirmed, than by the moſt powerful Motives, that can poſſibly influence rational and free Agents, (for ſuch we ſhall for ever be) to avoid every Thing that may endanger their falling. And, to this Purpoſe, what can be more prevalent, than the eternal Sight and Contemplation of thoſe Torments, which Sinners, of all Kinds, both Men and Angels, are everlaſtingly doomed to? What can give them a more ſenſible Feeling of the Happineſs they enjoy, than the Proſpect of thoſe ſad Miſeries, which they, by the Divine Aſſiſtance, have been enabled to eſcape, like the ſhipwrecked Perſons gotten ſafe to Shore, the more admiring and rejoicing in their Security, the more they look back upon the Storm they left behind? What, I ſay, can be a more prevalent Motive than this, to quicken and enlarge their Praiſes and Thankſgivings to God; to perpetuate their Reverence and Adoration of his Holineſs; to excite and promote in them an utter Horror and Deteſtation of Sin for ever and ever; and, finally, to make them rejoice and triumph, not in the Sufferings of their Fellow-Creatures, conſidered in themſelves, but as they are Manifeſtations of God's Juſtice, and Power, and Victory over his Enemies, and a Vindication of his Honour and Authority, of his Truth and Righteouſneſs, in his Hatred and Deteſtation of Sin, and in his Wrath and Indignation againſt Sinners?

The Sum of the whole Argument.

THESE are the Ends, that may well become the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God, in inflicting eternal Puniſhments upon the Reprobate: And, therefore, to ſum up the whole of what has been ſaid on this Argument:——[e] Since we have the Holy Spirit frequently expreſſing the Eternity of Hell-Torments, in Words as plain and proper as can poſſibly be choſen for that Purpoſe; ſince we have almoſt the whole Chriſtian Church

[c] Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs of the Chriſtian Religion, Vol. II.
[d] Archbiſhop Dawes's Sermons.
[e] Ibid.

Church, in all Ages, interpreting theſe Words and Expreſſions, of a true and proper Eternity; nay, ſince we have the Holy Scripture itſelf, determining its own Senſe in this Point, by ſuch Circumſtances, as can be conſiſtent with no other, than what we are now pleading for: Since, together with Scripture, we have Reaſon on our Side, which, both from the Nature and Aggravations of Sin, and the Temper and Diſpoſition of Sinners; both from the Attributes of God, and the Manner of his Proceedings with Mankind, proves our Aſſertion to be true; which gives us ſuch good Arguments why it may be; diſcovers ſuch noble Uſes, why it ſhould be; and is ſo utterly at a Loſs (conſidering the Order in which God has put Things) to deviſe any Reaſon why it ſhould not be; ſince this is the State of the Evidence before us, I ſay, it muſt needs be granted, that we have more than probable Grounds to conclude, that it will be: And therefore [f] let not the Preſumption of a temporary Hell encourage any Man to go on in his Sin. If the Event ſhould fruſtrate his Hopes, and (as moſt likely it will) fall out contrary to his Expectations, what a lamentable Condition will he then be in? How will he be ſtricken, as it were with a Thunderbolt, when the Almighty Judge ſhall fulminate againſt him a dreadful, indeed, but formerly by him undreaded Sentence, adjudging him to endleſs Miſery? And how will he curſe his own Credulity, who, by the groundleſs Belief of a temporary Puniſhment, has thrown himſelf upon an eternal one, which otherwiſe he might poſſibly have avoided?

And a final Exhortation.

BUT ſuppoſe the beſt ſhould happen, that the Sinner can either hope, or conceive; that Hell, according to his Interpretation, ſhould laſt only, εἰς αἰῶνας αἰώνων, for Ages of Ages; yet did he ever experience what an acute Pain means, and can he think this a ſmall Matter? Were he, at this Juncture, under the Senſe and Suffering of a raging Fit of the Stone, or Gout, or Cholic, and, after ten thouſand Years Torture, to be admitted to all the Happineſs his Heart could wiſh, I make no Doubt, but that he would willingly relinquiſh all his Expectations of the one, nay and with it his Being to boot, rather than be bound to endure the other for ſo long a Term. But what are theſe Pains to the Torments and Agonies of Hell, or the Duration of ten thouſand Years, to that of Ages of Ages? If the Sinner makes light of all this, and nothing can reſtrain him, but an Eternity of Puniſhment, he is bound to thank God, for having uſed this only effectual Means in threatening it; and it badly becomes him to complain of his Rigour and Severity, who would have made ſo pernicious an Uſe of his Lenity and Goodneſs.

THE Truth is, though to come down to the Sinner's own Terms, and thereby convince him of the Folly of his Choice, we may make Suppoſitions, that the Torments of the Wicked may be determinable; yet, ſince we have no ſuch Warrant from Scripture, great Caution ſhould be uſed how we even do this, [g] becauſe the Belief of the Threatenings of God, in their utmoſt Extent, is of ſo great Moment to a good Life, and ſo great a Diſcouragement to a bad one, that, if Men were once ſet free from the Fear and Belief of this, the moſt powerful Reſtraint from Sin would be taken away. [h] Let none therefore deceive us with any of thoſe weak Pretences, which ſeem to widen the Gate of Life, and ſoften the Term of Salvation. Be not deceived, God is not mocked: Whatſoever a Man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap; and therefore if we ourſelves are, at any Time, inclined to think more favourably of our Condition, than a juſt Reflection on our Lives will encourage; if we are tempted to hope from the Divine Mercy, while our Works are evil, nay, while we continue in any unrepented Sin, let us reject the Suggeſtion as the Artifice of an Enemy, that would ruin our Souls, and cheat us of our Salvation. And, in order to break off our deteſted League with Sin, let us often and ſeriouſly think on theſe momentous Things, and conſider well with ourſelves, what Apprehenſions will then probably fill and poſſeſs our Minds, when we ſhall ſtand trembling before our Judge, in a fearful Expectation of that terrible Sentence, which is juſt ready to be pronounced, and as ſoon as ever it is pronounced, to be executed upon us; when we ſhall have a full and clear Sight of the unſpeakable Happineſs, and of the horrible and aſtoniſhing Miſeries of another World: When Heaven, in ſhort, with all its Glories, ſhall be open to our View, and, as the Expreſſion is in Job, [1] Hell ſhall be naked before us, and Deſtruction have no Covering; and, in a full Senſe of this, let us work out our Salvation with Fear and Trembling, that, [2] when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from Heaven, in flaming Fire, our Portion may not be among thoſe, who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting Deſtruction, from the Preſence of the Lord, and from the Glory of his Power.

[f] Ray of the Diſſolution. Sermons, Vol. III.

[g] Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I.

[h] Rogers's

[1] Job xxvi. 6. [2] 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 9.

A COM-

A

COMPLEAT BODY

OF

Speculative and Practical

DIVINITY.

PART V.

Of the great Precepts of Moral and Evangelical Righteouſneſs.

CHAP. I.

Our Duty towards GOD.

The Introduction.

IN treating of the Ten Commandments (when we brought the Children of Iſrael to Mount Sinai, where they were at firſt delivered) we explained the ſeveral Duties relating to God, and our Neighbour, ſo far as the Purport of ſuch negative Precepts would permit us; and, in conſidering the various Attributes of God, we took Notice of the ſeveral Duties and Affections, that do properly reſult from thence, ſo far as was conſiſtent with the Nature of our Subject, and the Brevity uſually preſcribed to Inferences: So that, in a great Meaſure, we have prevented ourſelves in this Part of our Labour, and have the leſs Reaſon to be prolix in what we call Practical Divinity, becauſe Books of this Kind are in every one's Hands; and, in our own Language, many of them written with ſo much Learning and Judgment, as far ſurpaſs whatever other Nations have yet produced.

'TIS not ſo much therefore to add to this Store, as to collect it into ſome tolerable Compaſs, and ſet it before our Reader in one View; to enlarge upon what we have curſorily mentioned, and explain what as yet has not come in our Way; and more eſpecially, to conſider and enforce thoſe great diſtinguiſhing Precepts, which are purely evangelical, that we undertake this Survey of the Whole Duty of Man, as it comprizes what we are bound to do with Regard To GOD, OUR NEIGHBOUR, and OURSELVES. But before we enter upon this, becauſe there are ſome People, who, for the Quiet of their own Minds, would cancel all Obligations to Duty, by running down the Differences of Good and Evil, as though they were nothing but the

[a] Stillingfleet's Sermons.

the arbitrary Fancies of Men, according to the different Influences of Cuſtom and Education; as though doing well were nothing but a moral Faſhion of appearing ſuitable to the Country, wherein we live, which varies as much, as the different Habits and Languages of Men do; becauſe there is a Set of Men in the World, I ſay, who ſolemnly advance ſuch Poſitions as theſe, it may not be amiſs to premiſe ſomething concerning the moral and immutable Diſtinction of Good and Evil, of Virtue and Vice, thereby to evince, that our Obligation to the Practice of the one, and Avoidance of the other, is antecedent to any poſitive Command, either of God or Man.

The moral Diſtinction of Good and Evil.

THAT Reaſon, [b] whether we conſider it as a Rule, to direct, or as a Law, to oblige the Choice of intelligent Beings, ought to be the Meaſure of every Man's Actions, is readily granted; but then the Queſtion is, wherein Reaſon conſiſts, and whether, in particular Caſes, all Actions, ſetting aſide poſitive Inſtitution, be not equally reaſonable; whether, under certain Circumſtances, for Inſtance, it be not equally agreeable to Reaſon, and conſequently, equally fitting and lawful, for a Man to commit any Act of Violence and Cruelty, or even to blaſpheme, as it is to do Juſtice, or love Mercy, or walk humbly with God. Now to ſet this Matter in a true Light, we will ſuppoſe Mankind in a pure State of Nature, a State where all Perſons are abſolutely independent; where neither the Authority of Parents, nor any ſuperior Force of Body, or Capacity of Mind can be pretended, to give one Man the leaſt Power or Advantage over another; in a Word, where there is no Law, and conſequently, in a political Senſe, there can be no Tranſgreſſion, but every Man is equally permitted to do what is right in his own Eyes. Let us ſuppoſe farther, that, in this State of Equality, it is perfectly indifferent, as to a Man's Intereſt and Convenience, whether he lye, or ſpeak Truth; whether he be kind and obliging, or churliſh and oppreſſive to his Neighbour; whether, without any Provocation, he murther an innocent Man, or relieve him when in Danger of periſhing: Yet I would aſk, whether there is not ſomething (in itſelf, and without Regard to any human Compacts) more agreeable in a Man's acting upon a Principle of Generoſity and good Nature, than in exerting an arbitrary Act of Violence and Cruelty? 'Tis a ſingular Inſtance of the Goodneſs, as well as Wiſdom of God then, that he hath implanted in us a natural Tenderneſs towards one another under Circumſtances of Diſtreſs, whereby we find ourſelves invincibly moved, if not to relieve, at leaſt to compaſſionate thoſe, that are unfortunate; and this Duty we properly enough ſtile Humanity, as if it were ſo eſſential to human Nature, that Men could not diveſt themſelves of it, without degenerating into Brutes and Savages.

The Practice of ſome particular People no juſt Exception.

[c] SOME People indeed have ſo far diveſted themſelves of it, as to entertain different Perſuaſions of Things. Among the Cilicians, Robbery was thought an indifferent Matter, as, among the Lacedemonians, Theft: Inceſtuous Marriages among the Perſians were held innocent, and ſome other Acts of Uncleanneſs among the Thebans: But theſe Inſtances do not overthrow the moral Diſtinction of Good and Evil, becauſe we do not deny that Men may degenerate in their Opinions as well as their Practices. There may be Monſters in Morality, as well as in Nature; but, as theſe are to be no Rule for the whole Species, ſo neither can we ſuppoſe, that their Opinions would have been ſo much taken Notice of, had they not herein contradicted the Senſe of the reſt of Mankind. For, ever ſince there have been Men in the World, an infinite Difference has been placed between Virtue and Vice. The Name of Virtue has been appropriated to certain approved Actions, that have been praiſed and recommended by all the World; and under the Name of Vice has been comprized every Thing that has been counted worthy of Blame, and whereon Diſhonour and Diſgrace has been caſt. [d] This Diſtinction is ſo ancient, ſo uniform, ſo univerſal, that it cannot proceed from bare Education, but muſt have been the Gift of Nature; becauſe Nature, which is the ſame in all, gives to all the ſame Inſtitution, and the ſame Light, and Men have nothing to do but to follow it. Her Voice is never fallacious; and therefore, the Diſtinction, which ſhe, in general, has ſet between Good and Evil, is not arbitrary, but founded in the Things themſelves; and ſo far from depending on any poſitive Laws, whether human or divine, that poſitive Laws themſelves do principally, if not ſolely oblige, by Virtue of our pre-ſuppoſing this Diſtinction.

GOD

[b] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [c] Stillingfleet's Sermons. [d] Martin, of Natural Religion.

GOD, we conceive, is a Being infinitely Good, Wiſe, and Powerful; but it is abſurd to ſuppoſe, that he ſhould have infinite Power, and we not be bound to fear him; that he ſhould have infinite Goodneſs, and we not be bound to love him; that he ſhould have infinite Wiſdom, and we not be bound to believe in him, to truſt in him, to depend upon him, and to ſubmit to his holy Will and Pleaſure. 'Tis impoſſible to conceive a Creator, giving Life, and all the Comforts of it, to a Creature, and he is not obliged to be thankful to him, and to ſerve him; and if it be abſurd not to ſerve God, it muſt, in Conſequence, be a good Thing to perform, and an evil Thing to neglect our Duty to him. The Diſtinction therefore between Good and Evil, between Virtue and Vice, ſo far, at leaſt, as God is concerned in them, is inherent in the Things themſelves, and independent on any poſitive Law or Injunction, to make them ſo: And with theſe Obſervations we proceed now to the Conſideration of ſome of the principal Duties, we owe to our great Creator, beginning with thoſe that are internal.

The Diſtinction manifeſt in Relation to the Duties we owe to God.

SECT. I.

Of the internal Duties, we owe to GOD, and

I. OF LOVE.

HEAR, O Iſrael, ſays Moſes their Ruler [f], commenting upon the Precepts, which God had been giving them, The Lord our God is one Lord, and thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thine Heart, and with all thy Soul, and with all thy Might: This, as our Saviour tells us [g], is the firſt and great Commandment. And, in treating of it, we ſhall ſhew, I. Wherein our Love of God conſiſts, and upon what Reaſons and Conſiderations it becomes our Duty: And then, II. What its Properties and Qualifications are, and by what Means we may be enabled to attain it.

I. NOW, to love God, is, [h] to poſſeſs our Minds with ſuch a due Senſe and Eſtimation of the Excellencies and Perfections which are in the Divine Nature, as may make us look upon God as our chief Good; make Choice of him as the only proper Object of our Happineſs; and prefer his Cauſe and Intereſt before any Thing elſe, that may come in Competition with it: For the Language of a true Friend and Lover of God is that of the Royal Pſalmiſt, [i] Whom have I in Heaven but thee? And there is none upon Earth that I deſire beſides thee. And, indeed, whether we conſider God abſolutely, as he is in himſelf, or relatively, as he ſhews himſelf to us, there is all the Reaſon imaginable, why he ſhould be ſeated in the Throne of our Affections.

To love God, what.

1. ABSOLUTELY, and in himſelf, God is propoſed to us as the moſt lovely and amiable of all Beings, in whom there is an harmonious Concurrence of all Beauties and Perfections, and who has all the Excellencies that can poſſibly attract our Love, in infinite Degrees, concentered in his Nature. Wiſdom, both the Ornament and Perfection of a Creature, is but a Spark of Light, fallen from the Father of Lights, and is to be found originally in him, who [k] is the only wiſe God. Power, the Thing, which is univerſally courted among Men, is fundamentally in him, [l] who hath made the Heaven, and the Heaven of Heavens, and who preſerveth them ſtill. Juſtice, which [m] makes the righteous Man more excellent than his Neighbour, is a glorious Attribute of his Godhead, who is righteous in all his Ways, and holy in all his Works. Holineſs, a Thing ſo venerable among Men, the moſt orient Pearl, that they can ſhew, is but a faint Ray of that infinite Purity, which is in God. Kindneſs and Beneficence, which no Man ever hated, which wins upon all, is eſſential to him, who is the Fountain of all Good, and whoſe Mercy endureth for ever. And, to name no more, Beauty, that common Allurement of Love, is ſo conſpicuous in him, that the moſt glorious Inhabitants of Heaven, who ſee his Face, are dazzled with the Reaſons for loving him, from his Attributes.

[f] Deut. vi. 4, 5. [g] Matth. xxii. 38. [h] Wilkins, of Natural Religion. [i] Pſal. lxxiii. 25.
[k] 1 Tim. i. 17. [l] Neh. ix. 6. [m] Prov. xii. 26.

Glory of it: For the Seraphims, in Iſaiah's Viſion, appear [n] covering their Faces in the Preſence of God, either as bluſhing at their own comparative Deformity, or as unable to ſuſtain the refulgent Luſtre of the Divine Perfections. If then we deſervedly love and eſteem thoſe Perſons, who are poſſeſſed of thoſe Graces, though in an imperfect Degree; how can we but love and reverence God, who is the glorious Center, in whom all theſe Excellencies meet; in whom perfect Wiſdom and unerring Juſtice, melting Goodneſs, and alluring Mercy, are all united to captivate our Affections? Eſpecially conſidering,

His Relation to us.

2. THAT, beſides theſe eſſential Qualities in God, we have abundant Reaſon to love him, in his relative Capacity, for the daily Emanations of his Goodneſs to us. [o] At firſt he produced us out of nothing, and made us thereby capable of receiving all Kindneſſes from him. Our Exiſtence could be no Addition to his Happineſs, and therefore our Creation was the mere Effect of his eternal Love. The ſame Philanthropy ſtill ſuſtains and preſerves us, and keeps us from relapſing into the Abyſs of Non-Entity. The Divine Providence continually watches over us, ſkreens us from Dangers, and confers on us actual Favours and Mercies: And, therefore, if we think ourſelves bound to love our Friends and Benefactors, or Parents and deareſt Relations, there is much greater Reaſon to love God, whoſe Kindneſs to us far exceeds all the Care and Affection of the moſt entire Friend, of the moſt indulgent Parent. But, of all the Inſtances of his Love, that of ſending his Son, for the Redemption of Mankind, is of the moſt endearing Nature, and therefore obſerve with what a Variety of tender Expreſſions the Apoſtle deſcribes it. [p] God, who is rich in Mercy, ſays he, for his great Love, wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in Sins, hath quickened us together with Chriſt, (by Grace ye are ſaved) and hath raiſed us up together, and hath made us ſit together in heavenly Places, in Chriſt Jeſus: That, in the Age to come, he might ſhew the exceeding Riches of his Grace, in his Kindneſs to us, through Chriſt Jeſus; for by Grace are ye ſaved, through Faith, and that not of yourſelves, it is the Gift of God. Here is Grace, and Gift, and Kindneſs, exceeding Riches of Grace, and great Love, and Riches of Mercy, and theſe, if duly attended to, cannot fail, one would think, of kindling a reciprocal Flame of Love in our Hearts; which is therefore more peculiarly due to God; becauſe,

His being the Author of Love in us.

3. HIMSELF is the only Author and Cauſe of this Affection in us. [q] That we have a Biaſs in our Natures, inclining to what is Good in general, and which the Soul can no more controul, than ſhe can the Motion of the Heart or Pulſe, is obvious to any one, that obſerves his own particular Make and Conſtitution. Now, if there is ſuch an Impreſſion in our Nature, we may aſk the Queſtion, whether it is from ourſelves, or from God. If from ourſelves, how comes it to paſs, that we cannot command or ſtop it? Were we the Authors of this Motion, we ſhould certainly have Power over it, and be able to manage and reſtrain it, as we ſaw fit: But ſince we cannot do this, we may well conclude, that it is not a Thing of our own Production; and if not of our own Production, then certainly it came from God, for who ſhould be the Author of what is natural and neceſſary in us, but he that is the Author of our Nature itſelf? Love is the ſame in the moral and intellectual World, that Motion is in the natural; and, as we make God to be the Author of natural Motion, ſo there is as much Reaſon to eſteem him the Author of our Love. But, now, if God be the Author and Cauſe of our Love, he, doubtleſs, has an abſolute Right and Title to it. For, what is it that gives him a Right to the whole World, but his Production of it? Why has he a Right to any of us, but becauſe we are his Creatures? Why a Right to all our Powers and Faculties, and to all the Service of them, but becauſe he produces and ſuſtains them; becauſe in him we live, move, and have our Being? But, now, if God does as much produce our Love, as he does our Being, then has he the ſame Right to our Love, that he has to any Part of our Nature, and 'tis an Injury and Injuſtice done him, whenever we transfer it, in any great Degree, to any other Object; ſince, to love God with all our Hearts, &c. cannot but imply thus much, [r] that we love him in a peculiar and ſuperlative Manner, in a Manner, wherein we muſt not love any Thing beſides. Our Friends and Relations, our Neighbours and Acquaintance, may have ſome Share of our Love and Eſteem, but nothing muſt be loved above God, nothing equally with God, [n] Iſa. vi. 2. [o] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [p] Eph. ii. 4, &c. [q] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. III. [r] Newcombe's Sermons.

God, much leſs contrary to, and againſt him; nothing muſt have the Heart ſo entirely as he, and nothing, that oppoſes him, muſt have it at all; ſeeing God is to be loved principally, and for himſelf; other Things only [s] ſecondarily, and in Subordination to him.

II. How then ſhall we reſolve ourſelves in this great and important Queſtion, whether we love God in the Manner we ought to do? Why, we muſt attend to the genuine Fruits and Properties of human Love, and thence make the Eſtimate of the Nature of our Love towards God. Now,

The Properties and Signs of our Love to God.

1. [t] EVERY Man, we ſee, eſteems what he loves to be lovely, and what he ſo eſteems in another, he wiſhes to be poſſeſſed of himſelf, that ſo, becoming like unto him, he may appear as lovely in the Eyes of his beloved, as his beloved is in his. And, in like Manner, if we love God, we muſt neceſſarily eſteem him exceeding lovely and endearing, and, under this Eſteem, muſt be naturally led to reſemble him in all thoſe amiable Things, that ſo much endear him to us. Did we love him indeed for his Eternity, or his Power, or his Immenſity, we might wiſh to be like him, but all in vain; becauſe, in theſe Perfections, we are not capable of imitating him: But the Beauties, for which we love him, are his Goodneſs, and Wiſdom, and Righteouſneſs, and Mercy, &c. all which are Matter of our Imitation, and may be tranſcribed into our Natures. So that, if we love God, we cannot but deſire to reſemble him in thoſe Things, for which we love him; and, theſe being all of an imitable Nature, our Deſire of reſembling him will provoke our beſt Endeavours to be pure, as he is pure; juſt, as he is juſt; and merciful, as he is merciful.

2. THE greateſt Ambition of Love is, to appear amiable in the Eyes of its beloved; and that it may do ſo, it ſtudiouſly avoids whatever may be diſpleaſing or diſtaſteful to it, and induſtriouſly endeavours to adorn itſelf with ſuch obliging Graces, that are apt to endear and recommend it. And ſo, if we love God, we cannot but deſire to appear lovely to him, and that Deſire, if it be ſincere, muſt neceſſarily engage us to acquire whatever is pleaſing, and to avoid whatever is hateful in his Sight. Now Virtue and true Goodneſs are the only Beauties, that endear us to God; as, on the contrary, Sin and Wickedneſs are the only Deformities, for which he deteſts us: And therefore, as we would approve our Love to God, we muſt flee from Sin, and from every Appearance of Evil, leſt they turn away his Eyes from us; and, to conciliate his good Graces, [u] give all Diligence to add to our Faith, Virtue; and to Virtue, Knowledge; and to Knowledge, Godlineſs; and to Godlineſs, Brotherly-Kindneſs, &c. for if theſe Things be in us, and abound, they will make us acceptable to God, as being Partakers of the Divine Nature.

3. AGAIN:

[s] Our ingenious Mr Norris is not content with a Supremacy of Love given to God, and a Subordination to his Creatures, but with great Earneſtneſs contends, that God only is to be loved, and that other Creatures are not to be loved at all: And the Method of his arguing is,——That the Senſation we feel, upon the Approach of any outward Object, is not in our Bodies, but in our Souls and Spirits; that this Senſation is not cauſed by any natural Efficacy in the Object itſelf, but by the pure Agency of God, impreſſing it; "that God, and only God (for theſe "are his Words) acts in us, and is the true and proper Cauſe of all our Senſations, of all that Pain and Pleaſure we "feel by the Mediation of the corporeal and ſenſible World; that it is not the Sun, for Inſtance, that enlightens "us, but God by the Sun; not the Fire, that gives us Heat, but God by the Fire; neither is it the moſt delicate "Fruit, or the richeſt Perfume, that delights either our Taſte or our Smell, but it is God alone, that raiſes Pleaſure "in us by the Occaſion of theſe Bodies." This is the Poſition, which he proves at large, and from hence he argues in this Manner: "If God be the only true Cauſe that acts upon our Spirits, and produces our Pleaſure, then he "only does us good, he only perfects our Being, and makes us happy; and if he only does us good, he only is our "Good; and if he only is our Good, then he only is lovely, or the proper Object of our Love; and if he only is "lovely, then it is plain, that we ought to love none but him, and him intirely." Or to argue backwards,—— "We are to love nothing, but what is lovely; nothing is lovely, but what is good; nothing is good, but what does "us good; nothing does us good but what cauſes Pleaſure in us; nothing cauſes Pleaſure in us but God; therefore "we are to love nothing but God." I ſay, nothing but God, for he only is the Author of all our Pleaſure, and in him we not only live, move, and have our Being, but have alſo all the Joy and Comfort of our Being. Whatever Degree of good we have received, we have received it from him; whatever we enjoy, we enjoy it in him; and whatever we expect, we expect it from him; with whom is the Well of Life, (Pſal. xxxvi. 9.) and in whoſe Sight we hope to ſee Light; nc. therefore we are to love none but him, and him with the whole Heart, Soul, and Mind, with the full Weight of our Deſires, with the whole Activity of our Love. Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. III. That the Saints and Angels in Heaven, who have their Service accompanied with the Viſion of God, love God in this Manner, cannot be queſtioned; but I very much doubt, whether, in this ſublime Senſe, the Precept was either intended, or can indeed be practiſed, in our preſent State, where natural Appetites are ſo ſtrong, and the Relations, wherein we ſtand toward one another, ſo many.

[t] Scott's Works, Vol. II. [u] 2 Pet. i. 5, 6.

3. AGAIN: Nothing is more uneaſy, than the Mind of a Lover, when ſeparated from the Object of his Affections. His Thoughts, his Dreams, his Wiſhes, and Deſires run continually upon it; nor can he recover his Eaſe and Tranquillity, till he is happily reſtored to his former Enjoyment. And, in like Manner, † when God, for the Trial of our Faith or Patience, hides his Face from us for a Seaſon, either not affording us that ready Aid in Diſtreſs, or Comfort in our Obedience, or Pleaſure in our Devotion, which we formerly experienced; if Love reſide in our Hearts, it will ſurely diſpoſe them to ſenſible Grief, and inſpire them with ſuch ardent Petitions as theſe; [x] Hide not thy Face from thy Servant; for I am in Trouble: Turn unto me, according to the Multitude of thy Mercies, and draw nigh unto my Soul, and ſave it. But eſpecially, when [y] our Iniquities, as the Prophet expreſſes it, have ſeparated between our God and us, and our Sins have hid his Face from us; when that thick Cloud hath eclipſed the Light of his Countenance, and intercepted his gracious Influences; then if any Love be alive in our Breaſts, it will prompt us, with the good Men of old, in their penitential Agonies, ſorely to bewail our wretched Condition. There will be [z] no Soundneſs in our Fleſh, nor Reſt in our Bones; [a] our Spirit will be overwhelmed within us, and our Heart within us deſolate, till, by an humble Deprecation, we have regained ſome Glimpſe of God's Favour, and are in Hopes of being re-inſtated in our Poſſeſſion of him.

4. ONCE more. Love we know is a bold and vigorous Paſſion: It makes weak Things ſtrong, and warms and animates the Heart with ſuch a generous Fire, as diſdains all Oppoſition, and out-braves the greateſt Dangers and Difficulties. If therefore we love God ſincerely, our Love will quicken our Endeavours to ſerve him, and carry us, with ſuch a Spirit and Alacrity, through all the weary Stages of our Duty, that it will be our Joy and Recreation to do his Will. The more Difficulties we meet in our Way, the more will they whet our Activity, as being proper Opportunities to manifeſt the Sincerity of our Love, and thereby to recommend our Services to our Beloved. And in this Senſe I conceive theſe Words of St John, [b] herein is our Love made perfect, i. e. this will try the Perfection of our Love to God, namely, that we may have Boldneſs in the Day of Judgment, i. e. [c] that, in the Time of Danger, when we are brought before Rulers and Judges, and are in Peril of loſing our Lives for the Cauſe of Chriſt, we then manfully confeſs him, and ſeal the Truth of our Teſtimony with the Price of our Blood.

Falſe Meaſures herein.

THESE are the genuine Signs and Properties of the Love of God in our Hearts: And from hence we may obſerve the great Miſtake, that ſeveral Perſons may lie under, in their Computation of this Matter; ſuch, I mean, as meaſure their Affection to God by the mere Impreſſion of ſenſitive Paſſion; who, becauſe, upon ſome affecting Repreſentations of his amiable Perfections, they feel in themſelves the ſame Emotions they were wont to do, when they fall in Love with other Things, do inſtantly conclude, that they are infinitely in Love with God: Whereas all this is, many Times, nothing elſe, but the Effect of an amorous Complexion, tinctured and inflamed with religious Ideas, which is the moſt diſtant Thing imaginable from the Virtue of Divine Love. [d] For, as there are ſincerely good Men, that cannot raiſe their ſenſitive Paſſions in their religious Offices; that are heartily ſorry for their Sins, and yet cannot weep for them; and do entirely love God, and delight in his Service, and yet cannot move their Blood and Spirits into the raviſhing Tranſports of Love and Joy; ſo are there many groſs Hypocrites, that have not the leaſt Tincture of true Piety, who yet, in their religious Exerciſes, can put themſelves into wonderful Extaſies of bodily Paſſion; can pour out their Confeſſions in Floods of Tears, and make their Hearts dilate into Raptures of Love and Joy: And yet, all the while, this is no more than the different Temper of Mens Bodies, which in ſome is calm and ſedate, and not eaſily to be diſturbed; in others is ſoft and tender, and ſo very ſuſceptible of Impreſſion, that any frivolous Fancy can raiſe a Commotion in them. Unleſs therefore we are minded to deceive ourſelves in this important Affair, we muſt not truſt to ſuch fallacious Evidences as theſe, but try our Love of God by his own Touchſtone, viz. by our Obedience to his heavenly Will; for ſo himſelf hath inſtructed us, [e] ye are my Friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you; for [f] he that hath my Commandments, and keepeth them, he it is, that loveth me.

How

† Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [x] Pſal. lxix. 17, &c. [y] Iſa. lix. 2. [z] Pſal. xxxviii. 3. [a] Ibid. cxlii. 3, 4. [b] 1 John iv. 17. [c] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [d] Scott's Works, Vol. II. [e] John xv. 14. [f] Ibid. xiv. 21.

How then ſhall we raiſe in our Minds this Affection, and by what Means ſhall we improve and cultivate the Love of God in our Hearts? The Apoſtle has directed us to the proper Method; love not the World, neither the Things which are in the World; for, if any Man love the World, the Love of the Father is not in him. [z] We muſt therefore call home our roving Appetites, which run gadding abroad after worldly Objects, fondly purſuing every Shadow and Phantom of Pleaſure, that they meet with: This Love of ours, I ſay, which runs out into ſo many little Streams, and is diſperſed among ſo many Objects in the viſible World, we muſt collect together, and caſt into one great Channel, and let it flow in one great Tide towards God. And indeed, [a] how can we reflect upon the Beauties of his Nature, his Goodneſs, and Juſtice, and Mercy, &c. without being charmed and captivated with the Love of them? How can we think of the ſtupendous Love, which he hath expreſſed towards us, in giving us our Being, and all the Bleſſings we enjoy, in preparing an Heaven of immortal Joys for us, and ſending his Son from thence, to conduct us thither, without being all inflamed with Love to him? Our Buſineſs therefore muſt be, to ſet ourſelves ſeriouſly to the Contemplation of God, of the Lovelineſs of his Nature, and of his infinite Kindneſs to us, and to all his Creation; to be conſtant and diligent in Prayer and Supplication, in praiſing him, and celebrating the Memory of his Mercies, in conſulting the Scriptures, hearing the World, and attending to all other religious Offices and Employments; for in theſe the God of Heaven communicates himſelf, and by theſe Divine Love is infuſed into the Soul.

Means to attain it.

2. Of Delight in GOD.

TO delight [b] in God, is to poſſeſs our Minds with ſuch a proper Senſe of his Goodneſs, as may produce an habitual Comfort and Pleaſure in the Contemplation of him; as may excite us to Diligence and Alacrity in his Worſhip and Service; to approach his Altars with Joy and Thankſgiving; to hear his Word with Reverence and Attention; to converſe with him here in Meditation and Prayer; and to long to enjoy what his beatific Preſence imparts hereafter. This is the Duty. And our Buſineſs muſt be, 1. To point out the Reaſonableneſs and Expediency of it; and then, 2. To obſerve by what Means we may be enabled to perform it.

To delight in God, what.

I. Now all the delectable Things in Nature, which we either know or can imagine, are but of three Kinds, Natural, Moral, and Heavenly. In the firſt conſiſt the Pleaſures of the World; in the ſecond the Pleaſures of the Godly; and in the third the Pleaſures of the Bleſſed: And, to evince the Reaſonableneſs of our delighting in God, we ſhall ſeparately obſerve how each of theſe remits us to God, as an Object much more deſerving of our Affections and Complacency.

The Reaſonableneſs of it.

1. WONDERFUL is the Variety of the Things in Nature, that are accommodated to our Liking, and their Power of pleaſing us is but too manifeſt from the ſtrange Aſcendant they have over our Affections: And yet all theſe Things do naturally remit us to ſomething better, and more ſatisfying, as we muſt needs acknowledge, whenever we reflect on their tranſient and empty Nature, and how, by Reaſon either of their offenſive Mixtures, or neceſſary Decay, they leave our Souls lean, and pining in the very Midſt of their Enjoyments. This is the Thing, which, to confirm our Experience, God himſelf has been pleaſed to ſignify to us, when he complains of his People, that [k] they had forſaken him, the Fountain of living Water, and had hewed to themſelves Ciſterns, broken Ciſterns, that could hold no Water: For, by comparing himſelf to a Fountain of living Water, he plainly intimates, that he is the Source of ſolid Refreſhment, of ſincere and laſting Delectation, ſuch as is adequate to the Deſires of our Soul; and by comparing all worldly Enjoyments to broken Ciſterns, that can hold no Water, he likewiſe intimates, how vain and imperfect, how tranſient and uncertain they are, how they delude our Hopes, and fly from our Embraces in the very Time of Fruition.

From the Conſideration of Natural,

[z] Newcombe's Sermons. [a] Stillingfleet's Sermons. [b] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. 3
[k] Jer. ii. 13.

NOR are they only deceitful in their Uſe, but very unſatisfying in their Nature: They ſerve us only, when we have leaſt Need of them, not in the Bitterneſs of Affliction, not in the Deſtitutions of the Soul; whereas a ſpiritual Commerce with God, which creates a ſure Confidence in him, is a ſteady Enjoyment, which no Accident can impair, which, in the Multitude of Sorrows, will refreſh us with Comforts, and, as holy Job expreſſes it, [m] give us Songs in the Night, i. e. give us Conſolation in the Night of Affliction, and in the Gloomineſs of human Deſpair. Complain therefore we may of the Vanity and Emptineſs of all worldly Joys; but, at the ſame Time, we ought to remember what the Prophet tells us, viz. that it is from the Lord that they are ſo, viz. that he has purpoſely deſigned, that the good Things of this Life ſhould not be ſatisfying, nor able to anſwer that earneſt Deſire of Happineſs, which he hath made con-natural to the Soul of Man, with an Intent to teach us, that he intended to fill up the Meaſure of our Deſires, and to be himſelf the Delight, we ſo much long for.

Moral, 2. MORAL Delight is that, which ſprings from the Conſcience of Well-doing, [n] of which, though the Wicked are not utterly inſenſible, (becauſe it is often felt to ariſe from any ſingle and caſual Act of Virtue) yet are its Refreſhments, in a peculiar Manner, the Portion of the Regenerate. When the Principles of Goodneſs come once to be fixed in a Man, and his Virtue is grown conſtant and uniform, it is then, that this never fails to ſupply him with a ſtable Serenity and Satisfaction of Mind, not to be equalled by all the Joys of Senſuality. Now, if Conſcience may be thus delighted in, there is abundant Reaſon why God, who is the great Rewarder of Conſcience, ſhould have a much larger Share of our Joy and Complacency; eſpecially conſidering, that the Delight, which ariſes from a Conſcience of Well-doing, is nothing elſe, but a boading Inſtinct, that there will be a future Reward.

A MESSENGER, for Inſtance, is ſent to acquaint a Subject, that for his Loyalty, and other good Services done the Government, his Prince is reſolved to promote him to Honour, to make him Governor of ſuch a Province, or Ruler of ſuch a City: The Meſſenger, in ſuch a Caſe, may be received with Expreſſions of Joy and kind Entertainment; but certainly the Subject forgets his Duty, if he transfers all his Acknowledgments upon the Meſſenger, and overlooks the Beneficence of his Prince. Juſt ſo ſtands the Caſe between God and our Conſciences. Our Conſciences are our Remembrancers of a future Reward, which, upon the Diſcharge of any Duty faithfully, pleaſantly whiſper within, thus, and thus ſhall God reward thee for it; and with this welcome Meſſage we may well be allowed to ſolace and delight ourſelves; but certainly we forget our Duty, if we ſuffer our Minds to be ſo wholly taken up with it, as not to look up to the Fountain from whence it comes. In a Word, he that attends to the Operations of his own Mind, may eaſily perceive, that there is ſo neceſſary a Relation between God and our Conſciences, that, whenever we conceive any Pleaſure from the Remembrance of any good Action, that pleaſurable Movement of our Conſcience is a natural Call to us to delight in God, who is the ſole Foundation, and Hope, and Rewarder of it.

and Heavenly Delights. 3. THE ſame Leſſon we may likewiſe learn from the laſt Kind of delectable Things, I mean, thoſe of Heaven; which though it be a State ſo pleaſant and tranſcendently happy, that the Apoſtle tells us, the very Expectation of it is ſufficient to work in us [o] a Rejoicing with Joy unſpeakable and full of Glory; yet we are to remember, that the Root and Foundation of all the eternal Beatitudes, that are there, is God: That it is not, in ſhort, the Place Heaven, but rather the God of Heaven, that is the Reward of his Saints, procuring them endleſs Felicity from the Light of his Countenance upon them, and the Influence and Emanations of his Bounty towards them. And hence it is, that the Royal Pſalmiſt declares to God, [p] thou art my Hope and my Portion, in the Land of the Living. By the Land of the Living he means Heaven, (for Earth is no more than the Land of the Dying) and yet he does not look upon that Land, but merely upon God in that Land, as his Hope, and his Portion: To which Purpoſe we find the Apoſtle St Paul, [q] in ſpeaking of the State of God's eternal Kingdom, clearing and determining the Matter in two Words, when he tells us, that, in that State, God ſhall be all in all, every Thing to every Saint;

[m] Job xxxv. 10. [n] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [o] 1 Pet. i. 8. [p] Pſal. cxlii. 5. [q] 1 Cor. xv. 28.

Saint; for all that they can wiſh, all that they can conceive, he will be to every one of them; will anſwer all their Deſires, provide for all their Wants, and fill up the immenſe Capacities of Enjoyment, which he hath ſeated in every one's Soul. Since God then, of all the Kinds of delectable Things, that we can experience, either here or hereafter, is the only proper Object of our Joy, there is no Doubt to be made, but that, in Point of Duty and Intereſt both, we ought to place the chief of our Comfort and Complacency in him; conſidering withal, that this will be a Means both to make us truly religious here, and eternally happy hereafter.

The Expediency of it.

IT is, without all Controverſy, true, that there is no Principle in human Nature, that will ſo powerfully engage us in the Service of God, and ſo effectually recommend our Performances to him, as that of Love, which tunes our Wills into an Harmony with his, and makes our Reſpect to his Commandments become univerſal. [1] Now, between Love and Delight there is ſo great an Affinity, that we can hardly diſtinguiſh them: What we love, we always delight in; and what we delight in, we always love; and if we diſtinguiſh them as nicely as we can, the Difference is only this:——Love is the Deſire of our Object, and Delight is the Complacency, that accompanies Deſire; ſo that Delight preſuppoſes, and implies in it Love. Upon which it follows, that if we delight in our Maſter, we muſt neceſſarily love him; and if we love him, we ſhall certainly keep his Commandments. The Man that addicts himſelf to his Luſts, makes them his Maſter; and tho' their Service be hard, and their Wages mean, yet nevertheleſs he ſtiles them Pleaſures, and ſwallows them greedily down under that gilded Name. He watches and labours, he waits and ſollicits, he begs, and bears, and denies himſelf, and all with Content. Now, would we but tranſer our Affections to God, and learn to love and delight in him thus ſincerely, the very ſame Thing would happen to us; his Service we ſhould account our Pleaſure, and the moſt rigid Duties of it willingly ſubmit to, as happy Occaſions, not only to ſignalize our Love here; but,

2. To ſecure our Title to the Glories and Felicities of our celeſtial Inheritance hereafter. The chief Enjoyments of Heaven, as we ſaid before, conſiſt not ſo much in the Pleaſures of the Place, as in our partaking of the Divine Perfections, and ſeeing God Face to Face. And, therefore, if we do not accuſtom ourſelves to delight in God while we abide in this World, we can never be capable of enjoying Heaven, which, in Effect, is nothing elſe but God himſelf. For, be the Place never ſo beautiful and raviſhing, yet that it can afford no ſuch Satisfaction, without the Enjoyment of God, 'tis plain from that Paſſage of Job, where Satan is ſaid to have [2] preſented himſelf among the Sons of God, i. e. to have been in Heaven, and mixed himſelf with the Bleſſed there; and yet, it is certain, he was never the happier for all this; but, being deprived of the Light of God's Countenance, and taking no Pleaſure in the beatific Viſion, he, even in Heaven, carried his Hell about him: So impoſſible it is to enjoy Heaven, without ſome Complacency in God. But, now, when, by long Cuſtom and Uſage, we have brought our Minds to this happy Temper, to be habitually well pleaſed and delighted with God, ſo as to rejoice in his Happineſs, and acquieſce in his Will, and meditate on his Beauty and Goodneſs, with unfeigned Complacency of Soul, we are then in the ſame State (i. e. in Kind, tho' not in Degree) with the bleſſed Saints above, and, when we are called home to their Habitations, ſhall carry along with us Minds ready fitted and diſpoſed for their Enjoyments.

Means of doing it.

IF ever, therefore, we deſire to partake of the Beatitudes of Heaven, and to live eternally in the View of that moſt lovely and moſt happy Object, which is the conſtant Feaſt and Entertainment of glorified Souls; this we muſt ſet ourſelves to do:——We muſt contemplate him with the Eyes of our Faith, approach him in our Prayers, taſte him in his Ordinances, and feel him in the Comforts of Well-doing. We muſt ſettle in our Minds a ſtrict Conformity to his Laws, a generous Diſdain of earthly Things, a noble Confidence in Divine Providence, and a ſtedfaſt and aſſured Hope of an eternal and never-fading Crown of Glory; for theſe are the proper Means to poſſeſs our Souls with a ſteady Delight and Complacency in God, our only Principle of living well, and of living for ever. We cannot, however, but take Notice, that ſince God, in his own Nature, is ſo amiable, in his Perfections ſo tranſcendent, in his Laws ſo equitable, in his Diſpenſations ſo gracious, and, in every Reſpect, ſo encircled with Charms, and inveſted with Endearments, there muſt be ſome intervening

[1] Young's Sermons, Vol. I.

[2] Job ii. 1.

vening Hinderances, or otherwiſe, no Man, of any tolerable Senſe and Ingenuity, could forbear delighting in him. What, therefore, we think proper to do, on this Head, is to inſtance in ſome of the chief Impediments of this Kind, at well as the Means, that may be of Uſe to remove them.

Ingredients to it.

1. Inconſideration.

1. WHAT I reckon, then, the firſt Hinderance to this Duty, is Inconſideration; for in this State a Man will not delight in God: And, to this Purpoſe, we find him complaining, in that noted Place of the Prophet, [t] The Ox knoweth his Owner, i. e. loveth and takes pleaſure in its Owner, and the Aſs his Maſter's Crib, but Iſrael will not know me, Iſrael will not love and take pleaſure in me; and the Reaſon of all follows, My People will not conſider. This is the Cauſe, and where the Cauſe is, the Effect is neceſſary; for tho' Amiableneſs is properly the Parent, yet Thought is both the Midwife and Nurſe of Deſire; and be the Object never ſo amiable and good, while we do not conſider it, it affects us no more, than if it were none at all. If ever therefore we intend to bring our Minds to take pleaſure in God, we muſt be careful to rouſe ourſelves from this ſpiritual Stupor, and every Day appoint certain Portions of our Time, to be expended in Contemplation, and other religious Exerciſes: I ſay, appoint and allot certain Portions of our Time; for without doing this, by the ſpecious Delays, which our deceitful Hearts are able to ſuggeſt, we may poſſibly be prevailed with to neglect them altogether.

2. Sin.

2. SIN and Senſuality is another Hinderance, that puts us at a greater Diſtance from delighting in God; for in this State we cannot do it: And the Reaſon is, becauſe, when once the Soul comes to ſerve under a Complacency of Things forbidden, it becomes groſs and fleſhly, and loſes its ſpiritual Taſte and Reliſh; the Wiſdom of God having contrived it ſo, that none ſhould be able to enjoy him, who preſume to ſet up his Creatures in Competition with him. That God therefore may reign in our Affections, and be the ſupreme Object of our Delight, it is neceſſary that we moderate our Appetites in the Enjoyment of ſuch Things, as are but too apt to engroſs them, and, above all, that we abſtain from Sin, and be conſtant in our Duty. For this will keep us in Friendſhip, and reconcile our Minds to God; and when we are reconciled, his Excellencies will command our Love and Admiration, which, when placed on him, will produce in us boundleſs Joy and Satisfaction.

3. Wrong Apprehenſions of God.

3. BUT there is a worſe Obſtruction ſtill to this Duty, and that is ſad and uncomfortable Apprehenſions of the Nature of God, for, in this Caſe, we dare not delight in him. To form Conceptions of God, not according to the Image of his Word, but according to Mens particular Tempers, has been a cuſtomary Thing in all Ages. The Stoicks were a rigid Sort of People, and accordingly, their Notion of God was, not that he governed himſelf by the Reaſon of Things, but by a ſtern and inexorable Fate. Whether the Doctrine of God's abſolute Decrees has deſcended from the ſame Original, we will not here diſpute; but to believe, that he has determined a great Part of Mankind to eternal Miſery, merely to ſhew the Arbitrarineſs of his Dominion, what a dark and cloudy Scene does this draw over the Face of the Almighty, and, when we conſider it, how muſt it damp our rejoicing in him, and every now and then ſtrike us with Affrightment; unleſs we could be ſure of our own Exception, which none, without a particular Revelation, can? If therefore we would delight in God, and take Pleaſure in the Contemplation of him, we muſt be careful to repreſent him fairly to our Minds, not according to our own ſullen Temper, but as he has repreſented himſelf in Scripture, in ſome ſuch Lineaments as theſe, viz. That he is a bountiful Benefactor to his Creation, and an univerſal Lover of Souls, who would have all Men be ſaved, and come to the Knowledge of the Truth, and heartily contributes to their eternal Welfare; that he leaves no Art of Love, or Method of Kindneſs, unattempted to do us good; calls us back, when we have gone aſtray; upon our Return, graciouſly receives us; when he hath received us, fits us for Happineſs; when he hath fitted us, abundantly rewards us; and when he hath rewarded us, everlaſtingly triumphs in our Glory and Happineſs. Theſe are Thoughts truly worthy of God, and befitting the infinite Goodneſs of his Nature: They will kindle in our Hearts a true Love and Delight in him, and make us ſerve him, at all Times, with a chearful Heart and liberal Affections.

[t] Iſa. i. 3.

3. Of

3. Of fearing GOD.

TO fear God, [u] is to have ſuch a due Senſe of his Majeſty, and Holineſs, and Juſtice, and Goodneſs, as ſhall make us not dare to offend him; for each of theſe Attributes is proper to raiſe a ſuitable Fear in every conſidering Mind. His Majeſty, a Fear, leſt we affront it by being irreverent; his Holineſs, a Fear, leſt we offend it by being carnal; his Juſtice, a Fear, leſt we provoke it by being preſumptuous; and his Goodneſs, a Fear, leſt we forfeit it by being unthankful. Upon which it follows, that the Fear of God is, in a great Meaſure, the ſame reverential Affection, which a dutiful and loving Child pays to his Parents, ſuch as will make him very careful in his whole Behaviour, and reſtrain him from the Commiſſion of Sin, even though God had threatened no Puniſhment againſt it: And accordingly we ſhall, 1. Obſerve how reaſonable and beneficial this Duty is; and then, 2. Suggeſt an Argument or two to enforce it. To fear God, what.

1. IF we reflect upon the many Evils and Calamities, we are expoſed to in this Life, we muſt agree, that it is no ſmall Happineſs to us, to have the Paſſion of Fear implanted in our Nature. For, as in a Town, alarmed by an Enemy, a Centinel is ſet to watch their Approaches, and to prevent the Danger of a Surprize; ſo Fear in the Soul is appointed to this Office, to watch when and which Way all Evils come upon us, and to give us timely Warning of their coming, that either we may decline their Attack, or be provided to receive it. But the ſame God, who hath given us Fear, for a Caution againſt Evil in general, has, in the mean Time, given us Notice, that his Diſpleaſure is the greateſt of all Evils; and therefore, as we account it a Point of Wiſdom to be watchful againſt other Evils, ſo it is neceſſarily the higheſt Point of Wiſdom, to be watchful againſt this. The Reaſonableneſs of it.

* CONSIDERING indeed the infinite Diſtance between God and us, as he is our Maker, and we his Creatures; as he is our Benefactor, and we his Dependants; as he is our Supreme Lord, and we his Subjects; and as he infinitely excels us in all the Perfections of his Nature, we cannot but eſteem him the only proper Object of our Dread and awful Apprehenſions. For what are our ſhallow, and dark, and confuſed Conceptions to that Divine Wiſdom, by which he comprehends all the Differences of Times at one View, and has all the Reaſons and Poſſibilities of Things lying open and naked before him? What is all the Force of Mankind, though collected into one, in Compariſon of that Divine Power, which gave Being to the World, when it was not, and governs and orders all Things in it, with greater Eaſe, than we can move a Finger? If we attend to theſe, I ſay, and ſeveral other Properties of the Divine Nature, [x] ſhall not his Excellency make us afraid, and his Dread fall upon us? Eſpecially conſidering, that the beſt of Men have Sins, and Guilt enough, to make them apprehend the utmoſt Expreſſes of his Wrath: For, [y] if he charges his Angels with Folly, and the Heavens are not clean in his Sight, how much more abominable and filthy is Man, which drinketh Iniquity like Water, i. e. whoſe natural Propenſity to Evil is like that of the thirſty Traveller, to drink of every Brook that he meets in his Way? [z] I have ſinned, therefore ſays holy Job, in the Anguiſh and Bitterneſs of his Soul, I have ſinned, and what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou Preſerver of Men? For thou writeſt bitter Things againſt me, and makeſt me poſſeſs the Iniquities of my Youth.

AND indeed, when once God hath ſet himſelf to write bitter Things againſt us, Loſſes and Croſſes, Pains and Diſeaſes, are ſome of his leaſt Inflictions: He can ſend Terrors into the Soul, and, by letting looſe our Thoughts upon us, make us more miſerable, than all the Tyrants in the World can do by the moſt exquiſite Torments. [a] The Arrows of the Almighty are within me, ſays Job, in ſuch Circumſtances, the Poiſon whereof drinketh up my Spirit; the Terrors of the Lord do ſet themſelves in Array againſt me: And therefore he begs Compaſſion from his Friends, [b] Have Pity upon me, have Pity upon me, O ye my Friends; for the Hand of the Lord hath touched me. And indeed, conſidering how exceedingly heavy this Hand is, when once it is raiſed to give the Blow, that it cannot only [c] kill the Body, but after it hath killed the Body, has Power to caſt both Body and Soul into Hell, there to be tormented Day and Night for ever and ever, we cannot but break out into the Pſalmiſt's Acknowledgment, [d] Thou, even thou, art to be feared; and who may ſtand in thy Sight, when once thou art angry?

[u] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [*] Stillingfleet's Sermons. [x] Job xiii. 11. [y] Ibid. iv. 18. and xv. 15, 16. [z] Ibid. vii. 20. and xiii. 26. [a] Ibid. vi. 4. [b] Ibid. xix. 21. [c] Luke xii. 4, 5.

Inſtances of our fearing Man more than God.

BUT how much ſoever God deſerves to be feared, we cannot but obſerve, that nothing is more cuſtomary among us, than to have our Actions more influenced by the Fear of Man, than of God. [e] Thus, when we commit any Sin in ſecret, which we are afraid to commit openly; when we ſeek Retirement and Solitude, in order to cover our Guilt from the Cognizance of Men, we then ſhew, that the Fear of Man lays a greater Reſtraint upon us, than the Fear of God; becauſe we dare not venture to do that in the Preſence of our Fellow-Creatures, which we preſume to do in the Sight of our great Creator. Again, when we affect to appear to the World religious and virtuous, but, inſtead of taking Care to be what we appear, put on the Sheep's Cloathing only to hide the Wolf, or the Fox, or the Goat, that lurks within, we then ſhew, that the Fear of Man has greater Efficacy upon us, than the Fear of God; ſince the one is ſtrong enough to make us Hypocrites, but the other has not Power to make us inwardly and ſincerely good. Again, when we are aſhamed of owning the Principles of our Religion, though we really do believe them, and, for fear of incurring the Cenſure of Preciſeneſs and Singularity, affect to appear worſe than we really are, we then likewiſe ſhew, that the Fear of Men awes us more, than the Fear of God; ſince the former cauſes us to ſmother that open Profeſſion, which the latter requires, but cannot prevail with us to make. Again, when we fall in with the unwarrantable Cuſtoms of the World, and comply with the modiſh Follies and Vices of the Age, or Place, wherein we live, purely for fear of being thought unfaſhionable, or ill-bred; this undue Compliance is another Proof of our fearing Men more than God; ſince [f] our Conformity to the World is the Effect of the one, whilſt the other has not Efficacy enough to make us be transformed, by the renewing of our Mind, to do what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect Will of God. Once more; [g] when Tribulation or Perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the Word, and, by and by, many are offended; when Men abjure their Religion to ſave their Fortunes, or their Lives, and, to avoid a preſent Trouble, run headlong into ſuch pernicious Practices, as will render them obnoxious to everlaſting Perdition, it is undeniable, that, in this Inſtance, they are under greater Apprehenſions from Man than God; ſince bodily Death, which is the utmoſt that Men can threaten, ſeems ſo formidable, that, to eſcape it, they run the Riſque of that eternal Death, which ſhall be the final Lot of thoſe, [h] who, denying Chriſt before Men, ſhall be denied by him, before his Father, which is in Heaven.

Why it is ſo.

As evident therefore as it is, that Men commit thoſe Sins in ſecret, which they dare not commit openly, and take more Care to appear, than really to be devout; that, in a looſe and licentious Age, they chuſe rather to break the Laws of God, than to be out of Faſhion, and to diſown themſelves under the Influence of Religion, than incur the Imputation of Singularity; that, in Times of Perſecution, they fall away from the Truth, and make Shipwreck of their Faith, when Storms ariſe; ſo evident it is, that, in the Conduct of their Lives, they are more ſwayed by the Fear of Man, than they are by the Fear of God. But now what Reaſon can be given for this unreaſonable and extravagant Conduct? The beſt that can be given, is but a bad one; but the beſt, as I take it, is this,——That we generally look upon Men, as implacable in their Reſentments, but God, as gracious, and merciful, and apt to forgive. " [i] Should we therefore offend Men by a ſtiff and unſeaſonable " Virtue, we might incur the Effects of their Diſpleaſure, and ſhould they once be " angry with us, we might not be able, with all our Care, to recover their good " Graces; or ſhould an ill Opinion be formed, or an ill Character once ſpread " abroad of us, it might, perhaps, be out of our Power to regain a good one: The " Danger therefore of offending Men being ſo great, and the Miſchief of it ſo irre- " trievable, we cannot be too careful to avoid it. But, on the other Hand, if we " ſhould, by any ſinful Compliance, offend God, beſides that the Puniſhment is " at a greater Diſtance, we have ſufficient Grounds to believe, that we can prevent " it by Repentance: For [k] he will not deal with us after our Sins, if we re- " nounce them, nor reward us according to our Iniquities, if we are reclaimed from " them;

[d] Pſal. lxxvi. 7. [e] Smalridge's Sermons. [f] Rom. xii. 2. [g] Matth. xiii. 21
[h] Ibid. x. 33. [i] Smalridge, ibid. [k] Pſal. ciii. 10.

" them; [l] as the Heaven is high above the Earth, ſo great is his Mercy above the " Mercy of Men: As far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, ſo far, upon our Repent- " ance, will he remove our Tranſgreſſions from us:" And therefore, ſince God is ſo ſlow to Anger, and ſo ready to forgive; ſince Men are ſo eaſy to be offended, and ſo difficult to be intreated, this exceeding Mercy of God, which [m] the Pſalmiſt thought a good Ground for his being feared, is often the Reaſon why Man is more dreaded than God.

The Folly and Sinfulneſs hereof.

THE Prophet, however, has, in a very lively Manner, both confuted and expoſed this wicked and unreaſonable Conduct; [n] Who art thou, that thou ſhouldeſt be afraid of Man, that ſhall die, and of the Son of Man, which ſhall be made as Graſs, and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker, that hath ſtretched forth the Heavens, and laid the Foundations of the Earth? Who art thou? If thou be a rational Creature, as God deſigned thee, think if there be any Manner of Equality between the two Objects, between him, that created the whole Univerſe out of nothing, and him, whoſe Breath is in his Noſtrils, and that Breath no longer there, than his Creator is pleaſed to lend it; and if thou art aſhamed of the Compariſon, then [o] fear not the ſtrongeſt Confederacy of Men, as the ſame Prophet excellently exhorts, nor be afraid; but ſanctify the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, and let him be thy Fear, and let him be thy Dread.

The Benefits of fearing God.

THE Obſervation, which Solomon has made, is a very true one, that [p] the Fear of Man bringeth a Snare, expoſes us to Temptations, and makes us liable to be ſeduced from our Duty; but whoſo putteth his Truſt in the Lord, ſhall be ſafe. For, how ſhocking muſt the Frowns and Menaces of great Men be to ſuch, as are deſtitute of this Armour of Proof, [q] which fortifies the Mind, and works it to a Firmneſs, like that of the three Iſraelites in Babylon, who, when the Queſtion was put, whether they would worſhip the Image, or be caſt into the Furnace, replied, with all Compoſedneſs, [r] O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to anſwer thee about this Matter; i. e. in an Inſtant we can reſolve what we are to do in this Caſe, becauſe we were reſolved, long ago, to ſuffer any Thing, rather than God's Diſpleaſure? How galling muſt the Fears, about the Things of this Life, be to one, who carries no Eye to the Bleſſings of another? How muſt every croſs Accident grieve him, and every ſlight Affliction wound him to the Heart? But he, that fears God, has a Preſervative againſt every Thing of this Kind: Before they come, he fears them not, becauſe he is ſecure of the good Providence of God on his Side; and when they are come, he has wherewithal to break their Blow, becauſe he has Aſſurance of Recompence, at leaſt, if not of Relief. But, above all, how amazing muſt the Fear of Death be to him that fears not God? Death! that, like a dark Paſſage to a comfortleſs Priſon, puts an End to all that he would have, and a Beginning to all that he would not. What Agonies of Dread and Horror muſt every Reflection upon this inject into his guilty Soul? But he that lives under the Senſe and Fear of God, has prepared his Mind, beforehand, to meet the Prince of Terrors, and, ſeeing it is appointed for all Men once to die, pays this laſt Debt of Nature with Chearfulneſs, and leaves the Stage of Life, as one that is aſſured of his Paſſage to a bleſſed Eternity.

WELL therefore might holy Job ſay, that the Fear of the Lord, that is Wiſdom; ſince it not only makes us eaſy, by curing our other Fears, while we are here, but happy likewiſe, by ſecuring our chief Concern and Intereſt hereafter. " This then " is Wiſdom, not in Semblance, but in Deed; not Parcel-Wiſdom, but Wiſdom " entire; not Wiſdom for the bye, but Wiſdom for the main; not Wiſdom for a " Day, but Wiſdom for ever." All our other Attainments will avail us nothing. Our Knowledge of Arts and Sciences, of Laws and Policies, of Trade and Buſineſs, will never make us wiſe, till ſuch a Time as the Fear of God preſides over what we know, and directs it to the Purpoſes of an holy Life. And therefore we may well be allowed to enquire, where is the Place of this Wiſdom? And by what Means ſhall we poſſeſs our Souls with this beneficial Paſſion?

The Means of attaining it.

1. THE Royal Pſalmiſt has told us his own Practice, and therein given us a very wholeſome Admonition; [s] I have ſet the Lord always before me, had a continual Senſe of his Preſence with, and Inſpection over me, and therefore, [t] when I conſider, [l] Pſal. ciii. 11, 12. [m] Ibid. cxxxiv. [n] Iſa. li. 12, 13. [o] Ibid. viii. 12, 13.

[p] Prov. xxix. 25. [q] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [r] Dan. iii. 16. [s] Pſal. xvi. 8.
[t] Job xxiii. 15.

ſider, I am afraid of him. And, indeed, [u] if the Conſideration of never ſo mean a Perſon's being preſent with us, is ſometimes ſufficient to reſtrain us from a ſinful or indecent Action, how much more careful ought we to be of our Behaviour, before that Holy and Divine Majeſty, who fills Heaven and Earth, and whoſe Notice nothing can eſcape? Do we then really conſider what it is, to have an eternal God a conſtant Witneſs and Obſerver of all our Actions, and even of all our Thoughts and Intentions; that he keeps a perfect Regiſter of them, and enters them down into Books, which, we are told, will be opened at the great Day of Accounts, and out of which we muſt be judged? If we do conſider theſe Things, I ſay, and yet are not thereby reſtrained from ſinning; there is but one Argument more, that can be ſuppoſed to work upon our Fears; and that is,

2. THE Conſideration of God's Juſtice and Severity againſt Sin: For [x] if God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, as St Peter argues, but caſt them down to Hell; and ſpared not the old World, but brought in the Flood upon the Ungodly; turning the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into Aſhes, and making them an Example to thoſe, that after ſhould live wickedly: Nay, what is more, if God ſpared not his own Son, when, having no Sin of his own, he undertook only to be the Proxy and Repreſentative of Sinners, how much more will he not ſpare them, whoſe Impieties have provoked his Wrath, and whoſe Damnation, upon that Account, ſlumbereth not? Knowing then the Terrors of the Lord, our Fleſh may well tremble becauſe of him, and Reaſon good we have to be afraid of his Judgments; that Judgment eſpecially, which will end in an Eternity of Happineſs or Miſery, and therefore calls upon us daily to work out our Salvation with Fear and Trembling.

4. Of truſting in GOD.

To truſt in God, what.

TO truſt in God, is to affect our Minds with ſuch a due Senſe of his Wiſdom, and Power, and Goodneſs, and Faithfulneſs, as may engage us to commit all our Concerns to his Providence, to depend upon his Help and Protection in all the Difficulties and Dangers, and upon his Care and Proviſion for us, in all the Wants and Neceſſities, that can befal us: For each of theſe Divine Attributes do point out the Duty of our Reliance upon God. [y] His Wiſdom teaches us, that he has all proper Knowledge of our Condition, and is therefore duly qualified to take the Adminiſtration of our Affairs into his Hands; his Power, that he wanteth not Ability to deliver us from the Calamities, under which we labour, and to beſtow upon us the Benefits, that we want; his Goodneſs, that he wanteth not Diſpoſition to accompliſh his gracious Purpoſes towards us, and, whenever it is fit and expedient for us, readily to grant what we requeſt; and his Faithfulneſs, that, having promiſed to be our Patron and Protector, he cannot deny himſelf, nor alter the Thing that is gone out of his Mouth. Upon theſe Foundations is our Reliance upon God eſtabliſhed; and our Purpoſe muſt be, 1. To enquire by what Reaſons and Inducements we are encouraged to it; and, 2. By what Means and Conſiderations we may promote it.

The Reaſonableneſs thereof.

I. ONE great Requiſite in any Friend or Patron, from whom we may have Expectance of Protection or Relief, is, that he be acquainted with the Nature of our Circumſtances, otherwiſe, be his Inclination never ſo much in our Favour, we may be undone, before his Helping-hand is ſtretched out to us. But now, in God, [z] whoſe Underſtanding is infinite, and whoſe Eye every Moment has the whole Creation under his View, there can be no Riſque of this Kind. For, be our Condition what it will; if inward Grief and Uneaſineſs, our moſt ſecret Thoughts and moſt inward Groanings are not hid from him; if bodily Pain or Sickneſs, he underſtands the beſt Means of Help, and the propereſt Seaſons of applying them; if Poverty or Want, he knows where all the Riches of the World are ſtored, and can [a] fill, when he pleaſes, our Belly with hid Treaſures; or, laſtly, if Danger or Diſtreſs, he is infinitely Wiſe, to contrive ſuch Ways of Safety and Deliverance, as will ſurmount all thoſe Difficulties and Perplexities, which would put human Wiſdom to a Loſs. So that, upon the Conſideration of this one Attribute, we may take up the Words of the Pſalmiſt,

1. From the Divine Attributes.

[u] Fiddes's Sermons. [x] 2 Pet. ii. 4, &c. [y] Wilkins, on Natural Religion. [z] Pſal. cxlvii. 5. [a] Ibid. xvii. 14.

Pſalmiſt, and ſay, [b] God is our Hope and Strength, a very preſent Help in Time of Trouble. God is in the Midſt of us, therefore ſhall we not be removed; God ſhall help us, and that right early; for the Lord of Hoſts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge.

2. BUT it is not enough that our Friend be acquainted with our Condition, unleſs he has Power likewiſe to remove the Evil, we complain of, and to procure us the Good, we want: And therefore we may obſerve, [c] that there is nothing, which either Nature has made, or Art has contrived in ſuch a Manner, as may beſt ſerve for our Defence, from which the Pſalmiſt does not borrow Alluſions, in order to excite in us a lively Senſe of the mighty Power of God to defend his Servants in the needful Time of Trouble; [d] The Lord is my Rock, and my Fortreſs, and my Deliverer, my God, my Strength, in whom I will truſt; my Buckler, the Horn alſo of my Salvation, and my high Tower: And to ſhew his great Care and Proviſion for our Wants, [e] the Lord, ſays he, delivereth the Souls of his Servants, and all they, that put their Truſt in him, ſhall not be deſtitute. Thoſe indeed, that throw themſelves out of the Providence of God, and ſet up for the Carvers of their own Fortune, may [f] earn perhaps the Wages of Iniquity, but putting them into a Bag with Holes, as the Prophet expreſſes it, they find themſelves often defeated; but though [g] the Lions (to underſtand the Word for once in a metaphorical Senſe, for ſuch as live by plundering and oppreſſing others) do lack, and ſuffer Hunger, yet they, that ſeek the Lord, ſhall want no Manner of Thing that is good.

3. NOR is it enough that our Friend have it in his Power to ſupply our Wants, and ſtand by us in Danger, unleſs he is willing and diſpoſed ſo to do; and therefore to remove all Doubts of this Kind, the ſame Pſalmiſt hath aſſured us, that God is not only eſſentially and immutably good, but good univerſally, good everlaſtingly, good to the Pious without Reſerve, and good to the Wicked too, if they will but repent of their Sins and live; for the Lord is good, and doth Good; [h] his tender Mercies are over all his Works; and, as [i] he preventeth the Righteous with the Bleſſings of Goodneſs, ſo is [k] he ready to forgive the Sinner, and plenteous in Mercy unto all them, that call upon him. Conditions in Life make no Diſtinction with him; for [l] lo! the Poor crieth, and he heareth him, yea, and ſaveth him out of all his Troubles. Many, in our proſperous Days, will be forward enough in their Profeſſions of Kindneſs and Zeal, but when Trouble begins to ariſe, they think it convenient then to withdraw, and leave us to ſtruggle alone with our Misfortune: But now [m] the very Thing which among Men is uſually the chief Cauſe, that takes off their Affection and Kindneſs, with God is an Argument of a contrary Nature: For though his Mercy and Goodneſs extend to all, yet are they more eſpecially concerned for ſuch, as are in a State of Miſery, the Fatherleſs, the Widow, the Priſoners, the Poor, the Stranger, the Friendleſs, and ſuch as have no Helper. And, from a Senſe of this, we find the Devout in all Ages truſting not in Man, nor his fallacious Friendſhip, but fleeing to God for Shelter, as they found the Cloud approaching. [n] Our Fathers truſted in thee, and thou didſt deliver them; they called upon thee, and were holpen: They put their Truſt in thee, and were not confounded; wherefore go not far from me, O Lord; for Trouble is hard at Hand, and there is none to help me: Thou art my Succour; haſte thee to help me, to deliver my Soul from the Sword, my Darling from the Power of the Dogs.

4. NOR is it ſufficient that a Perſon have Knowledge, and Power, and Goodneſs enough, to be a fit Inſtrument of our Relief and Support, unleſs, in ſome Meaſure, he be under Obligations to do it for us: And, in like Manner, though [o] we may deſire and expect unpromiſed Favours from God, yet we can infallibly be ſure of no Bleſſings, but what he, in his Word, has been graciouſly pleaſed to promiſe. Now Promiſes of Help to thoſe, that are righteous, and put their Truſt in God, are innumerable; and on theſe Promiſes, if our Conſciences bear us a comfortable Teſtimony, we may ſecurely rely; [p] the Eyes of the Lord are upon the Righteous, and his Ears are open unto their Cries; and though their Afflictions be many, yet he ſhall deliver them out of them all. He ſhall redeem the Souls of his Servants, and none of them, that truſt in him, ſhall be deſolate. Having therefore theſe gracious Promiſes, we may,

[b] Pſal. xlvi. 1, &c. [c] Smalridge's Sermons. [d] Pſal. xviii. 2. [e] Ibid. xxxiv. 22.
[f] Hag. i. 6. [g] Pſal. xxxiv. 10. [h] Ibid. cxlv. 9. [i] Ibid. xxi. 3. [k] Ibid. lxxxvi. 5. [l] Ibid. xxxiv. 6. [m] Wilkins, on Natural Religion. [n] Pſal. xxii. 4, &c.
[o] Smalridge, ibid. [p] Pſal. xxxiv. 15, &c.

with undaunted Courage, ſpeak the Words, and take up the Reſolution of the Pſalmiſt; [a] God is our Refuge, and Strength, therefore will we not fear, though the Earth be moved, and though the Hills be carried into the Midſt of the Sea; though the Waters thereof rage and ſwell, and though the Mountains ſhake at the Tempeſt of the ſame. Such bold Expreſſions as theſe, have been uttered by brave and gallant Men among the Heathens; [b] but what was extravagant in the Mouths of ſuch, as had no Strength, but their own, to bear them up; no Proſpect of any other Recompence, than that of an imaginary Fame for behaving under Difficulties with Magnanimity; that, when ſpoken by one, who has the Aid of God, to ſupport him under Sufferings, and the Promiſes of God, to reward his Patience and Conſtancy, either with the Bleſſings of this Life, or with the Glories of the next, is a wiſe, ſolid, and well-weighed Reſolution.

From our own Experience.

THUS, if we look into the Nature of God and his moſt ſacred Attributes, we find ſtrong and irrefragable Arguments, why, in all our Troubles and Diſtreſſes, we ſhould put our whole Truſt in him; and if we now turn our Eyes upon ourſelves, and conſult our own Experience of his former Loving-Kindneſs to us, we ſhall perceive abundant Reaſon to continue the ſame Affiance in him for the future. For, of the many Calamities incident to human Life, how many, through the Goodneſs of God, have we eſcaped? How many, juſt hanging over our Heads, and what we ſaw no Poſſibility of avoiding, has his watchful Providence averted from us? How many, after they had ſeized us, and began to preſs hard upon us, has he at firſt abated, and afterwards wholly removed? And how many, by his over-ruling Power, have had ſo good an Effect, that we have Reaſon to rejoice for having been viſited by them? Have we never, by a painful and lingering Sickneſs, been brought to the very Brink of the Grave, and when Medicines have failed, and Phyſicians have pronounced our Doom, by ſome unexpected Turn, been reſtored to our Health again? Has our good Name never been aſperſed by ſome foul and baſe Slanders, under which we have long lain, without being able to clear it, and has not God, by his good Providence, [c] brought forth our Righteouſneſs as the Light, and our Innocence as the Noon-Day? Have we never ſeen [d] Poverty coming upon us as an armed Man, when, on a ſudden, God has raiſed up unhoped for Benefactors to relieve us, or ſtruck out for us unforeſeen Means of Subſiſtence? Have we never known the Wrath and Malice of Men ſet againſt us, when, without any Offence of ours, they came gaping upon us, and [e] were ready to ſwallow us up quick, when God has either * reſtrained the Fierceneſs of their Wrath, or [x] covered us, as it were, under the Shadow of his Wings, until their Tyranny has been over-paſt?

IF then we have had any ſuch Inſtances of God's Goodneſs to us, (as certainly we all of us have had, and, unleſs we have been very careleſs Obſervers of Providence, muſt have taken Notice of) from the Senſe of paſt Mercies to us, we may draw this comfortable Concluſion, that [f] he, who hath delivered us from ſo great Dangers, and doth deliver, in him we may ſafely truſt, that he will yet deliver us: For his Hand, which has ſo often been ſtretched forth for our Help, is not ſince [z] ſhortened, that it can no longer ſave; neither is his Ear, which has been ſo often opened to our Prayers, grown heavy, that it can no more hear. Commit we but then our Souls to him in Well-doing, and the Experience we have already had of his watchful Care over us, will be our ſtanding Conviction, that, in all Circumſtances of Danger or Diſtreſs, he [a] will defend us under his Wings; under his Feathers we ſhall be ſafe; his Faithfulneſs and Truth ſhall be our Shield and Buckler.

Means to beget and improve this Grace in us.

II. IF then our Truſt and Reliance on God, [b] under all the Pains of Body and Anxieties of Mind, under all the Frowns of Fortune and Difficulties of Life, which have befallen us, and all the Apprehenſions of Evils, which we fear may befal us, be both our Duty, and our Remedy, it may be a Matter well worth our Enquiry, by what farther Means and Conſiderations we may beget and nouriſh in us this happy Temper of Mind; and in order to this,

1. THE firſt Thing we are to do, is to diveſt our Minds of all Preſumption and Self-confidence. [c] For when, without any Regard to God's Providence, Men are bold

[a] Pſal. xlvi. 2, 3.
[b] Pſal cxxiv. 3.
[c] Iſa. lix. 1.
[d] Smalridge's Sermons.
[e] Ibid. lxxvi. 10.
[f] Pſal. xci. 4.
[g] Pſal. xxxvii. 6.
[x] Ibid. lvii. 1.
[h] Smalridge, ibid.
[i] Prov. xxiv. 34.
[y] 2 Cor. i. 10.
[c] Barrow's Works,

bold enough to rely on themſelves and their own Abilities, and vainly imagine, that, without the Divine Help and Direction, by the Contrivance of their own Wit and Diſcretion, they can compaſs their Deſign, and make themſelves Maſters of their utmoſt Wiſh; it is no Wonder, that they ſhould ſo frequently miſcarry; and therefore truſt thou in the Lord (as the wiſe Man adviſes) with all thine Heart, and lean not on thine own Underſtanding; in all thy Way acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy Paths; for [e] he that truſteth in his own Heart, as he ſays in another Place, is a Fool. And a Fool he is without all Controverſy; for,

2. CONSIDERING the Situation of human Nature, [f] it is abſolutely neceſſary, that there ſhould be ſomething for us to lean upon, and have Recourſe to, as our proper Support and Refuge. Every Man in his beſt Eſtate is but a feeble and infirm Creature: What from the Impotence of his Mind, and the Diſorder of his Paſſions within; what from the Troubles and Difficulties which he meets with from without; together with the Mutability of all human Affairs, which cannot be aſcertained by all the imaginable Foreſight which Men are capable of; it is impoſſible for us to live independent. [g] Evils there are innumerable, from which, neither the Wiſdom of the moſt prudent, nor the Riches of the moſt wealthy, nor the Forces of the moſt powerful, nor even the Virtue of the moſt innocent, can always ſecure us; and therefore Faith, and Hope, and Truſt, are altogether neceſſary in our preſent State; and the Man muſt be in a very unſafe and uneaſy Condition, that is not provided with ſomething to ſupport and relieve him in his Neceſſities. But now, if ſuch a Support be neceſſary, we can have it no where placed ſo commodiouſly, as in the Hands of Almighty God; [h] For where can we find a ſafer Director of our Affairs, than an all-comprehending Wiſdom? Where a better Protector againſt Dangers and Inſults, than omnipotent Power? Where a better Provider of every Thing that we want, than that Goodneſs which is infinite?

SINCE then the Neceſſity of truſting in ſomething, the Folly of truſting in ourſelves, and the Wiſdom of truſting in God is ſo apparent; theſe are Conſiderations wherewith we ſhould frequently entertain our Thoughts: And to give them a ſtronger Impreſſion, we ſhould always bear in Mind the Promiſes, that God hath made us of his Readineſs both to guard us in Danger, and to relieve us in Want: [k] Becauſe thou haſt made the Lord, which is thy Refuge, even the moſt High, thy Habitation, there ſhall no Evil befal thee, neither ſhall any Plague come nigh thy Dwelling; for he ſhall give his Angels Charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy Ways: They ſhall bear thee up in their Hands, leſt thou ſhouldſt daſh thy Foot againſt a Stone. This is our Protection from Danger, and our Security from Want are the comfortable Words of our bleſſed Saviour: [l] Take no Thought for your Life, what you ſhall eat, or what you ſhall drink; neither for your Body, what you ſhall put on: Is not your Life more than Meat, and your Body than Raiment? Behold the Fowls of the Air! for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into Barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them: Are ye not much better than they? And why take ye Thought for Raiment? Conſider the Lillies of the Field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they ſpin, and yet I ſay unto you, that Solomon, in all his Glory, was not arrayed like one of theſe. Wherefore, if God cloath the Graſs of the Field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is caſt into the Oven, ſhall he not much more cloath you, O ye of little Faith? Therefore take no Thought, ſaying, what ſhall we eat? or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed? for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have Need of theſe Things. But ſeek ye firſt the Kingdom of God and his Righteouſneſs, and then all theſe Things ſhall be added unto you.

[e] Prov. iii. 5, 6. [f] Ibid. xxviii. 26. [g] Wilkins, of Natural Religion. [h] Smalridge's Sermons.
[i] Collier's Sermons. [k] Pſal. xci. 9, &c. [l] Matth. vi. 29, &c.

5. Submiſſion

5. Submiſſion to GOD.

SUBMISSION to the Will of God is of two Kinds, the Submiſſion of Obedience, which conſiſts in a ready Compliance with his Commands in all Things, and the Submiſſion of Patience, which is nothing elſe, but a quiet and chearful Suffering of whatever Afflictions he ſhall think fit to lay upon us; which is the Duty we are here to enforce and recommend.

The Nature of Patience.

[m] PATIENCE then is that Virtue, which qualifies us to bear all Conditions and all Events, by God's Diſpoſal incident to us, with ſuch Apprehenſions and Perſuaſions of Mind, with ſuch Diſpoſitions and Affections of Heart, and with ſuch external Deportment and Practice of Life, as God and good Reaſon require, viz. with a thorough Perſuaſion, that nothing befals us, but either by the Permiſſion or Direction of Divine Providence; a firm Belief that all Occurrences, however contrary to our Deſires, are both conſiſtent with God's holy Attributes, and conducive to our Good; a full Truſt and Dependance on him, either for Strength to enable us to bear our Afflictions, or for a ſeaſonable Removal or Mitigation of them; abſtaining from all diſcontented Complaints and Murmurings againſt Providence; from all malicious and revengeful Thoughts againſt the Inſtruments of our Sufferings; and from all unworthy and irregular Courſes, to extricate ourſelves from them; that ſo [n] ſuffering according to the Will of God, we may commit the keeping of our Souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

IN theſe, and ſuch-like Acts, does the Practice of this Virtue conſiſt; and the Inducements we have to it ariſe, I. From the Conſideration of the Nature of God, and our Relation to him; and II. From the Benefits of Virtue itſelf, and the Advantages that accrue to us from our Afflictions.

Its Reaſonableneſs.

I. IT is an Obſervation made by Eliphaz, in the Book of Job, that [o] Affliction cometh not forth of the Duſt, neither doth Trouble ſpring out of the Ground, but are diſpoſed and appointed by God, who has a ſovereign Right and Dominion over us, and may therefore deal with us as he pleaſes, ſo long as he leaves us in a State preferable to Non-exiſtence. And, from this Conſideration, the devout Pſalmiſt, in all the Calamities that befel him, was not [p] only dumb, and opened not his Mouth, in any Murmuring or Complaint, becauſe it was God's Doing, but even carried his Reſolution to the higheſt Pitch of Reſignation, [q] while I live, will I praiſe the Lord, yea, as long as I have any Being, though deprived of every Thing elſe, will I ſing Praiſes unto my God. He had the Conſideration before him of the numberleſs Favours and Benefits, which from Time to Time God had extended to him, and if he ſo frequently received Good at the Hand of God, it was but equitable, he thought, that he ſhould ſometimes receive Evil. [r] He conſidered the infinite Wiſdom of the ſupreme Diſpoſer of Things, and implicitly believed, that there was an exact Harmony in all his Adminiſtrations, and that, at the laſt Day, when [s] we ſhall behold his Preſence in Righteouſneſs, and the deep Plot of this great and wonderful Drama ſhall be laid open and revealed, every one ſhould be ſatisfied with the Beauty and juſt Conduct of it, though to us, who ſit now in a dark Corner of the Theatre, ſome of its Parts ſeem very cloudy and perplexed. He called to Remembrance his paternal Relation, and knowing, that [t] like as a Father pitieth his own Children, ſo is the Lord merciful unto them that fear him, he could not but perceive, that the Afflictions, he laboured under, were neceſſary for the Chaſtiſement of his Faults: He therefore reflected upon his own State and Condition of Life, [u] and perceiving that, as he was by Nature God's Servant, it was but decent for him to acquieſce in that Rank and Station, which he had appointed him in his large Family; that as he was a Sinner, and leſs than the leaſt of God's Mercies, it was no more than his Duty to be content and thankful for any Thing on this Side Damnation. * We will bear the Indignation of the Lord, ſays the afflicted Church in the Prophet Micah, becauſe we have ſinned againſt him; for [x] wherefore doth a living Man complain, a Man for the Puniſhment of his Sins? Since Afflictions are the natural Fruits of our voluntary Miſcarriages,

[m] Barrow's Works, Vol. III. [n] 1 Pet. iv. 19. [o] Job v. 6. [p] Pſal. xxxix. 9.
[q] Ibid. cxlvi. 2. [r] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II. [s] Pſal. xvii. 15. [t] Ibid. ciii. 13.
[u] Barrow, ibid. * Micah vii. 9. [x] Lam. iii. 39.

Miſcarriages, 'tis reaſonable that we ſhould blame ourſelves, rather than pick Quarrels with Providence about them: Eſpecially conſidering, that were we much more innocent than we are, this World is not a Place of perfect Pleaſure and Delight; that we came not hither to do our own Will, or enjoy our own Wiſhes, but are naturally [y] born to Trouble, as the Sparks fly upwards, and need not therefore be ſurprized, if, in a Vale of Tears, we meet with ſuch Calamities and Croſſes, as are ſuitable to our Nature and Condition; that no Adverſity, either in Kind or Degree, is peculiar to us, but, if we take a View of other Men, and compare our Caſe with theirs, we ſhall find, that we have many Aſſociates in Miſery, many far worſe, and moſt as ill afflicted as ourſelves: That it has all along been the Lot of the beſt Men, and greateſt Favourites of God, to be exerciſed in this Manner; and that [z] the Captain of our Salvation, [a] a Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with Grief, was himſelf made perfect through Sufferings. If therefore we either look upon God, as the Author and Diſpoſer of all our Afflictions, or upon ourſelves, either as Men, that are ſubject to them, or as Sinners, that do juſtly deſerve them, it muſt needs be great Partiality and Perverſeneſs in us, to be diſpleaſed, that we are not exempted from bearing, either the Wages of our Iniquity, or the common Burthen of our Nature: Eſpecially if we conſider,

II. SOME of the Advantages, that do accrue to us from our Afflictions, as well as the great Benefits of bearing them with Patience. The Maſters of Ethicks, who have looked into the Properties of the Mind, are generally of this Opinion, [b] that Impatience and Diſcontent, under any Kind of Tribulation, proceed from a Poorneſs of Spirit; argue a Man conſcious of his own Weakneſs, and that he has not Courage to reſiſt an Evil; whereas, had he but Reſolution to face it, he would be ſo employed, as to have no Leiſure to complain; his Blood would be ſo heated with the Senſe of Honour, and the Hopes of Victory, that the Blows and Smarts of the Encounter would ſcarce be felt. He, that in Patience poſſeſſes his Soul, is always eaſy and ſerene: His Spirits do not riſe and fall with his Circumſtances: The actual Suffering of Adverſity cannot deject him: He relies upon his Innocence and his God: Upon this Foundation he ſtands fixed like a Rock, and though Waves and Storms may paſs over him, yet he remains unſhaken, nor can all the Shocks of Adverſity ever deprive him of his Principles, or his Peace. He is perſuaded, that as God ſtands in no Need of our Happineſs, much leſs of our Miſery, ſo [c] he does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the Children of Men; and therefore whenever he is compelled to do ſo, it is either for the Correction of our Failings, or the Improvement and Purification of our Virtues, [d] that the Trial of our Faith, as the Apoſtle has it, being much more precious, than that of Gold, which periſheth, though it be tried with Fire, might be found unto Praiſe, and Honour, and Glory, at the Appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. For this is another Inducement to Patience and Reſignation under all Conditions, that [e] our light Affliction, which is but for a Moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal Weight of Glory, while we look not at the Things that are ſeen, but at the Things which are not ſeen; for the Things, which are ſeen, are temporal, but the Things, which are not ſeen, are eternal. [f] And is there now any room for ſuch a Paſſion, as Grief or Diſcontent, after ſuch a Conſideration as this? Can a Man, acting upon this Perſuaſion, be diſturbed at any Accident, or be impatient in any Condition of Life? Can he murmur or repine at the Strokes of God's afflicting Hand, which he knows are given with a gracious Intent, which are preſent Interruptions, but future Enlargements of his Happineſs, like the miſty Vail of the Morning, which for a while ſhuts in the Rays of the Sun, but at length contributes to the greater Luſtre and Triumph of the Day? Shall not I then drink the Cup, be the Ingredients what they will, which my heavenly Father has given? "My Father, who is too "perfect to need my Miſery, though, in reſpect of his ſupreme Dominion, he "might afflict me as he pleaſes; who is too wiſe to miſtake my true Intereſt; and "too good to preſcribe any Draught, but what he knows is wholeſome for me; who "has given me all the Happineſs I enjoy, and parted with more, for my Sake, than "he can poſſibly take from me in this World: Has parted with his beloved Son "for my Redemption, and, in Lieu of what he takes, has provided for me an In"heritance incorruptible; and ſhall I then refuſe the Cup, which ſuch a Father as

Its Benefits and Advantages.

[y] Job v. 7. [z] Heb. ii. 10. [a] Iſa. liii. 3. [b] Collier's Sermons. [c] Lam. iii. 33.
[d] 1 Pet. i. 7. [e] 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. [f] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II.

" this has given?" No, may the conſidering Sufferer ſay, I will [g] count it all Joy, when I fall into divers Temptations; I will reſt heartily ſatisfied with the ſevereſt Diſpenſations; welcome the ſharpeſt Arrow, that comes from his Quiver; and though he kill me, yet will I truſt in him.

6. Of inward Purity.

Inward Purity, what.

PURITY of Heart, in the general Notion of it, may be conſidered in a double Senſe; [h] either in Oppoſition to Mixture, and ſo it removes Hypocriſy; or in Oppoſition to Pollution, and ſo it removes Senſuality. In the former Senſe, it denotes the Simplicity and Sincerity; and, in the latter, the Sanctity and Cleanneſs of our Thoughts and Intentions: So that in the Senſe, wherein we mean, at preſent, to take it, " the Pure in Heart are ſuch, as, meaning to recommend themſelves chiefly to God's Acceptance, who ſearcheth the Heart, regulate, not only the " external Conduct of their Lives, but alſo the inward Frame and Habit of their " Minds, and conform, not only their Actions, but their Wills and Deſires, their " Thoughts and Deſigns, to the Rule of the Law, and to the Dictates of the in" ternal Light of God in their Soul: Such as ſanctify the Lord God in their Hearts; " compoſe the inmoſt Receſſes of their Minds into an holy Awe and Reverence of " the Divine Preſence; ſet a Law to all their intellectual Powers, and ſuffer not the " leaſt Thought or Paſſion to violate the Order either of Reaſon or Grace: Such, " laſtly, as yield no Conſent either to the Being or Stay of irregular Motions; as " delight themſelves with no pleaſing Recollections, no imaginary Scenes of their " paſt Immoralities; but ſet themſelves at the greateſt Diſtance from Sin, reſiſt the " very firſt Beginnings, and, as near as they can, abſtain from the leaſt Appearance " of Evil."

THIS is the moſt reſembling Idea we can frame to ourſelves of the Pure in Heart: And, that it may not be taken for a mere Idea, or a Thing of Notion, rather than Practice, we ſhall, I. Repreſent the Neceſſity and Happineſs of this Diſpoſition of Soul; and then, II. Suggeſt ſome of the moſt probable Means, that may be conducive to our attaining it.

The Neceſſity of it from Scripture.

I. [i] THE beſt of the Heathen Writers did not always reſolve the Goodneſs of moral Duties into a true Principle: They argued, indeed, from the Convenience, the Utility, the Beauty, and Credit of it, but they ſeldom derived its Origin from the Spring-Head, or diſcovered, that all its regular, its proper and vital Motions proceeded from the Heart. Nay, the Jews themſelves ſeemed, in a great Meaſure, to be ignorant of this Doctrine; and their Ignorance herein was the Ground of a common Error among them, that Concupiſcence, actual Concupiſcence, had not formally the Nature of Sin; and provided they performed the exterior Act, commanded by the Law of Moſes, they were leſs ſollicitous what became of the inward Diſpoſitions of the Mind. But our Bleſſed Saviour has raiſed human Virtue to its proper Height, and his improving Expoſitions of the Moſaic Law have taught and inſtructed us, wherein the Holineſs of a Chriſtian muſt conſiſt. [k] Ye have heard, that it has been ſaid by them of old Time, Thou ſhalt not commit Adultery; but I ſay unto you, that whoſoever looketh upon a Woman, to luſt after her, hath committed Adultery with her already in his Heart. By luſting, however, here, as we ſaid [l] in another Place, muſt not be underſtood the bare natural Appetite of Concupiſcence, which, as ſuch, is indifferent, but the irregular Determination of it, always attended with the Conſent of the Will; which Conſent may either relate to the Deſire itſelf, or to the acting of it: If to the Act, then the Man is, in all moral Accounts, a compleat Adulterer, and will be ſo eſteemed by God, who as he ſees, ſo he judges by the Heart, and will not think a Man more innocent, only for wanting an Opportunity of committing what he intended. But if the Conſent be only to the Deſire, then, tho' the Man be not a compleat Adulterer, yet he may be truly ſaid, in the Stile of the Pſalmiſt, to be [m] a Partaker with the Adulterer, to have entered within ſome Degrees of Unchaſtity, [g] James i. 2. [h] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II. [i] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [k] Matth. v. 27. [l] Vid. the Expoſition of the Seventh Commanment. [m] Pſal. l. 18.

Unchaſtity, and to have tranſgreſſed againſt that Chriſtian Purity, which forbids all Conſent, not only to the compleat Acts, but alſo to the firſt Motions of Sin.

AND indeed, the very Genius and Deſign of the Chriſtian Religion, is, to deſtroy [n] Corruption, eſpecially that, which is in the World through Luſt; to teach us to [o] crucify our Affections, and inordinate Deſires; and to [p] waſh, and ſanctify us in the Name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God: For [q] this is the Will of God, ſays the Apoſtle, even your Sanctification, that ye ſhould abſtain from Fornication; that every one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſs his Veſſel in Sanctification and Honour; for God hath not called us unto Uncleanneſs, but unto Holineſs. And as he has thus called us, ſo he hath given us Reaſons, entirely new, and ſuch as the World never knew before, to engage our Practice of this Duty: For [r] know ye not, ſays the ſame Apoſtle, that your Bodies are the Members of Chriſt? Know ye not, that they are the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, and which ye have of God? Know ye not, that ye are not your own, but are bought with a Price; therefore glorify God in your Body, and in your Spirit, which is God's? [s] Our Bodies are not our own to uſe, or to abuſe at Pleaſure, becauſe our Saviour has actually purchaſed them to himſelf, by his Death and Sufferings for their Redemption. They are the Members of Chriſt, who, having thought fit to honour the whole human Nature, Body as well as Soul, by his appearing in it, has taken us into ſo near a Relation to him, as ought not to be abaſed to Filthineſs and Pollution: And laſtly, they are the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, dwelling in them, to direct and influence our Minds, and therefore ſhould not be employed in any Thing unworthy his Preſence, or repugnant to his Purity.

AND if the Spirit of God is to dwell in our Minds, there is this Neceſſity for their Sanctification, [t] that, however his firſt Addreſſes and influential Viſits may prevent all previous Diſpoſitions, yet his fixed and reſidential Abode in us cannot be affected without an antecedent Preparation of Heart. And for this Reaſon, I ſuppoſe it is, that though all Men are, ſome Time or other, Partakers of the common and ordinary Motions of the Spirit, yet none, but very good Men, have the Privilege to be the Temples of his Reſidence, which ſeems to be intimated to us, in that remarkable Paſſage of the Revelation; [u] Behold I ſtand at the Door, and knock; if any Man hear my Voice, and open the Door, I will come in to him, and ſup with him: For by ſtanding at the Door, and knocking, is meant common and preventing Grace, and this indeed is uſed to all, without any previous Qualifications; but he does not come in and ſup, he does not take up his Reſidence, and become a familiar Gueſt, till his Voice be heard, and the Door opened, i. e. till the Man has well attended to, and complied with, thoſe antecedent Motions and Suggeſtions.

Its Bleſſedneſs here,

GOOD Reaſon therefore had our gracious Saviour to pronounce a Bleſſing upon the Pure in Spirit, and to recommend this amiable Diſpoſition of Mind, under no leſs a Conſideration, than that they ſhall ſee God. For, having God always in their Hearts, they cannot fail, even at preſent, of having a ſenſible Perception of him: * They ſee him in his Word, how good and reaſonable all his Precepts are, how precious his Promiſes, and how juſt his Threatenings. They ſee him in his Ordinances, what Profit, what Advantage he intends by them, how he deſigns them for Channels to convey his Grace, and Spirit, and Influences to their Soul. They ſee him in his Works, how wonderful and powerful he is, with what rare Art and Contrivance he hath founded the Earth upon nothing, and ſpread out the Heavens like a Curtain. They ſee him in his Providence, how righteous, and holy, and regular he is, in managing the Affairs, and adjuſting the great Revolutions of the World. They ſee him in his Mercies, how gracious and condeſcenſive he is, how vigilant in his Care, and how bountiful in his Proviſion for them. They ſee him in their Afflictions, how wiſe and kind he is in ſending them, and what Love, and Benefit, and Edification he deſigns by them: They ſee him, in ſhort, in the Knowledge and Contemplation of his Divine Nature and Perfections here; and, when their own Nature comes to be ſpiritualized, ſhall live in his Preſence, and have an immediate and perceptive Sight of him hereafter.

and hereafter.

[x] THAT inward and ſpiritual Purity has a peculiar Aptneſs, in order to the Viſion of God, we need not doubt, if we conſider, that the only Reaſon, why we ſee

[n] 2 Pet. i. 4. [o] Gal. v. 24. [p] 1 Cor. vi. 11. [q] 1 Theſ. iv, 3, &c. [r] 1 Cor. vi. 15, &c. [s] Gardiner's Sermons. [t] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II. [u] Rev. iii. 20.
* Horneck's Sermons, Vol. I. [x] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I.

ſee not God now, is the Groſſneſs of this Tabernacle, wherein the Soul is incaſed. This is that black Skreen, which parts the material from the intelligible World; and therefore the more abſtract we are from the Body, and from the bodily Life, the more fit we ſhall be, both to behold, and to endure the Rays of the Divine Light. We find, that even now, the purer and finer our Blood and Spirits are, the freer and clearer are our Thoughts; the brighter and more tranſparent this Glaſs is, the more the ideal Light will dart in upon our Souls: And in like Manner hereafter, the purer the Soul is, the purer will all its Faculties and Operations be; the leſs it retains of corporeal Guſts and Reliſhes, the more recollected and undivided will its Powers be, and, conſequently, more ſtrong and vigorous upon the Object where they fix. Nor will the Soul itſelf only be prepared for the bliſsful Viſion, but convey a Fitneſs likewiſe to its Reſurrection-Body: For, though we muſt ſee through a Glaſs then, as well as now, yet will the Glaſs be clearer, according to the different Purity of the Soul, which, as we may obſerve even in this Life, gives a particular Brightneſs of Air to the Countenance, and makes the Face to ſhine with an inimitable Luſtre. Nor can we ſuppoſe, but that God, who is ſo great a Lover, will alſo be a liberal Rewarder of inward Purity, and, as he delights to dwell with Souls of this Complexion now, will reveal himſelf more plentifully, and make larger Communications of his Preſence, and Emanations of his Goodneſs to them hereafter.

* WHO then ſhall aſcend unto the Hill of the Lord, ſays the Royal Pſalmiſt, and who ſhall ſtand up in his holy Place? Even he that hath clean Hands, and a pure Heart: A pure Heart is indeed the indiſpenſable Condition of everlaſting Happineſs; for without Holineſs none ſhall ſee the Lord, and conſidering the cloſe and neceſſary Connexion there is between Purity of Heart, and Purity of Life, it may not improperly be ſaid, that it is the only Condition requiſite. For, if our Heart be pure, our Hands will be clean too, and if our Heart be with God, and all our Actions, our whole Service, though otherwiſe very imperfect, will be graciouſly accepted, and rewarded by him.

Means to attain it.

II. How then ſhall we acquire to ourſelves this neceſſary, and ſo beneficial a Virtue? And what Endeavours ſhall we uſe, in order to cleanſe our Hearts, and purify our Minds? 1. [x] The firſt Thing we are to do is, to attain right Notions of God, and a ſtrong Conviction of his Omniſcience and Inſpection; that [y] he is the Searcher of all Hearts, and the Underſtander of our Thoughts afar off; who [z] compaſſes our Path and our Lying-down, and is acquainted with all our Ways. And as he is the Inſpector of our Hearts, ſo he is of purer Eyes than to behold Vanity, and has that ſtrong Averſion to Sin, that he will never abide in that Breaſt, where a mad Rabble of depraved Appetites and vicious Imaginations have ſettled their Abode: For [a] what Agreement, as the Apoſtle argues, hath the Temple of God with Idols? Now ye are the Temple of the living God, as God hath ſaid, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my People. [b] Suppoſing we were to receive ſome mighty Prince, or Perſon of great Quality into our Houſe, would we not make all Things neat and clean, and take Care that nothing be wanting, that may give him Content and Satisfaction; that every Chamber, every Room in the Houſe, be ſet out, and garniſhed, and adorned, as far as our Ability reaches? But now what is the greateſt Man, the greateſt Potentate upon Earth, to the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; to a God purer than Angels, purer than the Sun and Stars, dwelling in Light inacceſſible, and by whoſe Will and Command the whole Creation ſtands or falls? Since then this Sovereign Majeſty is willing to lodge, nay, to dwell in our Souls, the Conſideration cannot but ſtrike us, how holy, how pious, how chaſte, how pure our Thoughts and Affections ought to be, in order to give ſo magnificent a Gueſt a ſuitable Entertainment.

2. † ANOTHER Means to implant in our Minds the Grace of Purity, will be frequently to contemplate the Joys and Felicities of the beatific Viſion, which God hath appointed for its Reward. For if we are pleaſed with the Sight and Converſation of an intimate Friend, eſpecially after a long and tedious Abſence, and think it a joyful Thing to behold the Face of a reconciled Enemy; let us then conſider, what it will be for us to be admitted into the Preſence and the bright Reflections of that Countenance, which alone can ſpeak Peace and ſolid Comfort to us. Nay, let

* Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4. [x] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [y] 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. [z] Pſal. cxxxix. 2, 3. [a] 2 Cor. vi. 16. [b] Horneck's Sermons, Vol. I. † Gardiner's Sermons.

let us bear in mind the Honour and great Privilege of being called up to ſerve the King of Glory, in his own Court, and near his Perſon; where we may for ever contemplate, even at the neareſt View, his infinite Majeſty, Power, Wiſdom, and Goodneſs. Queſtionleſs, did we keep Heaven conſtantly in our Eye, and fix it upon our Minds, what it is to ſee and converſe with God, the Reflection would naturally ariſe, that we ought to purify ourſelves, even as he is pure. To which Purpoſe it will be neceſſary,

3. To be earneſt and importunate in our Prayers, that he would not lead us into Temptation, but keep us from ſuch Objects, as are apt to kindle evil Thoughts, and reſtrain the great Enemy of Souls from ſuggeſting any: Above all, [c] that he would ſend his Bleſſed Spirit to our Aid and Aſſiſtance; to enlighten our Underſtandings, to purify our Affections, and to fix it indelibly upon our Minds, [d] that to be carnally minded is Death, but to be ſpiritually minded is Life and Peace.

7. Of Heavenly-Mindedneſs.

THERE are two Senſes, wherein the Word Heaven may be taken, either for the State of another Life in general, or for the particular Glory and Happineſs of that State. In the former of theſe Senſes, [e] Heavenly-Mindedneſs implies our perpetual Remembrance of our Mortality; our having a conſtant Proſpect into the other World, which muſt be our final Home, and ſtedfaſtly looking beyond the Horizon of Time, to the long Day of Eternity; our dwelling, in ſhort, on the Meditation of the four laſt Things, Heaven, Hell, Death, and Judgment; how great they are in their Conſequence, how certain in their Event, and how near in their Approach; and, in Conſideration of this, always waiting, and preparing ourſelves for this great and important Change. Heavenly-Mindedneſs, what.

IN the latter Senſe of the Word, Heavenly-Mindedneſs implies our Contemplation of the infinite Perfection of the Divine Eſſence, the firſt of Beings, and the laſt of Ends, and the inconceivable Happineſs of thoſe, who ſhall enjoy the Communications of his Bleſſedneſs. It is to meditate upon, and have always in View, that Weight of Glory, that incorruptible Crown, with which the Sufferings of this preſent Time are not worthy to be compared, no, not to be mentioned: To meditate Day and Night upon that happy Time, when we ſhall be Partakers of Moſes's Wiſh, and admitted to that intimate and naked Viſion of that myſterious and incomprehenſible Excellence, which is too great for our mortal Faculties, and which none can [f] ſee and live: To meditate upon the bleſſed Society of Saints and Angels; upon the delicious Repaſts of Anthems and Hallelujahs, and that more raviſhing Harmony of Divine Love, and intellectual Sympathy; upon the elevated and raiſed Perfections of a glorified Soul, the Enlargement of its Underſtanding, the Sublimation of its Will and Affections, and upon the Angelical Clarity and Divine Temper of our Reſurrection-Body; in ſhort, upon all thoſe glorious Things, which are ſpoken of the City of God, and upon the infinite Conſolations of that joyful Sentence, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you: And laſtly, it is to contemplate all this, not in a cold and indifferent Manner, as if it were a diſtant and precarious Reverſion, but as a State that will ſhortly and certainly be, and therefore to be embraced with that Faith and Aſſurance, which is [g] the Subſtance of Things hoped for, and the Evidence of Things not ſeen.

ALL this the Word may be ſaid to import; and therefore, putting both of theſe Senſes together, we ſhall, 1. Obſerve the Reaſonableneſs of the Duty; and, 2. Some of the chief Benefits that ariſe from it.

I. WHAT worthy Notions the wiſeſt of the Heathen World (ſuch, I mean, as believed the Immortality of the Soul) had of a future State; how delightful they repreſented the Place, the Company, the Entertainments prepared for their Reception after Death, is what we had Occaſion, more than once, in the Courſe of this Work, to obſerve. Upon theſe Conſiderations the Account we have of their Philoſophers is, that they choſe to live abſtractly, and dwelt much upon the Contemplation of what Reaſonableneſs of it, from the Light of Nature.

[c] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [d] Rom. viii. 6. [e] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II. [f] Exod. xxxiii. 20. [g] Heb. xi. 1.

they were to be hereafter. The Epicureans, indeed, who had no Thoughts of a future Exiſtence, made this their ſtanding Maxim, Let us eat and drink, for To-morrow we die: And in this they acted conſiſtently enough; for, how vain and contemptible ſoever the World in itſelf may be, yet, upon their Hypotheſis, it was their greateſt Prudence to make as much of it as they could, becauſe it was their All: But thoſe, who had better Conceptions of their rational Part, and of its ſurviving the Funeral of the Body, had another Way of Reaſoning. They perceived, that their Soul, in this State, was, as it were, out of its Element, confined to a Priſon of Fleſh, and thence hindered from acting with that Freedom and Vivacity, which, upon ſome certain Sallies, they found was congenial to it. They perceived, that our preſent State of Life, both by reaſon of its Shortneſs, and the other Vanities and Vexations that attend it, was not conſiderable enough to juſtify the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God in creating the World. They perceived, that Man, endued with ſuch large Capacities, and impatient Deſires of Happineſs, which nothing on Earth could ſatisfy, was a very poor and contemptible Creature indeed, and the more ſo for being ſo highly exalted at preſent, if this was the only Scene he was to act, and finally periſhed when he died. And, from theſe Obſervations, they inferred, that this Life was but a Paſſage to the next, a ſhort Voyage to an Harbour of Reſt; that Heaven, in ſhort, was their Home, and their native Region, and, in Conſequence of this Perſuaſion, what was their End and ſovereign Happineſs, that they made the Subject of their Thoughts, and Deſires, and daily Contemplations.

From Revelation. 2. THIS was the Reaſoning of the honeſt Heathens, but the Chriſtian Religion has furniſhed us with Arguments of a peculiar Nature. St Paul, writing to the Philippians, propounds his own Practice, as a Pattern for their Imitation; [h] Beloved, be Followers together of me, and mark them which walk ſo, as ye have us for an Enſample; for our Converſation is in Heaven, from whence alſo we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: [i] The Word, which we render Converſation, ſignifies Citizenſhip, and alludes to a Practice frequent among the Romans in particular, whereby not only private Perſons, but whole Cities and Provinces, were admitted to certain Rights and Immunities peculiar that Commonwealth and Conſtitution, though they were neither Natives, nor Inhabitants of the City of Rome. Theſe were ſometimes beſtowed freely, as a Mark of Friendſhip and Favour; ſometimes purchaſed at a conſiderable Price; ſometimes inherited by Deſcent: But which Way ſoever conveyed, the Poſſeſſion of them was eſteemed a very valuable Advantage: And, in Alluſion to this, the Apoſtle intimates, that Chriſtians are Denizens of Heaven, and, tho' living now at ſome Diſtance from thence, are nevertheleſs incorporated there; ruled by the ſame Laws, and admitted to the ſame Privileges, and therefore ought to live in the ſame Manner with the bleſſed Inhabitants of that City which is above.

WE cannot, indeed, in all Points, come up to their Perfection, till we come to live in the ſame Place where they do; but we are bound to aſpire at as great a Reſemblance of them, as our preſent Condition will admit; as therefore they are happy, beyond all Imagination, in the Viſion and Fruition of Almighty God, ſo ſhould we, by devout Prayers and pious Meditations, approach and draw near unto him; contemplate the Glory of his Majeſty, the Beauties of his Works, the Wiſdom of his Providence, the Wonders of his Mercy and Goodneſs, and that amazing Inſtance and Illuſtration of it, the Redemption of loſt Mankind by the Death of his dear Son. As they are ſet above the Vanities and Changes of this World, by the preſent Enjoyment of Bliſs unchangeable and eternal; ſo ſhould the Proſpect of that Bliſs raiſe our Hearts above the preſent World, inſpire a generous Diſdain of all the infincere Pleaſures and ſhort uncertain Advantages here below; lighten our Afflictions, moderate our Paſſions, and reconcile us to the Apprehenſions and Approaches of that Diſſolution, which, in Death, lays the Seeds of an endleſs Immortality. As they are freed from Sin, and ſhine in uninterrupted Holineſs; ſo ſhould we conſider ourſelves, as Perſons no longer under the Power of a carnal Principle, but animated by a Divine Spirit to a rational Life, a Life of Temperance and Chaſtity, of ſevere Virtue and exemplary Piety, of Activity and unwearied Induſtry in doing Good, and of ſuch habitual Mortification of thoſe Affections, which move us to Evil, that as with the Bleſſed above they are not, ſo with us they may be, as though they were not.

3. AN-

[h] Phil. iii. 17, 20.

[i] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

3. ANOTHER Argument, peculiarly Chriſtian, to engage our Endeavours and Aſpirations after Heaven, is what St Paul makes uſe of to the Coloſſians; [k] if ye then be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek thoſe Things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth on the Right-Hand of God: Set your Affections on Things above, and not on Things on the Earth; for ye are dead, dead to Sin and to the World, and your Life is hid with Chriſt in God; the Force of which Reaſonings is plainly this,——That it becometh the Diſciples to imitate their Maſter, and the Members to conform to the Head, to conform in a figurative, though they cannot in a literal Senſe. Though, therefore, with Chriſt we cannot as yet looſen the Bands of Death, and break through the Priſon of the Grave; yet we can now riſe with him from the Death of Sin to Newneſs of Life, and by his Reſurrection are not only enabled, but alſo admoniſhed ſo to do: And although, in his bodily Aſcenſion, we cannot, as he told St Peter, follow him now; yet we can, in ſome Senſe, aſcend with him by a proper Elevation of our Thoughts and Affections, and from the Contemplation of his Aſcenſion are myſtically invited ſo to do. [l] The Aſcenſion of our Saviour, in ſhort, as it is the Pledge and Pattern of ours, adds new Supplements of Support to our Hopes of arriving at that bleſſed Place whither he is gone before, and muſt needs therefore, at the ſame Time, fan the Flame of our Affections, and make them tend upward: For with good Reaſon therefore may the pious and devout Soul now bear up herſelf upon the Wings of Contemplation, Love, and Deſire, and follow her aſcending Lord, where the Eyes of the wondering Apoſtles were forced to leave him, and, in the Words of Eliſha to his departing Maſter, ſay, As the Lord liveth, and as my Soul liveth, I will not leave thee; bleſſed and holy is he, that has Part in this firſt Aſcenſion; for on him the ſecond Death ſhall have no Power. Which leads us,

II. To obſerve ſome of the chief Benefits, that ariſe from our being poſſeſſed of this Virtue; as it is the beſt Expedient to beget and confirm in us a Contempt of the World; to mitigate and aſſwage the Evils of Life; to give Pleaſure and Satisfaction to the Mind here; and to fit and prepare the Soul for Happineſs heneafter. The Benefits of Heavenly-mindedneſs.

1. WE, who live on the Face of the Earth, may think it a Body of conſiderable Magnitude, but, if we were to take a View of it from one of the higher Orbs, it would appear no greater than a Point. Now, though this might be demonſtrated upon mathematical Principles, yet, as every one is not capable of doing that, ſuch an high and elevated Proſpect would certainly ſave us the Trouble. The Matter is the ſame in the Caſe before us. This World, conſidered alone, may carry perhaps with it a ſpecious and good Appearance, and he that conſiders it in this Light, will need Reaſon and Argument to convince him of its Vanity; but now it is but converſing a little in the other World, and taking a View of it from thence, and we ſhall find, that, without any more ado, it will ſhrink away almoſt into nothing. From ſuch an elevated Proſpect, all the Pride and Gaiety of this Earth would be but like the Flutter of ſo many Butterflies, and the Buſineſs and Hurry of Life, like the Toils of ſo many Ants about a little Mole-hill.

2. AND as the Contemplation and Deſire of Heaven leſſens the Good, ſo it leſſens the Evil of the preſent Life, and is an effectual Means both to wean us from the one, and ſupport us under the other. That Wants and Afflictions, Diſeaſes and Languiſhings, Sorrow and Decay are Incumbrances upon Mortality, from which the brighteſt Virtue and moſt heavenly Diſpoſitions are not exempted, is verified by daily Experience; but then we miſtake the Matter much, if we ſuppoſe the ſame Calamities equally grievous to all. The Senſe of theſe is unqueſtionably more or leſs afflicting, as they find a Man's Mind more or leſs armed to encounter them; and every Impreſſion is proportionably tender, as it wounds us in the Part moſt ſenſible, and threatens the Deſtruction of that, wherein we eſteem our Happineſs to conſiſt: From whence it follows, [m] that to mind earthly Things, in St Paul's Meaning, is to multiply Sorrows to ourſelves, by giving Afflictions a Power of making us miſerable; but that, to have our Converſation in Heaven, is the Way to conſult our preſent Eaſe, as well as our future Happineſs. For while we look upon Heaven as our Home and Place of Reſt, the Inconveniencies upon our Journey are eaſily diſpenſed with, and we learn to be content in our Travels, with the Want of thoſe Accommodations, of which we have [k] Col. iii. 1, &c.

[l] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II.
[m] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, have Plenty and Abundance to welcome our Arrival at our fixed Habitation; where, the more Troubles we have paſſed through, the kinder Uſage we ſhall find, and ſo either totally forget them, or remember them with Pleaſure, when [n] our light Affliction, which was but for a Moment, hath wrought for us a far more exceeding and eternal Weight of Glory.

3. AND as the Deſire and Contemplation of Heaven and heavenly Things mitigates the Afflictions of Life; ſo, at one and the ſame Time, it both furniſhes the Soul with the greateſt Pleaſure here, and prepares it for the higheſt Enjoyments hereafter. That intellectual Pleaſures are greater than ſenſual, the Senſualiſts themſelves will hardly deny: But now, of all intellectual Pleaſures, to contemplate the infinite Perfection of God, and the Happineſs of thoſe bleſſed Spirits that enjoy him; the Order of Angels, and that noble and bleſſed Company of Saints; to contemplate the laſt and richeſt Scene of Providence, and the Diſcovery of all the reſt that went before, when the Reaſon of all difficult and perplexing Appearances ſhall be made plain, and the manifold Wiſdom of God ſet in a clear Light; to have our Minds employed about the greateſt and beſt Things; to walk with God, and keep a conſtant Communion with him, muſt needs be the ſweeteſt, as well as the nobleſt Entertainment, on this Side Heaven. But, beſides the Entertainment it gives to our Minds, it preſents to our Thoughts the Nature and Quality of the Happineſs we are to enjoy above, viz, that it is a clear Viſion, and ardent Love of God, who cannot be ſeen by him that lives, much leſs by him that lives ill. And this cannot fail of putting us upon thinking, that an Holy and Divine Frame of Spirit is abſolutely requiſite, not only as a Condition to our Admiſſion into Heaven, but ſuch a Condition likewiſe to our Enjoyment of it, that, without this Diſpoſition, there is no being happy, even though we were in it. And from this Conſideration, a Man naturally paſſes, to fit himſelf for the Enjoyment of his Maker, to purify himſelf, as he is pure, and to purge and ſpiritualize his Nature, that ſo he may be qualified for the refined Joys above.

[o] WITH what Pleaſure then ſhould we think of theſe great and glorious Things, which God hath prepared for them that love him; [p] of that Inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, which fadeth not away, reſerved for us in the Heavens? How ſhould we welcome the Thoughts of that happy Hour, when we ſhall be removed from all the Troubles and Temptations of a wicked and ill-natured World; when we ſhall be paſt all Storms, and ſafely landed in the Regions of Bliſs and Immortality? O bleſſed Time! (may the good Chriſtians ſay) when Mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up of Life, and we ſhall enter upon the Poſſeſſion of that Happineſs and Glory, which God hath promiſed, and our Faith hath believed, and our Hopes have raiſed us to the Expectation of; when we ſhall be eaſed of all our Pains, and reſolved of all our Doubts, and purged from all our Sins, and freed from all our Fears; made happy beyond our Hopes, and have all that Happineſs ſecured to us, beyond the Power of Time or Chance: When we ſhall know God, and other Things, without Study; and love him, and one another, without Meaſure; and ſerve and praiſe him without Wearineſs; and obey him without Reluctancy; and ſtill be more and more delighted in knowing, and loving, and praiſing, and obeying him, to all Eternity. [q] Bleſſed is the Man, whom thou chuſeſt, O Lord, and receiveſt unto thee: He ſhall dwell in thy Courts, and ſhall be ſatisfied with the Pleaſures of thy Houſe, even of thy holy Temple.

[n] 2 Cor. iv. 17. [o] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [p] 1 Pet. i. 4. [q] Pſal. lxv. 4.

SECT.

SECT. I.

Of external Duties to GOD, and,

I. OF PRAYER.

PRAYER [r] is a ſolemn Act of worſhipping the ſupreme Being, whereby we recognize his eternal Power and Godhead; whereby we acknowledge, that he is the Creator and Governor of the World; that we abſolutely, in every Reſpect, depend on him; that every good and perfect Gift cometh from him; and that, in all our Exigencies, he is ready to hear, and able to relieve us. So that [r] the Reaſon of our making our Requeſts known unto God, is founded upon the Belief of his infinite Goodneſs, which diſpoſes him to grant the Petitions of his Servants; of his unlimited Power, which enables him to fulfil all their Deſires; and of his Truth and Veracity, which make it impoſſible for him not to keep the Promiſes which he hath made, of giving to thoſe that aſk. This is the Duty: And, I. The Grounds and Reaſonableneſs hereof; together, II. With the Conditions requiſite to make it an acceptable Service to God, will be the Scope of this Diſcourſe. Prayer, what.

I. [s] IT has been the Opinion of the beſt and wiſeſt Men of all Ages, that the chief Deſign of making Man was, that there might be a Being able to apprehend and ſet forth the Glory of God in theſe lower Regions. For the Creation ſeemed to be imperfect, and the Glory, which redounds to God from his Works, obſcure, while there was no Creature able to take Notice of them. Man therefore, the laſt, beſt Work of God, was formed to ſupply this Want; and, as all other Creatures were made for his Uſe and Entertainment, he himſelf was ſet apart for the Service and Worſhip of God. To this End he was endued with the angelick Faculty of Underſtanding, and the no leſs uſeful and noble Inſtrument of Speech, by which he was capable of cloathing his Thoughts with outward Expreſſions, that, by his Reaſon, he might apprehend, and, by his Voice, celebrate the Divine Perfections; and, as the Prieſt of Nature, offer up the Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving for the whole Creation. And into what Raptures of Admiration, into what Expreſſions of Gratitude, may we ſuppoſe the firſt Man to break forth, when he awaked out of the Duſt into Being, and beheld this goodly Fabrick of the World, and himſelf, the greateſt and happieſt Creature in it! Whence the Order, whence the Beauty, whence the Variety of this bliſsful Paradiſe around him; nay, whence himſelf? Such wonderful Effects muſt neceſſarily raiſe him up to contemplate the firſt Cauſe, from whence they flowed; and we may piouſly preſume, that the firſt Time he opened his Lips, was to ſhew forth his Creator's Praiſe. The Grounds of it, from our own Nature.

THUS early did the Duty of Praiſe and Thankſgiving to God begin, commanded by no Laws, enforced by no Motives, but thoſe of Gratitude and Inclination. For our firſt Parents had no Wants to be relieved, no Grievances to be redreſſed; even their Deſires for future Mercies were prevented, and all they could aſk of God, in that bliſsful State, was only the Continuance of it. But when unhappily they fell from their Innocence, and thereupon contracted Guilt, and entailed Miſery upon their Poſterity, Supplication and Prayer became the neceſſary Duty of Mankind; and ſo will continue, as long as we have Infirmities to be healed, and Wants to be relieved, and Sins to be pardoned, which will be as long as we abide in this State of Mortality. [u] Our Dependence upon God makes it neceſſary to ſue to him for what we want, as well as to give him Praiſe for what we have: Our Guilt, and Liableneſs to his Juſtice, prompt us to ſeek his Favour by humble Contrition for Sin, and earneſt Deſire of his Pardon: Our Infirmities and Temptations ſhew us, how abſolutely needful it is to be aſſiſted by his Grace, both to recover ourſelves by true Repentance, and to perſevere in doing the Things that he requires: And, laſtly, the common Ties of Humanity, and the Religion of [r] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [s] Smalridge's Sermons. [t] Cotes's Sermons.

[u] Clagget's Sermons, Vol. II.

Charity oblige us to pray for one another, as well as for ourſelves: So that natural Light diſcovers this Duty, and ſhews it through all the Ways of Invocation, or Calling upon God.

From univerſal Practice.

AND accordingly, if we look into the Heathen World, we ſhall find, that no Nation was ever yet ſo rude and barbarous, as not to have ſome Form of religious Worſhip; and that, however the Vulgar might differ in the Object of their Adoration, the wiſeſt, in moſt Nations, were generally of the Roman Orator's Opinion; * "That the Nature of God may juſtly challenge the Worſhip of Men, becauſe "of its ſuperlative Excellence, Bleſſedneſs, and Eternity; and that, whoever doubts "or denies this, (as [x] Ariſtotle aſſerts) ought not to be dealt with by Arguments, "but by Puniſhments." Their Acknowledgment therefore was, [y] that all their Actions ſhould begin with the Gods, and that a Bleſſing could not be derived upon them, without imploring their Aid; nay, [z] that the Sacrifices were not duly offered, nor the Gods rightly worſhipped, without Prayer. The Stoics indeed, who imputed ſo much to their own Strength, ſeemed [a] to exclude the Divine Aſſiſtance, and, in Conſequence of that, to ſhut our Prayer; but we find them frequently retracting this Opinion; and teaching their Diſciples, that [b] as no Man can be good without God, ſo their Buſineſs was, [c] to pray for Health of Mind and Body, but more eſpecially for the former. And indeed, whatever ſome profligate People may pretend, and, in the Height of their Jollity, ſay to themſelves, Who is the Almighty, that we ſhould fear, and call upon him? There are ſome certain Intervals, viz. when Anguiſh and Diſtreſs come upon them, and all human Means of Relief and Support fail, that they will naturally cry unto God, and endeavour to take Sanctuary in his All-ſufficiency: Inſomuch that it may juſtly be queſtioned, whether ever there was a Sinner, ſo wicked and obdurate, who, in the laſt Efforts of Life, (could we but ſee what paſſed within) was able to overcome all ſecret Prayer, and Motion of the Soul towards God.

The Reaſonableneſs of it.

AND indeed, if we conſider the Matter rightly, what can we ſuppoſe more reaſonable, than that the ſovereign Lord of all the World ſhould be acknowledged by us? [d] That we, who do continually depend upon him, ſhould, ever and anon, be looking up to him, and expreſſing that Dependence? For is it not fit, that we, who every Moment experience a thouſand Inſtances of his Kindneſs, partake of a thouſand Mercies and Favours from his Hand, and muſt periſh the next Minute, unleſs they be continued to us; is it not highly fit and reaſonable, I ſay, that we ſhould take Notice of theſe Things to our bounteous Benefactor? We ſhould think it very ill Manners to paſs by our Prince, or even any of our Betters, without ſaluting them, or, ſome Way or other, teſtifying our Reſpect to them, though they had no Way particularly obliged us; but if we were beholden to them for our Daily Bread, to come into their Preſence without taking Notice of them, or their Bounty to us, would be intolerable: How much more intolerable therefore muſt it be to paſs by the Almighty, Day after Day, nay, to be in his Preſence continually, (as indeed we always are) and yet neither pay any Homage and Reverence to him, as he is our ſupreme Lord, nor any Acknowledgments, as he is our daily Preſerver? Eſpecially conſidering, that this is one of the moſt delightful and honourable Employments that our Natures are capable of.

The Pleaſure and Honour of it.

VICIOUS Men perhaps may have other Conceptions, but, as they have no Experience of Devotion, they are not competent Judges; thoſe only, who have a good Senſe and Reliſh of God upon their Minds, and have uſed and accuſtomed themſelves to ſpiritual Exerciſes, can form right Notions of it: And to ſuch we appeal, whether the Delights, and Satisfaction, and Conſolation they receive from converſing with God, and an hearty pouring out their Souls unto him, be not inexpreſſible? Whether they do not find more Joy, and Peace, and Comfort, in their Attendance upon God's Service, either in publick or private, than ever they did from the Pleaſure and Gratifications of any of their outward Senſes. As much as the

* Nat. Deor. L. I. [x] Topic. i. 9.

[y] A Diis immortalibus nobis agendi capienda primordia, CIC. de Leg. L. II. Benè ac ſapienter majores inſtituerunt, ut rerum agendarum, ita dicendi initium à precationibus capere, quod nihil ritè nihilque providenter homines ſine Deorum immortalium ope, conſilio, & honore auſpicarentur. PLIN. Paneg.

[z] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. L. XXVIII. c. ii. [a] Quàm ſtultum eſt optare, cùm poſſis à te impetrare? Non ſunt ad Cœlum elevandæ manus. SEN. Epiſt. 41. [b] Vir bonus ſine Deo nemo eſt, Ibid.

[c] Roga bonam mentem, bonam valetudinem animi deinde corporis. Epiſt. 10. [d] Sharpe's Sermons, Vol. I.

the Soul is more pure and excellent than the Body, ſo much are the Pleaſures and Gratifications of that, more exquiſitely delicious than thoſe, which ariſe from corporeal Objects: But of all the Pleaſures of the Soul, thoſe, that it receives from the Communications of God, in the Exerciſe of Devotion, are incomparably the higheſt and moſt affecting; inſomuch that, however we talk of Pleaſures and Enjoyments, we may truly affirm, that no Man ever found them, until he became acquainted with God; until he was made ſenſible of his Love, Partaker of his Favours, and lived in an entire Friendſhip and Communion with him, which is chiefly, if not only, expreſſed and maintained by Prayer, and other Exerciſes of Devotion.

WE account it, and that very juſtly, a mighty Privilege and Dignity to be known to Princes and great Men; to have their Ear, and enjoy the Liberty of Acceſs to them at all Times: But what is this to the Honour and Dignity we receive, in having Leave given us, at all Times, to come into the Preſence of the Great King of the Univerſe, whoſe Power and Goodneſs are infinite? That we, poor ſinful Duſt and Aſhes, ſhould be permitted to ſpeak to ſo tranſcendent a Majeſty! Nay, ſhould have free Liberty given us to converſe with him, as with a Friend! to open all our Wants, to acquaint him with all our Concernments, to make known every Thought of our Hearts, and every Affair of our Lives to him! Nay, and to be aſſured, that he will be ſo far from taking amiſs this Boldneſs in us, that he will favourably accept all our Applications, and make us as kind Returns, as we ourſelves can wiſh or deſire! What greater Honour are we capable of than this? And how far are we ſunk below all the Ambition of human Nature, when we will not take all Opportunities of thus honouring and doing Credit to ourſelves, in making our Addreſſes to God? Eſpecially conſidering, farther, the many great Benefits and Advantages that accrue to us hereby.

The Benefits and Advantages of it.

OF what ſingular Efficacy the due Performance of this Duty is, to procure all temporal Bleſſings, and avert all temporal Judgments, we are inſtructed in Solomon's Prayer, at the Dedication of the Temple: [e] If thy People Iſrael be ſmitten down before the Enemy; if Heaven be ſhut up, and there be no Rain; if there be in the Land Famine and Peſtilence; or if thy People go out to Battle againſt their Enemy; then if they pray towards this Place, and confeſs thy Name, hear thou their Prayer and Supplication in Heaven thy Dwelling-place; deliver them from their Afflictions, and maintain their Cauſe. So that, according to the wiſe Man's Account, if Wars infeſt a Nation, Prayer is the ſureſt Procurer of Peace or Victory; if Dearth or Famine rage in a Land, this reſtores Plenty and Abundance; if the Heavens be as Braſs, and the Earth as Iron, this diſſolves them, and makes them relent into Showers and Fatneſs; if the Peſtilence reigns in the Streets, this holy Breathing can purge the Air, and diſpel all noxious Vapours: In fine, whatever Calamities, whether private or publick, our Sins have drawn down upon us, a devout Performance of this Duty is able to remove them, and to ſecure the Bleſſing of God, both upon our Perſons and our Labours, upon our Baſket and Store, upon our Families, upon our Employments, and upon all that we either have or do. Nay, ſuch is the Virtue of Prayer, that it makes every Thing we have a Bleſſing of God; and all the Actions of our natural or civil Life, however indifferent in themſelves, turn into Acts of Religion.

To mention but one Benefit more, which naturally ariſes from a conſcientious Practice of this Duty. [f] As in Prayer we ſet our Wants and Infirmities continually before us; we ſolemnly place ourſelves in the Preſence of God, and call on him, who ſees all our Actions; we enter into certain Purpoſes and Reſolves againſt Sin; ſettle our Minds into Seriouſneſs and Deliberation; abſtract them from ſecular and worldly Affairs, and, by frequent converſing with God, are changed (gradually and inſenſibly changed) into his Image and Similitude; ſo it cannot be doubted, but that this Exerciſe muſt needs be highly ſubſervient to the Purpoſes of Holineſs, as it produces Humility and Heavenly-Mindedneſs in us, Care and Vigilance in our Conduct, a reverential Fear of God in our Minds, and a Reſemblance of the Divine Perfections in our Nature. Nay, ſo very conducive is this one Duty towards a Life of Godlineſs, that we may venture to lay down theſe three Things for undoubted Truths. 1. [g] That it is impoſſible for any Man to be good, that lives without conſtant Prayer. 2. That whoſoever is good at preſent, if he diſuſes himſelf to this Duty, will not continue good long. And, 3. That whoever makes a Conſcience of praying frequently and heartily, heartily, and continues ſo to do, though he cannot, at preſent, be ſaid to be a good Man, yet it is impoſſible for him long to continue bad. He will certainly, at laſt, get the Victory over his Luſts and ill Habits; ſince his praying, as one expreſſes it, will either make him leave [h] ſinning, or ſinning make him leave praying.

[e] 1 Kings viii. 33, &c. [f] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [g] Sharpe's Sermons, Vol. I.

An Objection againſt it.

" BUT if God [i] be ſo omniſcient a Being, as to know what we ſtand in Need " of, without our telling him, or where we are preſſed, without our complaining; " what Reaſon is there for our acquainting him with our Wants or Calamities? " And if he be an infinitely good and kind Being, more ready to give, than we are " to aſk or receive, what Occaſion for urging and ſolliciting him to do what his " own eſſential Goodneſs will prompt him to do for us, without our aſking? Eſpe- " cially conſidering, [k] that he is an unchangeable Being, the ſame Yeſterday, To-day, " and for ever; the ſame not only in his Nature and Eſſence, but alſo in his Coun- " ſels and Purpoſes. What he hath once reſolved, he ſteadily executes; and is not " therefore to be moved by the Prayers and Supplications of clamorous and impor- " tunate Petitioners."

Anſwered.

Now, in Anſwer to all this, it may be obſerved, that tho' the Knowledge of God be ſuch, that he cannot but be ſenſible of all our Wants and Diſtreſſes, nor can we tell him any Thing, that he did not know before; yet it is but fit and reaſonable, that, as we are really in Want, we ſhould own our Wants to him; that, as we are really dependent upon him, we ſhould acknowledge that Dependence; acknowledge, I ſay, that we are indigent and impotent Creatures; that we need many Things, and what Things they are that we need; that we cannot ſupply our own Wants, and that God alone is able to ſupply them. All this, I ſay, God knows as well, nay, much better, than we do: But, nevertheleſs, it is but fit and becoming us, that we ſhould profeſs and own what we know to be true, and freely declare the Senſe of our own Weakneſs, and his All-ſufficiency. In like Manner, tho' the Goodneſs of God be infinite, ſo that we can ſet no Bounds to it, yet may it be truly ſaid to be limited by his own Wiſdom and Juſtice; and therefore, ſhould he be ſo indulgent, as to give us every Thing we wanted, without aſking, however this might magnify his Fondneſs, it would not ſo well affect his Wiſdom; ſince hereby we might forget our Dependence on him, and impute his Bleſſings either to fortuitous Events, or the natural Courſe of Things. Whereas now, when good Things are, in a great Meaſure, with-held from Men, till they pray for them, and are made the Conſequence, as it were, of their Petitions; by this they perceive, from whoſe Hand every good and perfect Gift cometh; and by this they are convinced, how highly it concerns them to endeavour to procure his Favour and Good-will. And ſo again, [l] though the Purpoſes of God be unchangeable, yet are they not ſo abſolute, as to exclude all Conditions. He determines to ſupply the Wants of his Creatures, but then they muſt be ſuch, as are qualified to receive ſuch Supply. Now, among the Qualifications which he requires in thoſe, whoſe Wants he is determined to ſupply, the very chief of all is our Dependence upon him, and an entire Confidence in his Goodneſs and Bounty; and the proper Expreſſion of his Truſt and Dependence is our looking up unto God, from whom cometh our Help.

[m] THERE is, indeed, a Temper in Men, that affects to be courted and flattered, and fawned upon, and complies with the Requeſts of others out of mean and little Ends: But this is the Effect of Pride, and Paſſion, and Intereſt, much different from theſe Condeſcenſions of Almighty God, who, tho' he cannot be ſubject either to Weakneſs or Corruption, may yet be prevailed upon by ſuch Methods, as become a reaſonable, and wiſe, and generous Mind. And therefore, when Men pay the Homage due to his infinite Majeſty, when they throw themſelves entirely upon his Goodneſs, caſt all their Care upon him, commit their Souls, and all their Concerns into his Hands, and that with ſuch devout and ſtrong Perſuaſions of his being a faithful Creator, that no Delays, no Refuſals can tempt them to ſuſpect or diſtruſt him; this is ſuch an Inducement to help and favour People in Diſtreſs, as every great Spirit, every Man of Honour, and common good Nature, would think it a Fault not to comply with. So that for God to ſhew himſelf flexible, upon ſuch Occaſions, is not a Thing chargeable with Fickleneſs or Inconſtancy, but rather a gracious Compliance, upon juſt and reaſonable Motives; and to harden himſelf againſt the Cries and Complaints of Suitors thus qualified, would much leſs become the Character of the ſovereign Judge, and infinitely good Ruler of the World. [n] It is a groſs Conception therefore,

[h] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [i] Ibid. Vol. II. [k] Smalridge's Sermons. [l] Ibid.
[m] Stanhope's Occaſional Sermons. [n] Smalridge, ibid.

therefore to imagine, that our Prayers are troubleſome to him, as the Requeſts of importunate Beggars are to us: For though ſuch People as ſay nothing of their Poverty, may be more proper Objects of our Charity, than noiſy and clamorous Suitors are, yet it is certainly juſt in God to overlook the Neceſſities of thoſe, who are above aſking a Supply, and to grant the Requeſts of thoſe only, who, with full Aſſurance of Hope, fly unto him for Help in the Time of Need; ſince this is the Language of the Scripture: [o] The Lord is nigh unto all them, and them only that call upon him; he will fulfil the Deſire of them that fear him; he will alſo hear their Cry, and will ſave them. Which leads us to conſider,

II. THE Conditions requiſite to make our Prayers an acceptable Service to God. That an inward and true Senſe of Piety is abſolutely neceſſary to recommend our Prayers to God, is an evident Principle of Natural Religion; for [p] this we know, that God heareth not Sinners, but if any Man be a Worſhipper of God, and doth his Will, him he heareth; for which Reaſon the Apoſtle aſſures us, [q] that if our Heart condemn us not, then have we Confidence towards God, not only a general Confidence in his Favour, and the good Diſpoſitions of his Providence towards us, but in his particular Goodneſs, when we addreſs ourſelves to him by Prayer; for ſo it follows in the next Words, and whatſoever we aſk, we receive of him, becauſe we keep his Commandments, and do thoſe Things which are pleaſing in his Sight. That Purity of Intention, which is neceſſary to the Perfection of all other Chriſtian Duties, is much more neceſſary and indiſpenſable in this of Prayer, is apparent from hence, that, though this alone cannot render our Prayers acceptable to God, yet we are aſſured, that without it they will be unavailable: And therefore the Apoſtle acquaints us, that as there are ſome, who have not, becauſe they aſk not; ſo there are others, who [r] aſk, and receive not, becauſe they aſk amiſs, that they may conſume, what they hope to receive, upon their Luſts. The Requiſites of Prayer.

IF ever therefore we deſire that our Prayers and Addreſſes ſhould enter Heaven, and find Admittance to the Throne of Grace, we muſt be careful neither to regard Iniquity in our Hearts, nor any indirect End in our Intentions. Our Mind, wherewith we pray, muſt firſt of all be ſuch, as God delights in; our End, for which we pray, muſt be ſuch, as he approves; and then the Manner, in which we pray, muſt be ſuch, as he directs; [s] which, according to the beſt Inſtructions that we have, muſt be, 1. With firm Truſt in him, to whom we pray. 2. Serious Attention of Mind whilſt we pray. 3. A fervent Deſire of what we pray for. 4. Humility in the Act of praying. And, 5. Perſeverance in our Performance of it. The Truſt, wherewith we offer up our Prayers, muſt bear Proportion to the ſure Promiſes of God, on which it is to be built; our Attention to the Weight and Importance of that religious Duty, about which we are employed; our Fervency, to the Earneſtneſs of thoſe Wants, under which we labour; our Humility, to the Glory and Majeſty of that Being, to whom our Prayers are addreſſed; and our Perſeverance, to the ineſtimable Value of thoſe Bleſſings, which we promiſe ourſelves at laſt.

1. THE Majeſty of God indeed, upon our firſt Reflection, is more apt to ſtrike Awe and Terror into our Souls, than to give us any Truſt and Confidence in our Approaches to him. If we take a View of our own Meanneſs, and his Glory; of our own Sinfulneſs, and his Purity; and go about to meaſure the immenſe Diſtance there is between him and his Creature; and, if poſſible, the ſtill more immenſe Diſtance between a ſinful Creature, and that immaculate Being, who hateth all Iniquity; it will ſeem Preſumption enough to pray unto him, without adding to it the yet greater Confidence of hoping, of truſting, that the Prayers of ſuch impotent, ſuch mean, ſuch wretched Supplicants ſhall work upon ſo powerful, ſo ſublime, ſo awful a Majeſty. But when our Approaches to him are in Obedience to his Command; when our Hopes are built upon his ſure Mercies; when our Confidence is ſupported by his expreſs Promiſes; we cannot withdraw ourſelves from his Preſence, without Violation of his Authority; we cannot deſpair of Acceptance, without Derogation to his Goodneſs; we cannot doubt of Succeſs, without Diſtruſt of his Veracity. Whatever Arguments therefore can be offered, to weaken our Faith, or ſtagger our Hopes, or ſhake our Confidence, are all anſwered by this gracious Promiſe of our Saviour, [t] I ſay unto you, what Things ſoever ye deſire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, Truſt in God.

[o] Pſal. cxlv. 18, 19.
[a] Smalridge's Sermons.
[p] John ix. 31.
[t] Mark xi. 24.
[q] 1 John iii. 21, 22.
[r] James iv. 3.

and ye ſhall have them; for be the Things we deſire never ſo great, they are not without the Compaſs of his Omnipotence to grant; be they never ſo diſproportioned to our Deſerts, they do not ſurpaſs the Bounds of his Merits.

Attention of Mind.

2. ATTENTION of Mind is another Qualification of an acceptable Prayer; and a Qualification it is, not ſo eaſy to be attained, as we may imagine. If we conſider the Make and Frame of our Souls, and attend a little to what paſſes within us, we find, that there is a certain Train of Thoughts, which are conſtantly on Float in our Minds, ſome going, and others quickly ſucceeding in their Room; ſo that, when we take moſt Care to keep our Thoughts from roving, we find it not eaſy to ſettle and fix what, in its own Nature, is ſo wandering and volatile. God therefore, who expects that we ſhould ſerve him, in Proportion only to the Strength of thoſe Faculties, wherewith he hath endued us, will no Doubt graciouſly pardon our unavoidable Infirmities, our involuntary Wanderings, and the ungovernable Diſtractions of our Thoughts. But though God's Mercy will certainly acquit us from the Imputation of Guilt for ſuch Defects, as, from the Infirmity of our Natures, are unavoidable; yet it will in no Caſe clear us in Reſpect of thoſe Wanderings of Thought, which are affected and voluntary. [u] When, through the Power of our Luſts, or the Cares of the World our Minds are ſo totally immerſed in ſenſual and carnal Things, that we cannot call them off to ſpiritual and religious Duties; when, for want of due Care and Attention, we ſet our Thoughts adrift, as it were, and ſuffer them, without Check or Controul, to wander at Random; when, before our Entry upon this ſolemn Duty, we neither prepare ourſelves for it by imprinting on our Souls venerable and awful Notions of the tranſcendent Majeſty of that ſupreme Being, to whom we approach; nor, during our religious Exerciſe, retain a lively Senſe of the exceeding Glory of that God, before whom we ſtand; when the Words, in ſhort, we pour forth, are vain empty Sounds, unaccompanied with any inward Conceptions anſwering to them; ſuch wandering and diſtracted Prayers as theſe, are ſo far from being a * reaſonable Service, which alone is acceptable unto God, that the Royal Preacher calls them the Sacrifice of Fools, and thereupon ſubjoins this good Advice, Keep thy Foot, i. e. thy Thoughts and Affections, [x] when thou goeſt into the Houſe of God: Be not raſh with thy Mouth, and let not thine Heart be haſty to utter any Thing before God; for God is in Heaven, and thou upon Earth.

Fervency.

THE Apoſtle, in the telling us, that [y] the effectual fervent Prayer of a righteous Man availeth much, does not only ſuppoſe an intenſe Devotion in Prayer to be a Duty, but a Means likewiſe to recommend it more effectually to the Favour and Acceptance of God. Real Want, where there is a quick Senſe of it, will find a Way of expreſſing itſelf in ſuch a Manner, as to excite Pity; and therefore, if we are thoroughly conſcious to ourſelves of our own Indigence, of our utter Inability to ſupply our preſſing Wants, and our neceſſary Dependence on God, who alone can ſupply them, this deep Senſe of our Neceſſities will make us warm and vehement for Relief. [z] As the Hart panteth after the Water-Brook, ſo David's Soul panted after God; his Soul thirſted for God; his Fleſh longed for him, in a dry and thirſty Land; his Soul longed, yea, even fainted for the Courts of the Lord. The Panting of a Hart wearied, purſued, and ſpent, the Drought of parched and gaping Land, the Cravings of Hunger and Thirſt, and the Faintings and Longings of a Woman with Child, are proper and lively Images of an eager and affectionate Concern for thoſe Bleſſings, which the Holy Pſalmiſt thus earneſtly deſired. This is the Life and true Spirit of Devotion, which aſcends up, and takes Heaven, as it were, by Violence: And for this Reaſon very likely our Prayers are called, in Scripture, a Sacrifice, and Incenſe, becauſe they become acceptable, by the ſelf-ſame Methods, that thoſe were uſed to be of old. It is Burning that creates the ſweet-ſmelling Savour; and it muſt be the Earneſtneſs and Warmth of our Prayers, that alone can make them come up as Incenſe before the Throne of God.

Humility.

4. ANOTHER Property, neceſſary and eſſential to give Succeſs and Efficacy to our Prayers, is Humility, which ariſes from the Nature of the Duty itſelf: For ſince, by Prayer we acknowledge ourſelves to be indigent and dependent Creatures, Want, one would think, is a ſure Remedy againſt Pride, as Dependence is a Motive to be humble. [a] Acceſs indeed we have, and are commanded to come with Boldneſs to the Throne of Grace; but it ſhould always be remembered, that it is a Throne of Grace, becauſe the Seat

[u] Smalridge's Sermons. * Rom. xii. 1. [x] Eccleſ. v. 1, 2. [y] James v. 16.
[z] Pſal. xlii. 1, 2. [a] Stanhope's Occaſional Sermons.

Seat of Judgment, not any of us is able to ſtand before; that Mercy is the only Thing we can pretend to, and that even this is, in no Degree, due to us for our own Sakes, but purely upon the Account of another, who purchaſed it for us at the Price of his own Blood; that therefore, if we obtain our Petitions, this is an Exceſs of Bounty; but if we wait long, or be denied, God is Maſter of his Favours, and may do what he will with his own. So that every Thing that may conduce to the laying us low in our Thoughts, every Thing that may help to ſpeak our Modeſty, and Reverence, and Submiſſion, is all little enough for Creatures ſo deſpicable by Nature, and by Sin ſo deteſtable as we, ſuing for Bleſſings, that they deſerve not, and for Mercies, that they have no Right to.

Perſeverance.

5. ONE Condition more of the final Succeſs and Validity of our Prayers is Patience and Perſeverance: For though God, for the Trial of our Faith, and the Improvement of our Humility, for the Manifeſtation of our Truſt in him, and Submiſſion to his Will, for the Increaſe of the Value of his Bleſſings, and the clearer Demonſtration of our entire Dependence on his Goodneſs and Bounty, may think it proper ſometimes to delay the Anſwer to our Prayers; yet muſt we not, upon that Account, deſpair of the Acceptance of our renewed Addreſſes. The relenting of the unjuſt Judge ſtands upon Record [d] in Scripture, as a plain Inſtance of the irreſiſtible Force of Perſeverance in Prayer. He neither feared God, nor regarded Man; and yet, becauſe this Widow troubleth me, ſaith he, I will avenge her, leſt, by her continual Coming, ſhe weary me. Now though it were Blaſphemy to think that God acts upon the ſame Motives with this unjuſt Judge; yet this we may learn from the Nature of the Parable, [e] that if a Man, who neither fears God, nor regards Men, who hath neither any Senſe of Religion or Humanity, may be ſuppoſed to be ſo far prevailed upon, by the earneſt Prayer of a miſerable neceſſitous Perſon, as to grant the Requeſt made to him, and to adminiſter Relief to the Supplicant, merely upon the Account of the Continuance and Importunity of the Petitions that are put up: How much more ought we to think, that God, who is infinite Goodneſs itſelf; who is always kind and bountiful to his Creatures; who delights to do them good, even without their deſiring it; and who is able to do them good with much leſs Pains, than they requeſt it: How much more ought we to think, I ſay, that this God, upon our earneſt and hearty Prayer to him, for any Thing we ſtand in need of, will return us a kind Anſwer, and grant us ſuch Supplies, as are proper for us? But then we are to remember, that we pray always, and faint not; that we be diligent, importunate, and perſevering in our Devotions; otherwiſe, we are not to expect any more favourable Return of them, than the Judge, in the Parable, made to the Widow, upon her firſt or ſecond Application to him.

THESE are ſome of the chief Qualifications that give Wings to our Prayers, and Strength to our Addreſſes: And that they may never fail of a kind Acceptance, we muſt be mindful at all Times to offer them up in the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Having therefore not only a gracious God, who heareth Prayers, when offered up in a due and regular Manner, but a merciful Redeemer likewiſe, [f] through whom we have Acceſs to the Father; [g] let us draw near with a true Heart, in full Aſſurance of Faith, having our Hearts ſprinkled from an evil Conſcience: And praying always with all [h] Prayer and Supplication in the Spirit, let us watch thereunto with all Perſeverance.

2. Of publick and private Prayer.

Different Kinds of Prayer.

IF [i] we conſider the Matter of Prayer, we may diſtinguiſh it into Prayer for ſpiritual, and Prayer for temporal good Things; or into Prayer for ourſelves, and Interceſſion for others: If we conſider the Manner of Prayer, we may diſtinguiſh it into mental, which is, when we pray only with our Hearts, without uttering or expreſſing any Words; and vocal, which is, when we expreſs in Words, and utter with our Mouths the Deſires of our Hearts: But the only Diſtinction that we ſhall at preſent inſiſt on, is that of publick Prayer, which is, when we join with others in putting up our common Petitions; and ſecret Prayer, when, retired from all Company, we [d] Luke xviii. 2, &c. [e] Sharpe's Sermons. [f] Eph. ii. 18, [g] Heb. x. 22.

[h] Eph. vi. 18. [i] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. II.

we put up our private Petitions to God; and theſe, though for Matter and Subſtance the ſame, are yet two diſtinct Duties, and both neceſſary to be performed, as Occaſion calls for them.

Publick and private, and their reſpective Advantages.

THE Church is God's Houſe, the Place on Earth of his immediate Reſidence, and he hath promiſed, that [k] when two or three are met together in his Name, he himſelf will be in the Midſt of them: In the Cloſet however we do not ſhut ourſelves up from his all-ſeeing Eye; ſince our Saviour hath aſſured us, that [l] if we pray in ſecret, our Father, which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward us openly. [m] The fitteſt Place to acknowledge publick Mercies, and implore the common Bleſſings of Life, is in publick, where the united Prayers of a Congregation are ſuppoſed to be more prevalent with Heaven, than ſingle Petitions: But there are ſome Favours we want, which it does not become us there to aſk; ſome Wounds to be healed, which are not to be expoſed to publick View; but common Decency requires, that particular Accounts be adjuſted betwixt God and our Souls in private: Nor can we ever properly deſcend into ourſelves, to know the true State of our Souls, but when we [n] commune with our Hearts in our Chamber, and are ſtill. In the Church, general Mercies are implored, and general Bleſſings acknowledged; but then there is no confeſſing our Guilt in all its Circumſtances, or affecting our Souls there with that holy Grief, which can only work a thorough Repentance: Whereas, in the Cloſet, we are at Liberty to indulge ourſelves in all the Expreſſions of Sorrow; and the pious Soul may let itſelf looſe to all the Fervour of Devotion, which, at the Altar, is ſo far from being praiſe-worthy, that it is highly blameable and indecent: For every Thing that is ſingular in publick, every Thing that draws the Eyes and Obſervation of others upon us, ſavours of Hypocriſy and Oſtentation, and is forbidden by our Saviour's Command [o] of not performing any Duty, that we may be ſeen of Men. But when we are under the Inſpection of no Eye, but that of God, who ſpies out all our Ways, and underſtands our Thoughts, long before they are formed, the more fervent our Devotions are, the more acceptable they are to him, becauſe there can be no Reaſon to ſuſpect the Sincerity of them: For we can never entertain ſuch unworthy Notions of God, as to imagine, that we can, by any Artifice, deceive him, and make him believe that we honour him with our Lips, when we know ourſelves, that our Hearts are far from him. So that, though by a falſe Zeal and pretended Sanctity in publick, we may prevail upon others to have a better Opinion of us, than we really deſerve; yet there is no Fear but that we ſhall act ſincerely, when we addreſs ourſelves in private to God; and then our Zeal cannot be too high, nor our Devotions too much inflamed, ſo long as they proceed from Sincerity, and are equally tempered with Fervour and Humility.

THERE is this farther Advantage of Retirement, that it is of ſingular Uſe to fix our Attention, which, by the Variety of the Objects we meet with in publick, is often broke and divided; and that we are leſs ſubject to ſpiritual Languors, when we are at Liberty to make Uſe of our own Thoughts and Expreſſions, to leave off when our Attention flags, and return to it again, at a more favourable Opportunity: But then we want in the Cloſet that awful Reverence, that Solemnity of Devotion, with which the Church inſpires us. There the Beauty of Holineſs appears in its brighteſt Luſtre, charms the Eyes, and inflames the Hearts of all Beholders. For what a decent, what an agreeable, what a raviſhing Sight is a well-ordered Congregation, offering up their Prayers, with one Conſent, and with one Voice, to their great Creator; laying aſide all Diſtinctions of rich and poor, mean and noble, and reſolving all their Differences into a pious Emulation of excelling each other in the Love of God, and Zeal for his Service? Certainly, if we could form to ourſelves any faint Image or Repreſentation of Heaven here on Earth, we muſt draw the Model of it, though in an infinite lower Degree, from the Uniformity and Order, the Reverence and Devotion of religious Aſſemblies; which, beſides their Reſemblance, have ſo neceſſary a Dependence on the other, that, to frequent the Service of the Sanctuary, to join in the religious Exerciſes of the Church militant on Earth, is the beſt Means to fit and prepare us to be worthy Members of the Church triumphant in Heaven.

BUT here a Queſtion may ariſe, " In what Manner it is moſt expedient for us to " make our Addreſſes to God in the publick Congregation, whether in ſet Forms, " or extemporary Inventions; and which ſerves the Ends of our Devotion beſt, one " common, [k] Matth. xviii. 20. [l] Ibid. vi. 6. [m] Cotes's Sermons. [n] Pſal. iv. 4. [o] Matth. vi. 5.

"common Liturgy, or Words and Expreſſions every Day new." That ſet Forms of Prayer are no where prohibited in Scripture, nay, that, in ſome Places, they are expreſſly commanded and preſcribed, is evident to every one, that is converſant in the Writings of either Teſtament. [p] In the Old Teſtament, we find the Lord ſpeaking unto Moſes thus, [q] Speak unto Aaron, and unto his Sons, ſaying, On this wiſe ye ſhall bleſs the Children of Iſrael, ſaying unto them, The Lord bleſs thee, and keep thee; the Lord make his Face to ſhine upon thee; the Lord lift up his Countenance upon thee, and give thee Peace; nor can we ſuppoſe, that God was leſs ready to vouchſafe his Bleſſing to the People, becauſe his Miniſter always implored it in the ſame Form of Words. [r] And as the Prieſts, under the Law, were required to bleſs the People in a ſet Form, ſo were the People ſometimes enjoined to offer up their Prayers to God in Words that were prepared before-hand for them. Thus, when a Murther was committed, and the Author of it unknown, the Elders of the adjoining City were directed to aſk God's Pardon in this Form; [r] Our Hands have not ſhed this Blood, neither have our Eyes ſeen it: Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy People Iſrael, whom thou haſt redeemed, and lay not innocent Blood unto thy People of Iſrael's Charge: And ſo the Blood was to be forgiven. Set Forms not prohibited,

IN the New Teſtament, we find our Saviour preſcribing to his Diſciples a ſet Form of Prayer, when he ordered them to pray after this Manner; Our Father, &c. For it was not only the Cuſtom of the Jews in general to uſe Forms of Prayer, but for their Doctors likewiſe to teach their Scholars ſome particular Form, compoſed by them, in order to diſtinguiſh them from other People. In Compliance to this Cuſtom, John the Baptiſt, as it appears by the Place in St Luke, taught his Diſciciples a peculiar Form; and, for this Reaſon, one of our Saviour's Diſciples comes and requeſts of him, that he would be pleaſed to compoſe one for their Uſe, Lord, teach us to pray, as John alſo taught his Diſciples; upon which we find, that our Saviour complied with his Requeſt, and accordingly preſcribed them the Form, which he had given them before, as a Pattern of Prayer upon the Mount. And as our Saviour preſcribed them this Form, 'tis hardly to be queſtioned, but that, in Obedience to his Command, they made uſe of it, even tho' we have no expreſs Declaration in Holy Writ, that they did ſo; becauſe, we may obſerve farther, that wherever we have any Prayers recorded, there is Preſumption enough to believe, that they offered them up in a ſet Form. [s] Thus we find the whole Company of primitive Chriſtians, in Conjunction with the Apoſtles themſelves, [s] lifting up their Voice with one Accord, and ſaying, Lord, thou art God, which haſt made Heaven, and Earth, and the Sea, and all that is in them, &c. And as they all joined, not only with their Hearts, but with their Voices; not only in the ſame Thoughts, but in the ſame Words; unleſs we will ſay, that all were immediately inſpired to utter the ſame Syllables, for which there is no Ground in the Hiſtory, nor any Probability in Reaſon, we muſt allow, that they prayed by a Form compoſed before-hand. but enjoined.

[t] WHAT has been ſaid upon this Head is ſufficient to ſhew, if not the Neceſſity, at leaſt the Lawfulneſs of praying by a Form: For ſince God was pleaſed to preſcribe Forms to be uſed in his publick Worſhip in the Jewiſh Church; ſince Chriſt taught his Diſciples to pray after a Form; and they, upon ſundry Occaſions, in all Probability, made uſe of premeditated Forms; it will undeniably follow, that to uſe ſet Forms of Prayer is not repugnant to the Will of God; is no ſtinting of the Spirit, no Impediment to Devotion, no Inſtance of Superſtition, no Part of forbidden Will-Worſhip, no Invention of Antichriſt, &c.

THAT all Things ſhould be done to the Glory of God, we are very frequently warned in Scripture; and we may leave it to the Judgment of any ſober Perſon, whether the Glory of God is beſt promoted by ſuch Prayers, wherein ſtrict Care is taken, that nothing ſhould be uttered unbecoming the Divine Majeſty, or by ſuch extemporary Conceptions, wherein many unſeemly and irreverent Speeches, at leaſt, are too commonly, and in a Manner unavoidably, poured forth. That all Things ſhould be done for Edification is another Scripture-Precept; and whether thoſe Prayers, which are formed by the mature Advice of many Perſons, eminent for Wiſdom and Piety, and which are both known and underſtood by the People, or thoſe, which are conceived, on a ſudden, by one Man, whoſe Abilities, perhaps, are not very great, and which thoſe, who join with them, muſt firſt ſtudy to underſtand, before they can concur therein, are moſt likely to edify the Church, can, Their Expediency.

[p] Smalridge's Sermons. [q] Numb. vi. 22. [r] Deut. xxi. 7, 8. [s] Acts iv. 24.
[t] Smalridge, ibid.

with unprejudiced Perſons, bear no Diſpute. "If I know not the Meaning of the Voice, ſays the Apoſtle, I ſhall be unto him, that ſpeaketh, a Barbarian, and he, that ſpeaketh, ſhall be a Barbarian unto me: Now the Meaning of the Voice may be as unknown to us, if a Prayer be made in a Phraſe, as if it be made in a Language that we do not underſtand; and he, that prays in an unintelligible Manner, is as much a Barbarian to thoſe that hear him, as if he prayed in an unknown Tongue: So that, unleſs all Miniſters are Maſters of Perſpicuity, which, perhaps, is a Talent as rare as any, then he, that occupieth the room of the Unlearned, nay, he, indeed, that is never ſo learned, may not always be able to ſay Amen to a Prayer, which he may not always be able to underſtand.

The Excellency of our Church Liturgy.

IN a Word, if earneſt Deſires, if devout Affections, if cloſe Attention and Fervour of Spirit do recommend our Prayers to God, all theſe Advantages may rather be hoped for by thoſe, who, uſing a prepared and known Form, have nothing farther to do, than to excite, in their Minds, Paſſions ſuitable to the Buſineſs they are upon; than by ſuch, who depending wholly upon the Conceptions of another, muſt firſt endeavour to catch thoſe Words, which fall from him; then be employed in finding out their Meaning; then conſider whether that which is aſked be lawful for them to aſk, and whether they can heartily join with ſuch a Petition, or Thankſgiving; which, before they can have determined in their own Thoughts, it may be too late for them to join in, becauſe the Miniſter is, perhaps, by this Time, paſſed on to another quite different Matter. If therefore, by compoſed Forms, the Infirmities of ſome Men are beſt remedied; if our Conſent and Communion with other Chriſtians is hereby beſt teſtified; if Errors and Irregularities in Worſhip be by this Means beſt prevented; if they are moſt ſubſervient to Edification, to true Devotion, and to the Glory of God; we may ſafely conclude, that a well-compoſed Form of publick Worſhip, in the Church, is not only lawful, but expedient, and in ſome Degree even neceſſary: And, upon this Account, we may well be allowed to congratulate our mutual Happineſs, in being made Members of a Church, * wherein there is ſo great a Treaſure of rational Devotion; where all the Prayers are directed to a proper Object, all cloathed in proper and ſignificant Language, and all diſpoſed in exact and regular Order; where the Praiſes are lofty, and ſuitable to the Majeſty of God; the Confeſſions humble, and ſuch as become Sinners; the Interceſſions comprehend all the Duties, and the Supplications are extended to all the Wants of Mankind: Where the Whole, indeed, is ſo admirably fitted to the common Concerns of a Chriſtian Society, that when (as the Rubrick enjoins) we make but uſe of ſome of them, our Worſhip is not imperfect, and when we uſe them all, there is none of them ſuperfluous: And therefore, if we be but careful to bring with us, to the Houſe of God, ſuch Affections as become his Saints, we need not doubt, but that we ſhall there find ſuch Prayers to expreſs theſe Affections in, as will prove a reaſonable Service, and make the Whole an Offering of a ſweet-ſmelling Savour unto God.

3. Of Praiſe and Thankſgiving.

The Diſtinction between Praiſe and Thankſgiving.

PRAISE and Thankſgiving, though they are frequently uſed promiſcuouſly, yet, in Strictneſs of Speech, have a different Signification. [x] Our Praiſe properly terminates in God, on the Account of his natural Excellencies and Perfections, and is that Act of Devotion, by which we confeſs and admire his ſeveral Attributes; but Thankſgiving is a narrower Duty, and imports only a grateful Senſe and Acknowledgement of paſt Mercies. We praiſe God for all his glorious Acts of every Kind, that regard either us, or other Men; for his very Acts of Vengeance, and thoſe Judgments, which he ſometimes ſends abroad on the Earth; but, properly ſpeaking, we thank him only for the Inſtances of his Goodneſs, and only for ſuch Inſtances too, as we ourſelves are, ſome Way or other, concerned in. This is properly the Diſtinction of the two Words: But, ſince the Language of the Scripture is generally leſs exact in this Matter, we, in what follows, ſhall think ourſelves at Liberty to uſe them in a promiſcuous Senſe; and accordingly ſhall enquire, I. What the Nature of this Duty implies; and, II. How reaſonable a Thing it is, that we ſhould perform it.

I. Now

[a] 1 Cor. xiv. 11. * Cotes's and South's Sermons. [x] Atterbury's Sermons.

I. Now few are ſo ignorant, as not to know, that the Duty of Praiſe and Thankſgiving to God implies our having a lively and devout Senſe of his Excellencies, and of his Benefits; our recollecting them with Humility and Thankfulneſs of Heart; and our expreſſing theſe inward Affections by ſuitable outward Signs; by Songs and Hymns, and ſpiritual Ejaculations, as well as by a Tenor of Life, led anſwerable to ſuch Vouchſafements. * When therefore we ſet ourſelves down, and call to Remembrance the many Experiments we have had of God's Loving-kindneſs to us, when we dwell upon them by long Meditation, and imprint the Traces of them firm and indelible in our Minds; when we raiſe our Conceptions to a due Eſtimation of them, and, by attending to every Circumſtance, improve their Value to the higheſt Pitch; when upon this our Heart glows with Love, and we feel ourſelves carried to God by an affectionate Senſe of what he has done for us; when, thereupon, our Lips overflow with Praiſe, and we cannot forbear expreſſing the Riches of his Goodneſs to us in all the outward Acknowledgments of Love and Gratitude; and laſtly, when we order our Lives by the Rule of his Commands, and, in Return for his Favours, devote ourſelves, both Soul and Body, to his Service; 'tis then that we offer unto him an acceptable Sacrifice of Thankſgiving. What they imply.

AND accordingly, if we look into the great Exemplar of Gratitude, the Royal Prophet David, we ſhall find him regulating his Praiſes to God after this very Method: [a] I will remember the Days of old, ſays he, and meditate on all thy Works, and talk of all thy Doings. [b] Bleſs the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all his Benefits: Here is his deep Recollection of the Mercies of God. Then he goes on; [c] I will praiſe thee, O Lord, among the People; I will ſing unto thee among the Nations; for thy Mercy is great as the Heavens, and thy Faithfulneſs reaches unto the Clouds. [d] How excellent is thy Loving-kindneſs, O God, how precious are thy Thoughts unto me, how great is the Sum of them! Here is his high Eſtimation of the divine Benefits. Then he proceeds; [e] Becauſe thy Loving-kindneſs is better than Life, my Lips ſhall praiſe thee, [f] my Soul ſhall be filled with Marrow and Fatneſs, my Mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful Lips. [g] Bleſs the Lord, O my Soul, and all that is within me praiſe his holy Name. Here is his grateful Reſentment of the Kindneſs of God. Whereupon he breaks out, [h] I will praiſe the Name of the Lord with a Song, I will magnify him with Thankſgiving. [i] I will ſing of the Mercies of the Lord for ever, with my Mouth will I make known thy Faithfulneſs to all Generations. And then to compleat all, he deliberates, how he may yet farther teſtify his Gratitude to God: [k] what ſhall I render unto God for all his Benefits? Whereupon he reſolves.; I will receive the Cup of Salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord: I will pay my Vows unto him, even the Vows of Amendment and better Obedience, that I made unto him in my Diſtreſs. Thus plainly has the Pſalmiſt chalked out the Duty, and taught us the Way to be thankful to our God. And,

II. How reaſonable a Thing it is for us to comply with ſuch Directions, we may perceive, by conſidering, 1. The Nature of God, as it is extended to us. 2. The Nature of Man, as it is related to God. And, 3. The Nature of the Duty itſelf. The Reaſonableneſs of this Duty.

1. [l] OFFER unto God Thankſgiving, ſays the Pſalmiſt; to God, i. e. to him, [m] who is the Author, Upholder, and Preſerver of our Being, without whoſe Goodneſs we had never been, and without whoſe Care we cannot ſubſiſt one Moment. To him, who hath created this ſpacious World for our Comfort and Delectation; given us Bodies of an excellent Order and Proportion, and inſpired them with Souls, impreſſed with conſpicuous Characters of his own divine Eſſence. To him, who grants us free Acceſs, a conſtant Intercourſe, and familiar Acquaintance with himſelf; ſtiles us his Friends and his Children, and, in Purſuance of his paternal Relation to us, pities our Infirmities, aſſiſts our Wants, comforts our Sorrows, and aſſwages all our Pains. To him, whoſe Goodneſs is like the ſtrong Mountains, and whoſe Mercies never fail, taking Care of us, when we regard not him, watching over us when we ſleep, and remembering us, when we forget ourſelves. To him, who, as [n] St James expreſſes it, giveth freely, and upbraideth no Man; who exacts no coſtly, no difficult, no impoſſible Returns From the Nature of God.

* Scott's Works, Vol. II. [a] Pſal. lxxvii. 11, 12. [b] Ibid. ciii. 2. [c] Ibid. cviii. 3, 4. [d] Ibid. cxxxix. 17, 18. [e] Ibid. lxiii. 5. [f] Ibid. ver. 5. [g] Ibid. ciii. 1. [h] Ibid. lxix. 30. [i] Ibid. lxxxix. 1. [k] Ibid. cxvi. 11, &c. [l] Ibid. l. 14. [m] Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [n] James i. 5.

Returns for his Favours, but only a chearful Acknowledgment of them, and a ſincere Performance of ſuch Duties, as our own Welfare, did we but apprehend it, would abundantly bind us to. Is there any Thing more? Yes, to him, who, that he might redeem us from Miſery, condeſcended to the loweſt Humiliation, to inhabit our frail and mortal Nature, to undergo the Laws and Conditions of Humanity, and at laſt taſte the bitter Cup of a moſt painful Death: Yea, to him, who not only deſcended from his imperial Throne, and became a Servant for our Sake, but deſigned thereby to exalt us to a Participation of his Royal Dignity, his divine Nature, his eternal Glory and Bliſs, ſubmitting Crowns and Scepters to our Choice; Crowns, that cannot fade, and Scepters, that can never be extorted from us. To him, laſtly, whoſe Benefits to commemorate is the greateſt Benefit of all; whoſe Goodneſs to praiſe, whoſe Greatneſs to admire, whoſe Beneficence to feel, and whoſe Preſence to enjoy is Heaven itſelf, the Life of Angels, and the ſupreme Degree of all Felicity. In a Word, to him, whoſe Benefits are immenſely great, innumerably many, and inexpreſſibly good; for, [o] Who can utter the mighty Acts of the Lord, or ſhew forth all his Praiſe? Says one, who had ſpent moſt of his Thoughts, and the beſt of his Endeavours that Way.

From his Dealings with us.

2. THUS, if we look up to God, our great and only Benefactor, we cannot but perceive, that the Duty of Praiſe and Thankſgiving to him is bound upon us by Ties innumerable, and that the good Things we receive from above ſhould, in grateful Acknowledgments, be ſent back again thither, [p] as the Rivers run into the Sea; to the Place, the Ocean of Beneficence, from whence the Rivers come, thither ſhould they return again. And, in like Manner, if we turn our Eyes upon ourſelves, we cannot but remember, [q] that we are his Creatures, ſuſtained by his Alms, and fed by his Bounty; that every Drop we drink, every Morſel we eat, every Rag we wear, we receive from him; that we breathe in his Air, move on his Earth, and are every Moment ſupported by his all-powerful Arm. Nay, we are not only his Creatures, and Penſioners to his Bounty, but ſinful Creatures likewiſe, that abuſe his Kindneſs, and pervert his Bleſſings. For he gives us Breath, and we blaſpheme him with it; he gives us Health, and we expend it in Intemperance; he gives us Wealth, and we conſume it upon our Luſts; and yet, for all this, he continues to be gracious unto us, and paſſes by many Indignities, as if his Long-ſuffering were never to have an End. Nay, we are his redeemed Creatures, who had the Honour, when Beings of a ſuperior Order were paſſed by, to have our Lives ranſomed by the precious Blood of God; and, from the Power of Sin, and the Slavery of our moſt inveterate Enemy, are ſet free; ſet free the nobleſt Way, not ſo much as the Spirit of Bondage remaining, but are ſo become the Servants, as, at the ſame Time, to obtain the glorious Liberty of the Sons of God. Can we riſe any higher? Yes, we are to be his glorified Creatures, to be admitted into the Society of Saints and Angels, where, having our Bodies faſhioned like unto Chriſt's glorious Body, and our Souls exalted to a Participation of God, we ſhall [r] be bleſſed with all ſpiritual Bleſſings, in heavenly Places, in Chriſt. If then there be any Force in God's creating Goodneſs; if any Bonds in his forbearing Patience; if any Endearments in his redeeming Love; if any Obligations in the Hope of our high Calling; by theſe, all theſe are we bound to make thankful Returns to him, from whom we have received, and from whom we expect ſo much: Eſpecially conſidering, that there are other Inducements ariſing from the Nature of this Duty itſelf, that engage us to the Practice of it.

From the Excellency of the Duty itſelf.

As good.

3. THE Royal Pſalmiſt has given us a pretty good Account of the general Properties of Praiſe and Thankſgiving, under which moſt of its chief Advantages may be comprized. [s] Praiſe the Lord, for it is good to ſing Praiſes unto our God; for it is pleaſant, and Praiſe is comely. [t] Praiſe the Lord, for it is good, as it enlarges the Powers and Capacities of our Souls, turning them from little and low Things, upon their greateſt and nobleſt Object, the divine Nature; and employing them in the Diſcovery and Admiration of thoſe ſeveral Perfections that adorn it. It is good, [u] as it promotes and facilitates the Practice of all other Duties, inſomuch, that whoever is under a powerful Senſe of God's Goodneſs, (as the truly thankful always are) will, with the greateſt Chearfulneſs, run the Ways of God's Commandments, becauſe he has a Principle in him, which converts the moſt painful Duties into the moſt delightful Recreations. It is good, as it gives a great Support to our Hope and Dependence on God:

[o] Pſal. cvi. 2. [p] Eccleſ. i. 7. [q] Scott's Works, Vol. II. [r] Eph. i. 3. [s] Pſal. cxlvii. 1.
[t] Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I. [u] Scott, ibid.

God: For, beſides that, the Conſciouſneſs of having made thankful Returns for what we have received, will be a great Conſolation to us in the Time of our Diſtreſs; the very Rememberance and Recollection of God's former Favours, which our grateful Senſe of them will not fail to impreſs in our Minds, will prove a conſtant Fund of happy Experience, for our Affiance in him to live upon for the future. It is good, as it heightens and improves the Enjoyment of God's Benefits, to ſuch a Degree, that whilſt the Unthankful, for Want of a due Eſtimate of his Favours, live diſſatisfied, and grumble, as it were, over their Prey, even while they are devouring it; thoſe, that have a grateful Senſe of his Goodneſs to them, feed upon every Bleſſing with Content, and, like induſtrious Bees, having ſucked out all the Sweetneſs of the Flowers they live upon, go ſinging home with it to their Hives. Once more, it is good, becauſe it mightily obliges God to continue and repeat his Favours to us: For, ſeeing he is the freeſt and moſt generous Benefactor in the World, we may depend upon it, that if we make the good Uſe of his Benefits, for which he deſigned them; if we render ſuch grateful Returns for them, as are both delightful to him, and beneficial to ourſelves; he will be ſo far from ſtinting his Hand to us for the future, that he will rejoice over us to do us good, and be as highly pleaſed to multiply his Benefits upon us, as we can be to receive them.

2. ANOTHER Commendation of the Duty is this; Praiſe the Lord, for it is pleaſant, * as it purſues the natural Bent and Inclination of our Minds, which are never more eaſy and delighted, than when we are able to make grateful Returns for the Favours we have received. It is pleaſant, [x] as it proceeds from Love, the Fountain of Pleaſure, the Paſſion, which gives every Thing, we do and enjoy, its Reliſh and Agreeableneſs; and from Thankfulneſs, which involves in it the Memory of paſt Benefits, and is, as it were, a repeated Enjoyment of them. It is pleaſant, as it procures Quiet and Eaſe to the Mind, by delivering it of thoſe Thoughts of Praiſe and Gratitude, thoſe Exultations it is full of, and which would grow uneaſy and troubleſome to it, if they were kept in; for, were the Thankful reſtained from making Mention of God's Mercies, it would be Pain and Grief to them; but then, then is their Soul ſatisfied with Marrow and Fatneſs, when their Mouth praiſeth him with joyful Lips. Pleaſant.

IN other Parts of our Devotion, there is ſomething painful and laborious to human Nature: [y] Prayer awakens in us a ſorrowful Senſe of Wants and Imperfections, and Confeſſion induces a ſad Rememberance of our Guilts and Miſcarriages; but Thankſgiving has nothing in it but a warm Senſe of the mightieſt Love, and the moſt endearing Goodneſs, as it is the Overflow of an Heart full of Love, the free Sally and Emiſſion of Soul, that is captivated and endeared by Kindneſs. We, indeed, in this State of our Defection, are, in a great Meaſure, unacquainted with the Pleaſure and Sweetneſs of this bleſſed Work; and the Reaſon is, becauſe we have not a quick Senſe and lively Reliſh of the Divine Goodneſs, upon which it terminates. Had we this always preſent with us, we ſhould feel ſo much Joy and Pleaſure in Thankſgiving, that it would be our Heaven upon Earth, to breathe up our Souls to God in Praiſe: But this we know, who know any Thing of Religion, that to laud and magnify the Lord is the End for which we were born, and the Heaven, for which we were deſigned; and that, when we are arrived to ſuch a vigorous Senſe of the Divine Love, as the bleſſed Inhabitants of Heaven have attained, we ſhall need no other, either Pleaſure or Employment, to make us for ever happy, but only to ſing eternal Praiſes and Hallelujahs to our God, and to the Lamb that ſitteth upon the Throne: The vigorous Reliſh of whoſe unſpeakable Goodneſs to us will ſo inflame our Love, and animate our Gratitude, that, to eternal Ages, we ſhall never be able to refrain from breaking out into new Songs of Praiſe; and then every new Song will create a new Pleaſure, and every new Pleaſure dictate a new Song, and ſo round again for ever and ever. But theſe Things are too ſublime for our preſent Comprehenſion: Only let us conſult the Experience of ſuch, as make this Part of Devotion their conſtant Buſineſs, and they will aſſure us, that there is nothing under Heaven ſo pleaſant and delightful, as, from a warm and vigorous Senſe of the Love of God, to breathe up our Souls to him in Praiſe and Thankſgiving; that this gives ſuch a Jubilee to the Mind, ſuch a ſprightly Recreation to the Heart, as far exceeds the moſt ſtudied artificial Pleaſures of Senſuality, and therefore, praiſe the Lord; for the Lord is good: Sing Praiſes to his Name, for it is pleaſant.

* Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [x] Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I. [y] Scott's Works, Vol. II.

And comely.

3. THE other Commendation of this Duty is, that Praiſe is comely; as certainly a more becoming Exerciſe cannot be conceived than this, wherein the beſt Inſtruments of Nature are employed in the higheſt Offices of Grace; our Hearts in recollecting, and our Tongues in relating the Loving-kindneſs of God. To have the Great King of Heaven and Earth ſurrounded with loud Acelamations of his joyful Subjects, his Excellence proclaimed and exalted above the higheſt Praiſe, his wonderful Works magnified and admired in triumphant Acknowledgments, and his Bounty and Love celebrated and adored with Songs and Magnificats; what an Emblem is here of the Bleſſed above; and what more graceful and comely Sight can we imagine, than a full Congregation of Saints, bleſſing and praiſing the Lord; and, all the while that their Voices are raiſed, exerciſing their Minds likewiſe, and mounting up to Heaven upon the Wings of divine Love and ardent Aſpirations; and all this out of pure Affections, and without any View of Self-Intereſt, [z] which is more than can be ſaid of other Parts of our religious Service? Our Prayers are deſigned for the Relief of our Wants, our Faith leans upon ſome future Good, and our Hope is a comfortable Expectation of it: [a] But Praiſe is a generous and unmercenary Principle, which propoſes no other End to itſelf, but to do as is fit for a Creature, endowed with ſuch Faculties, to do towards the moſt perfect and beneficent of Beings, and to pay the willing Tribute of Honour there, where the Voice of Reaſon directs us to pay it. In ſhort, Praiſe is the moſt excellent Part of our Religious Worſhip, the common Work of the Church, both Militant and Triumphant, the Source of Joy and Refreſhment here, and the very Soul and Spirit of Heaven hereafter; the Perfections of God's Nature are its Object, and the very Act itſelf is the Perfection of ours. And [b] therefore, whether it be for great or for ſmall, for common or extraordinary, for preſent or paſt, for private or publick, for temporal or ſpiritual Bleſſings; whether it be for the Occurrences of Providence, that are averſe to our Deſire, or for thoſe, that are accommodated to our Liking; in all States and Conditions, in all the Changes and Chances of Life, let the Praiſes of God be ever in our Mouths; and in our Mind this [c] Song of Moſes, the Servant of the Lord, and this Song of the Lamb; Great and marvellous are thy Works, Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy Ways, thou King of Saints; who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy Name?

[z] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II. [a] Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I. [b] Barrow's Works, Vol. I.
[c] Rev. xv. 3.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Our Duty towards our Neighbour; and,

1. Of Universal Love and Charity.

ST PAUL, in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, has given us a Description of this great Christian Duty, as it relates to our Neighbour, which far exceeds any Delineation, that we can possibly devise. [a] Charity suffereth long, and is kind; Charity envieth not; Charity vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no Evil, rejoiceth not in Iniquity, but rejoiceth in the Truth; beareth all Things, believeth all Things, hopeth all Things, endureth all Things: So that, to explain the Nature and Properties of this Virtue, we need only give a short Comment upon the Apostle's Words; and then proceed, 1. To shew the Obligations of it; and, 2. The Measures and Inducements of our performing it. Charity, what.

1. CHARITY suffereth long. [b] The Man, that is possessed of this excellent Grace, is not apt, quickly, and upon every slight Occasion, to conceive a Displeasure, much less to meditate Revenge against those who behave themselves ill towards him. He considers, how subject to Frailties Mankind are, how easily betrayed by Infirmities, and Surprize, and Passion, to Things that are inordinate: he makes just Allowances therefore for Inadvertencies and Indiscretions, and suppresses his Resentment for Wrongs, that are avowed and manifest, so long as they continue to be tolerable: And in this he differs from the jealous and captious, the peevish and hasty, who either fancy themselves injured and affronted, when nothing like it is intended, or fume and take fire upon every Provocation and Neglect. St Paul's Description of it explained.

2. CHARITY is kind; and therefore he, that is Master of his Temper, as he is slow in taking Offence, so is he sure not to give any; and is so far from rendering Evil for Evil, that his Study is, to overcome Evil with Good. His Conversation is sweet and obliging, and his Carriage and Behaviour free, candid, and ingenuous. He considers, that the lowest of Mankind are of the same Make with himself, distinguished only by a few accidental Circumstances; and therefore, how exalted soever his own Station be, his Demeanour is full of Compliance and Condescension. And, as he thinks, that no one was ever born for himself alone; so he makes it his constant Aim and Endeavour to be as beneficial to all Mankind, as possibly he can: Quite contrary to that sour and sullen, that bitter and malicious Disposition, too common in the World, which is continually employed in doing Mischief, in disturbing the Quiet, in obstructing the Good of its Neighbour, and making Men, whom Nature ordained for mutual Helps and Comforts, continual Plagues and Torments to each other.

3. CHARITY envieth not: Though God vouchsafe others a larger Measure of Knowledge, or Riches, or Credit, or Honour, or indeed of any Blessing, whether temporal or spiritual, the charitable Man grudges it not, murmurs not at it, but is perfectly satisfied and contented in the Preference, which these distinguishing Favours give them above himself; nay, he makes their Happiness become really and truly his own, and finds as much, if not more Pleasure and Delight in their Success and Prosperity, than they themselves do; whilst all the Content and Joy, which their good Fortune administers to them, comes pure and unmixed to him, without bearing any Part in the Cares and Troubles, wherewith it is usually attended.

4. CHARITY

[a] 1 Cor. xiii. 4, &c.

[b] Calamy's Sermons, and Stanhope, on the Epistles and Gospels, Vol. II.

4. CHARITY vaunteth not itſelf; and therefore he who is of this Temper, has always a modeſt and humble Opinion of himſelf, pretending to no Accompliſhments that he has not, and thruſting himſelf into no Buſineſs above his Capacity and proper Sphere. In private, he entertains himſelf frequently with the Senſe and Conſciouſneſs of his own Ignorance, Infirmities, and Demerits; and, in publick, affects no Noiſe or glaring Figure, but deſires rather to appear unobſerved and undiſtinguiſhed. Upon other Men's Abilities he always ſets a due Value; receives their Sentiments with Deference; offers his own with Diffidence; and, through his whole Behaviour ſhews, that in Honour he prefers and eſteems others better than himſelf. And as he pretends to no Talents that he has not, ſo is he not puffed up even with what he has: For he conſiders them as Gifts and Graces, which miniſter great Ground for Humility and Thankfulneſs, and all imaginable Care to anſwer the Purpoſes, for which they were entruſted, but no Manner of Pretence for Vanity and Self-conceit; which, whenever it gets Poſſeſſion of a Man, carries him ſo into the Contemplation of his own imaginary Perfections, as to make him ſlight and deſpiſe all the World beſides, and think himſelf wronged, and affronted, and unjuſtly treated, if every one does not value him and his Judgment in all Things, at the ſame Rate and Proportion that he does himſelf.

5. CHARITY does not behave itſelf unſeemly; and therefore he that is poſſeſſed of this Virtue, uſes no opprobrious Words or Geſtures, endeavours to diſhonour or diſparage no Man's Perſon; but is ſo courteous without Affectation, and ſo condeſcending without Intereſt or Deſign, that, as St Chryſoſtom and others interpret the Word, he thinks no Offices, though never ſo mean, below or miſbecoming him; but reckons, that, whatever Inconveniency ſuch Kind of Humiliations may occaſion, it is amply compenſated by the Benefits, which others receive from them. And well may Charity be thus liberal of its Services, and regardleſs of the Manner of its Condeſcenſions, when the next Character of it, as the Apoſtle tells us, is,

6. THAT ſhe ſeeketh not her own; and therefore he that is her Votary, is ſo far from projecting Gain and Profit to himſelf, by the Favours and good Offices he does to others, that he is beneficent to the Evil and Unthankful, to the Indigent, and thoſe that are unable to make him any Requital. The Largeneſs of his Heart, which is ſenſibly affected for human Nature, never ſeparates itſelf by any abſtracted Views; but, wiſhing Eaſe and Proſperity to all Mankind, contributes its utmoſt to ſerve and benefit them, and eſteems the Glory of God, and the greater Gain of his Brethren, an ample Reward for his own Labour and Sufferings, nay, (upon ſo beneficial an Account) for his own Loſſes and Inconveniencies.

7. CHARITY is not eaſily provoked; for it keeps the Mind calm and ſmooth; corrects that Heat, which either the natural Conſtitution, or the Greatneſs of a Provocation kindles in our Breaſt; and, even when our Reſentment is moſt juſt, prevents its flaming out into Rage and Fury, beyond the Bounds of Reaſon and Religion. It ſecures us from all Paroxyſms of Anger, as the Greek Word imports, and keeps that unruly Paſſion under ſuch Limits and Reſtrictions as never to betray us into any Indecency of Behaviour, much leſs any raſh and unwarrantable Actions.

8. CHARITY thinketh no Evil; is ſo far from ſuſpecting the worſt of Men, and their Actions, that it always puts the faireſt Interpretations upon them. To the Good which they do, it allows all juſt Commendation; and, as it never charges any, but upon undeniable Evidence, ſo it ever appears to excuſe and extenuate their Offences. It puts us in Mind, when we happen to be angry with an injurious Brother, of the many Kindneſſes he once did us, and ſets his former good Offices in Balance to his preſent Miſbehaviour. It imputes a great deal to Miſtake, to Miſinformation, to Age, to Ignorance, to Infirmities, &c. and would have any Thing be thought the Cauſe, rather than Ill-will, or propenſe Deſign to offend.

9. CHARITY rejoiceth not in Iniquity, but in the Truth; takes no Pleaſure in falſe Reports and malicious Inſinuations, which tends to defame and diſparage our Neighbour, a Pleaſure as common, as it is barbarous; but when ſuch Suggeſtions have not Ground, and ſhed their Venom, is heartily glad of hearing the injured Sufferer's Innocence vindicated, and his good Name reſcued from all the Scandal, that Malice or Miſtake had caſt upon it.

10. CHARITY beareth, or, as it ſhould be rendered, covereth and concealeth all Things; and is ſo far from expoſing Men's Failings to the World, or thinking itſelf at Liberty to make them the Subject of publick Diſcourſe, and the Jeſt and Diverſion of all Companies, that it chuſes rather to hide, and caſt a Veil over them, be they never ſo many, or never ſo well known: For,

11. CHARITY believeth all Things: Without preſuming to judge Men's Hearts, or to pry into their ſecret Intentions, it diſpoſes us, firſt, to think favourably of every one, and then to credit all that can be ſaid in behalf of thoſe, that are ill-ſpoken of, if there be any Grounds for ſuch a Belief: And, if ever there be not, yet ſtill,

12. CHARITY hopeth all Things: Whoever ſins, ſhe hopes it is out of Weakneſs, or Surprize, or Inadvertency, and not out of Wilfulneſs, or habitual Cuſtom; whoever errs, ſhe hopes it is out of Ignorance, and unhappy Education, or unavoidable Prejudice, and not out of a wicked and depraved Mind; and, upon theſe Accounts, be the Man's Condition what it will, ſhe never deſpairs, but wiſhes, and prays, and, by all proper Methods, labours to bring about his Converſion. And,

13. LASTLY, though many Attempts of this Kind have been fruitleſs, yet ſtill Charity continues unwearied, and can away with Injuries and Delays, grievous to be borne, in Hopes that God will at laſt open the Eyes of the very worſt, and give them Repentance to the Acknowledgment of the Truth: And this I conceive to be the Senſe of Charity's enduring all Things.

THESE are the Characters, wherein the Apoſtle has deſcribed this moſt excellent and extenſive Virtue, which in the main may be ſaid to conſiſt [c] in an Eaſineſs to pardon, a Readineſs to oblige, Mercy to the diſtreſſed, Bounty to the Indigent, Candour and Sweetneſs, Generoſity and Diſintereſtedneſs in our Converſation towards all Men. And ſo we proceed to conſider,

I. OUR manifold Obligations to the Practice of this Duty. [d] That, by the original Order and Conſtitution of Nature, Men are ſo made and framed, that they neceſſarily want one another's Help and Aſſiſtance, for their mutual Support and Preſervation in the World; that they cannot ſubſiſt, at leaſt, cannot enjoy any Comforts of Life, independently on each other, but are manifeſtly fitted, by the very Frame of their Nature, to live in Societies, whereof Charity and mutual Friendſhip is the common Bond, is too plain to be controverted. In this Reſpect all Men naturally ſtand upon the ſame Level, have all the ſame Wants and Deſires, and are all in the ſame Need of each other's Aſſiſtance: Every Man therefore, as he is a Man, is bound by the Law of his Nature, i. e. by common Humanity, to look upon himſelf as a Part or Member of that one univerſal Body or Community, which is made up of all Mankind; to think himſelf born and ſent into the World, on Purpoſe to promote the Good and Welfare of all his Fellow-Creatures; and, conſequently, obliged, as the neceſſary and only effectual Means to that End, to embrace them all with univerſal Love, Charity, and Benevolence.

Our Obligations to it.

1. From the Nature of Things.

AND as it is founded in the Law of Nature, ſo is it conſonant to the Inclinations of Men's Minds, to be kindly affectioned to, and beneficial one towards another; inſomuch, that if Covetouſneſs, and Revenge, and other fooliſh and abſurd Paſſions were not ſuffered to over-rule this natural Diſpoſition, they would univerſally enjoy the happy Fruits and Effects of it. For, even in this preſent corrupt State of the World, as far as Men's Vices will permit them, they ſtill deſire to keep up a general Commerce and Communication with each other; they love to increaſe their Dependencies, by multiplying Affinities; to enlarge their Friendſhips, by mutual good Offices; and to eſtabliſh Societies, by a Communication of Arts, and Labour, and Induſtry: And ſince the only poſſible Means of preſerving ſuch Societies in any tolerable and durable Manner, is the Practice of mutual Love and univerſal Benevolence, this plainly ſhews us what the Direction and Tendency of uncorrupted Nature is.

AND as to love and do good to one another is conſonant to the original Inclinations of Men's Minds, ſo is it agreeable to that Nature of God, which we are required to imitate, and thoſe Laws of God, which we are bound to obey. God is Love, as the Apoſtle ſtiles him, an infinite and inexhauſtible Fountain of never-failing Goodneſs; who, being eternally happy in the Enjoyment of his own unſpeakable Perfections, could have no other Motive to create Things at firſt, but only that he might communicate his Goodneſs and Happineſs to his Creatures; as he continues to preſerve them for no other Reaſon, but that he may ſtill continue to do good to them: For [e] he maketh his Sun to riſe on the Evil and on the Good, and ſendeth Rain on the Juſt and on the Unjuſt, giving us from Heaven fruitful Seaſons, and filling our Hearts with Food and Gladneſs. Now, for the ſame Reaſon, that God does himſelf continually delight in doing good, and ſeems to take an eſpecial Pleaſure in deſcribing himſelf by that particular Attribute of Love and Goodneſs; for the ſame Reaſon, it muſt neceſſarily be his Will, that all rational Creatures ſhould imitate him in that excellent Perfection. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that he hath given us noble Powers and Faculties; hath endued us with Reaſon and Underſtanding, to diſcern between Good and Evil; and implanted in our Minds ſuch Affections and Diſpoſitions, as naturally incline us to mutual Benevolence and Aſſiſtance. He hath ſo framed and conſtituted our Nature, and ſo ordered the Circumſtances of our preſent State, as to make Society and Friendſhip neceſſary to the Support and Comfort of Life, that Men might be continually exerciſed in the Practice of theſe Divine Virtues. He has interwoven the Intereſts of Men, and made the Happineſs of every particular Perſon ſo dependent upon the Welfare of the Publick, that each one, from the Senſe of his own Wants and Exigencies, might ſee the Reaſonableneſs, and Neceſſity of making it his principal Buſineſs, to do good to others. In fine, he has given us no other Way of expreſſing, ſo acceptably, our Love and Gratitude to himſelf, whom [f] we have not ſeen, as by loving and doing good to our Brethren, whom we have ſeen; for [g] no Man hath ſeen God at any Time, but, if we love one another, hereby we know that God, though inviſible, really dwelleth in us; that his Love is perfected in us, and that we dwell in him, and he in us, becauſe we are Imitators of his Nature, and Partakers of his Spirit.

2. From the Nature of God.

[c] Cotes's Sermons. [d] Clarke's Sermons.

3. From Scripture.

NOR are we only obliged to love, and to do good to one another, by the Ties of common Humanity, as we are Men, and Partakers of the ſame Nature; but, as Chriſtians, we are to look upon ourſelves as Brethren, in a more peculiar Manner, being all the Children of God in Chriſt, Members all of the ſame Body, Partakers all of the ſame Spirit, and Heirs all of the ſame bleſſed Hope of Immortality. For thus the Apoſtle argues, [i] there is one Body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one Hope of your Calling; one Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſm, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. Wherefore [k] I beſeech you, that ye walk worthy of the Vocation, wherewith ye are called, with all Lowlineſs and Meekneſs, with Long-ſuffering; forbearing one another in Love, and endeavouring to keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace.

Its Peculiarity to Chriſtians.

NEITHER have we only the Example of God's Love and Goodneſs in general propoſed to our Imitation, but, as Chriſtians, we have it in a more particular and extraordinary Manner ſet before us, in that ſingular Inſtance of the Redemption of Mankind by the Death of his Son; of which great and undeſerved Mercy we, being all Partakers, and having all our Hopes of Happineſs founded upon it, are conſequently under the ſtrongeſt Obligation to be, in our Proportion, kind, and merciful, and charitable to our Brethren, as God has been infinitely good and merciful to us; for ſo we find the ſame Apoſtle arguing again: [l] Put on therefore, as the Elect of God, holy, and beloved, Bowels of Mercy, Kindneſs, Humbleneſs of Mind, Meekneſs, Long-ſuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another; if any Man has a Quarrel againſt any, even as Chriſt forgave you, ſo alſo do ye: And, above all Things, put on Charity, which is the Bond of Perfectneſs, and let the Peace of God rule in your Hearts, to the which alſo ye are called in one Body.

ONCE more: Nor is this Duty obligatory, as it proceeds from the Word of God only, but as it proceeds with a ſingular Enforcement, being the peculiar Law and Command of our Lord and Saviour, on which he inſiſts particularly, and ſeems to recommend it above all others, as the moſt indiſpenſable Qualification of a ſincere Chriſtian. [m] A new Commandment, ſays he, I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another; and he makes it, as it were, the diſtinguiſhing Mark and Badge of his Profeſſion; for by this ſhall all Men know that ye are my Diſciples, if ye have Love towards one another. He himſelf, whilſt he was here upon Earth, went continually about doing good; and, in ſo doing, hath ſet us an Example, wherein he requires, that we ſhould follow his Steps: And accordingly, we find the Apoſtles every where declaring, that univerſal Love and Charity is the End of the Commandment, the principal Aim and Deſign of our whole Chriſtian Law;

[e] Matth. v. 45. [f] Acts xiv. 17. [g] John iv. 20. [h] 1 John iv. 12, 13.
[i] Eph. iv. 4. [k] Ibid. iv. 1. [l] Col. iii. 12. [m] John xiii. 34.

Law; and that, being deſtitute of this, all our other Pretences to Religion, all our Zeal for the Service and Honour of God, all our Gifts and Accompliſhments, of what Kind ſoever they be, whether natural or ſupernatural, will avail us nothing: For, [n] though I ſpeak with the Tongues of Men and Angels, ſays St Paul, and have not Charity, I am become as ſounding Braſs, or a tinkling Cymbal, i. e. all my Pretences to Religion are falſe and empty; and though I have the Gift of Prophecy, and underſtand all Myſteries, and all Knowledge; and though I have all Faith, ſo that I could remove Mountains, and have not Charity, I am nothing; and though I beſtow all my Goods to feed the Poor, and though I give my Body to be burned, and have not Charity, it availeth me nothing.

And great Excellency.

AND well may the Scriptures lay ſo great a Streſs upon the Practice of univerſal Love and Charity, ſince it is a Temper and Diſpoſition of Mind, of all others, the moſt perfective of our rational Nature. It is That, which makes the Soul like unto God, and is at once the Condition and Ground, both of our preſent Happineſs, and that which is to come: For we muſt be like unto God, if we will ſee him as he is, and muſt firſt attain that Frame of Mind, wherein the Happineſs of Heaven eſſentially conſiſts, if ever we hope to become Partakers of it. In a Word, Charity is the Diſpoſition of Heaven, the ultimate End and Deſign of that Religion, which was revealed on Purpoſe to conduct us thither; and to which moſt of the other Virtues, Gifts, and Excellencies are but ſubſervient Means, and ſuch as muſt be done away, when that which is perfect is come: For, [o] whether there be Propheſies, they ſhall fail; whether there be Tongues, they ſhall ceaſe; whether there be Knowledge, it ſhall vaniſh away. Faith, which is our firm Belief, and Hope, which is our preſent Expectation of Things future, ſhall both be made void by Fruition; but Charity and Goodneſs never fail; for they are the Diſpoſitions of Mind, which are begun in the Virtues of this Life, and compleated in the Glories of the next. And ſo we proceed,

The Rule of it.

II. To conſider in what Meaſure, and from what Inducements, we are farther engaged to perform this Duty. Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thyſelf, this is the Rule; and it is the peculiar Excellency of this Rule, that by it we may eaſily diſcern all the Specialities of our Duty, without having Recourſe to any external Inſtruction. [p] For ſince every one, by his own Experience, knows what it is to love himſelf; ſince every one is conſcious in what Manner he uſes to treat himſelf, it is but conſulting his own Breaſt, and that will teach him, in what Manner he is to treat his Neighbour.

Do we not, for Inſtance, ſo highly value and eſteem ourſelves, that no Defects obſervable in us, no Miſchances befallen us, no Faults committed by us, can alter the good Opinion we have of ourſelves? This may teach us, what Regard and Value we ſhould ever preſerve for our Neighbour. Do we not ſincerely endeavour our own Welfare and Advantage of every Kind; wiſh good Succeſs to all our Undertakings; and, if we rightly underſtand ourſelves, deſire the Health and Happineſs of our immortal Souls? This may inform us, what we are to wiſh and deſire for our Neighbour. Have we not a ſenſible Complacency in our own Proſperity, and are extremely glad to find ourſelves thriving and flouriſhing in Wealth, in Reputation, or any other Accommodation or Ornament of Life? On the other Hand, do we not ſeriouſly grieve at our own Diſaſters and Diſappointments, and heartily bemoan and pity ourſelves, when fallen into Pain, or Poverty, or any other preſſing Calamities? This may inſtruct us, what Pleaſure we are to feel in our Neighbour's Proſperity, and how to condole and commiſerate his Misfortunes. Are we eaſily angry with ourſelves? Do we retain implacable Grudges, or execute malicious Deſigns againſt ourſelves? Yea, rather are we not meek and patient towards ourſelves, excuſing our own Infirmities and Follies, and forgiving ourſelves the moſt heinous Offences and Outrages againſt our own Intereſt, Honour, and Welfare? Hence we may learn the Leſſons of Meekneſs and Patience towards our Neighbour, in bearing his Infirmities, and remitting any Wrongs or Diſcourteſies, we have received from him. Are we rude in our Deportment, or harſh in our Language towards ourſelves, apt to cenſure our own Actions, blazon our Defects, and aggravate our Failings, and not rather conceal our Blemiſhes, and extenuate our Crimes? Do we delight to report, or to hear ill Stories of ourſelves, and and not rather endeavour, all we can, to ſtifle them, to tie the Tongues, and ſtop the Ears of Men againſt them? Hence we may likewiſe learn, how civil and courteous in our Behaviour, how fair and ingenuous in our Dealing, how candid and mild in our Judgment or Cenſure, we ſhould be towards our Neighbour. Thus reflecting on ourſelves, and making our Practice towards ourſelves the Pattern of our Dealing with others, we ſhall not fail of performing this Duty, and making our Charity commenſurate to our Self-love.

[n] 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c. [o] Ibid. ver. 8. [p] Barrow's Works, Vol. I.

The Reaſonableneſs of it.

AND, indeed, conſidering the near Relation we have to one another, and how, in the neceſſary and ſubſtantial Properties of our Nature, we are all the ſame, and diſtinguiſhed only by what is contingent and circumſtantial to us, we cannot but perceive the great Reaſonableneſs of loving our Neighbour to this Degree, as he is the expreſs Image of ourſelves, but much more, as he is created in the Divine Likeneſs and Similitude. The Prophet Malachi has a very wiſe Obſervation to this Purpoſe: [q] Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us? Why then do we deal treacherouſly every Man againſt his Brother? 'Tis barbarous not to love our own Nature, but highly impious to hate or vilify him, in whom God hath formed ſome, though weak Reſemblances of his own Perfections. [r] How contemptible ſoever he may be in the Circumſtances of his Fortune, yet he has in him an immortal Spirit, that ſhall live for ever, and live with God and Angels; he has in him thoſe Powers and Faculties, that render him capable of ſerving and enjoying his Great Creator; and how dear and valuable he is to God, we may beſt perceive, by conſidering what God has done for him. He has not only made him a little lower than the Angels, and crowned him with Glory and Honour; but, as if this World were too mean, has prepared a more glorious one to receive him: He ſpares and indulges him, as a tender Parent his beloved Child; guards and provides for him by a kind and wakeful Providence; wooes and courts him by the Sollicitations of his Holy Spirit; and has provided a ſtanding Propitiation for his Sins, by the Sacrifice of his only beloved Son. In a Word, he rejoices over him, to do him good, and longs, as it were, to have him with him in Heaven: And can we think, that the Almighty loves with a fond Paſſion, and where there is no Ground and Foundation for his Love? Herein therefore we have an Example ſet us, how we are to love him, whom God loves ſo well; and [s] this Commandment we have from him, that he who loveth God, love his Brother alſo: The Fulfilling of which Law, which St James calls the Royal Law, is the great Perfection of our Natures, the Advancement and Enlargement of our Souls, the chief Ornament and Beauty of a great Mind; that which makes us like God, the beſt, moſt perfect, and happieſt Being; and in that too, which is the prime Excellency, and Happineſs, and Glory of the Divine Nature.

Motives to it.

OF what happy Tendency this univerſal Love and Charity is, [u] to free our Souls from thoſe unruly and diſquieting Paſſions of Anger and Envy, of Malice and Revenge, of Jealouſy and Diſcontent, which are the great Torments of our Spirits; to make our Minds calm and chearful, and maintain us in the Poſſeſſion and quiet Enjoyment of ourſelves; to preſerve us from many Miſchiefs and Inconveniencies, which Enmity and Ill-will continually occaſion; to gain Friends and reclaim Enemies, and make every Condition either pleaſant, or eaſy, or tolerable to us, is verified by every Day's Experience.

OF what particular Note and Obſervation, in the firſt and beſt Ages of Religion, the Practice of this Duty was among Chriſtians; how it was the Mark and Badge of their Profeſſion, and grew into a Proverb among the Heathens, Behold, how theſe Chriſtians love one another; how ſome of the * greateſt Enemies of our Profeſſion admired it, and eſteemed the Example not unworthy their own Imitation, is what we are informed of from the Records of Antiquity: And therefore, to conclude this Head in the Words of the bleſſed Apoſtle; † If there be any Conſolation in Chriſt, if any Comfort of Love, if any Fellowſhip of the Spirit, if any Bowels and Mercies; if any Endearments in our common Nature and common Chriſtianity, if any Inducement in the Benefits and Advantages of any Duty, if any Encouragement in the Practice, [q] Mal. ii. 10. [r] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. II. [s] 1 John iv. 21. [t] James ii. 8.

[u] Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I.

* Julian, in his Letter to Arſacius, the Heathen High-Prieſt of Galatia, gives this memorable Teſtimony of the Chriſtians, that their Charity was not limited and confined only to themſelves, but extended even to their Enemies. His Words are theſe: It is a Shame, when the Jews ſuffer none of theirs to beg, and the impious Galileans (ſo he calls Chriſtians by Way of Reproach) relieve, not only their own, but theſe alſo of our Religion, that we only ſhould be defective in ſo neceſſary a Duty. Archbiſhop Tillotſon, ibid.

† Phil. ii. 1, 2.

Practice, and Examples of others, then fulfil ye my Joy, that ye be like-minded; and, having the same Love, [x] be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering Evil for Evil, or Railing for Railing; but, contrariwise, Blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a Blessing.

2. Of Loving Enemies.

THE Jews, having read, that their Ancestors [y] were commissioned by God, as Ministers of his Justice, utterly to destroy the seven Nations, that possessed the Land of Canaan before them; to blot out the Remembrance of Amalek under Heaven, and to have no Peace with the Ammonites and Moabites, their declared Enemies; [z] considered not, that these were special Cases, fixed by the Divine Command, and grounded upon Reasons both of State and Religion, but drew an Inference very falsely from them to their own private and personal Quarrels, and advanced it into a Maxim, that though in general they were to love their Neighbours, yet they not only might, but ought to hate their Enemies, especially such, as were Enemies to their Law, and the Manner of their religious Worship. This their Doctors taught with much Assurance, and the People received it with a malicious Readiness, being naturally violent and revengeful: But our Saviour, in his Sermon on the Mount, endeavours to correct their Mistake, and to prescribe to his Followers the very contrary Habit of Mind: Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy Neighbour, and hate thy Enemy; but I say to you, love your Enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you.

The Occasion of our Saviour's commanding this Duty.

LOVE your Enemies; [a] here the inward Affection is required: Bless them that curse you; here outward Civility and Affability are enjoined, in Opposition to all rude and opprobrious Language: Do good to them that hate you; here real Acts of Kindness are commanded to be done, even to our bittерest and most malicious Enemies: Pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you. The highest Expressions of Enmity that can be imagined, are Calumny and Cruelty, and yet we are commanded to pray for those, that touch us in these two tenderest Points of all, our Reputation and our Life: And to secure the Sincerity of our Charity towards our Enemies, we are required to express it by our hearty Prayers to God for them: To God, I say, before whom it is both impious and dangerous to dissemble, and from whom we can expect no Mercy for ourselves, if, with feigned Lips, we beg it of him for others.

To love our Enemies, what.

THIS is the Description that our Saviour gives us of the Duty, and accordingly we shall consider farther; I. Wherein it consists: And, II. By what Arguments it may be enforced.

I. 1. Now the first Step towards loving our Enemy, is discharging our Minds of all Rancour and Virulence towards him; for, where the least Particle of this is, it will not be long, before it discover itself in our Words and Actions. [b] Upon this Account, the Scripture very significantly call it the [c] Leaven of Malice, which, being of a spreading and fermenting Nature, will, in Time, diffuse a Sourness upon a Man's whole Behaviour. Nay, should we suppose, (which is very seldom found) that a Man has such an absolute Empire and Command over his Heart, as for ever to stifle his Disgusts, and to manage his Actions in a constant Contradiction to his Affections; yet all this is but a Mystery of Dissimulation, and acting a Part, instead of acting a Friend. Enmity, however, is a restless Thing, and not to be dissembled, without some Torment to the Mind that entertains it: And therefore we may presume, that he, who is resolved to hate his Enemy, and yet resolves not to shew it, has turned the Edge of his Hatred inwards, and becomes a Tyrant, and an Enemy to himself; nor can he wish his most mortal Adversary a greater Misery, than thus to carry a Mind, always big and swelling, and ever ready to burst, and yet never give it Vent. Are we then persuaded, that both our Duty and Interest require, that we should deport ourselves with all Signs of Love to our Enemies? Let us but take this easy Course, to entertain the Thing in our Hearts, which we would

It consists in a Freedom from Malice.

[x] 1 Pet. iii. 8, 9.
[y] Vid. Deut. vii. 16, &c. Ch. xxv. 19. Ch. xxiii. 3, 4.
[z] Gardiner's Sermons.
[a] Archbishop Tillotson's Sermons, Vol. I.
[b] South's Sermons, Vol. III.
[c] 1 Cor. v. 8.

manifeſt in our Converſe, and then we ſhall find ſmall Difficulty in the next Inſtance of our Love to our Enemies; which is,

In ſpeaking well of them.

2. BLESSING them that curſe us. The Word which we render bleſs, implies both our ſpeaking them civilly to their Faces, and ſpeaking well of them behind their Backs: And [d] therefore, though they reproach, revile, and ſlander us; treat us, when preſent, with the moſt contemptuous and inſulting, the moſt ſcurrilous and bitter Language; and, when we are abſent, make it their Buſineſs daily to leſſen and defame us, and to ſay all the bad Things of us, that they can either hear, imagine, or invent; our Conduct is to be directly the Reverſe of this. We muſt anſwer them in the moſt civil and courteous, the moſt obliging and good-natured Terms; and, whenever we have Occaſion to ſpeak of them in Company, labour to conceal their Faults, where Charity and Juſtice do not require us to diſcover them; put the beſt Conſtruction upon all their Actions, and be ready to publiſh whatever we know virtuous and commendable in them, even though they will acknowledge no ſuch Quality in us: For thus the Chriſtians behaved of old; We are Fools, ſays St Paul [e], for Chriſt's Sake, but ye are wiſe in Chriſt; ye are honourable, but we are deſpiſed; being reviled, we bleſs; being perſecuted, we ſuffer; being defamed, we intreat. What Harmony, what Beauty, what Sweetneſs, what Evenneſs, what Perfection muſt there be in ſuch a Temper as this! What Command over his Paſſions muſt we ſuppoſe in ſuch a Perſon! And how ſtately and magnificent does it look, to ſee him unmoved by Abuſe, and invincible by Reproach, returning Good for Evil, and gracious Wiſhes for baſe and horrid Imprecations! This certainly is one of the beſt Arguments of a great and generous Mind; for, according to the Obſervation of the wiſe Man, [f] he that is ſlow to Anger, is better than the Mighty; and he that ruleth his Spirit, than he that taketh a City.

In doing them all good Offices.

3. To love an Enemy, is to do him all the real Offices of Kindneſs and Beneficence, that Opportunity ſhall lay in our Way. Has Providence, for Inſtance, put any of my Enemy's Concernments, his Health, his Eſtate, his Preferment, or any other Thing conducing to the Convenience of his Life, under my Power or Influence? Why, in all this, it gives me an Opportunity to manifeſt, whether or no I can reach the Sublimity of this Precept. [g] Is my Enemy ſick and languiſhing, and is it in my Power to cure him, as eaſily, or to kill him, as ſafely, as if I were his Phyſician? Chriſtianity here commands me to be concerned for his Weakneſs, to reſcue him from Death and the Grave, and to preſerve that Life, which perhaps would have once deſtroyed mine. Do I ſee mine Enemy defrauded, and circumvented, and like to be undone in his Eſtate? I muſt not ſit ſtill, and ſuffer him to be ruined, but contribute my Aſſiſtance to diſcover the Fraud, or repel the Oppreſſion, and be as ready to preſerve him from Poverty, as I would to relieve him, if he were in it. Does it lie in my Way to put in a Word to daſh, or promote my Enemy's Buſineſs or Intereſt; to give him a ſecret Blow, that ſhall ſtrike him to the Ground for ever, and never know the Hand from whence it came? Can I, by my Power, obſtruct his lawful Advantage and Preferment, and ſo reap the diabolical Satisfaction of a cloſe Revenge? Can I do him all the Miſchief imaginable, and that eaſily, ſafely, and ſucceſsfully, and ſo applaud myſelf in my Power, my Wit, my ſubtle Contrivances? Yet all theſe vile Practices, and accurſed Methods of growing great, and riſing by the Fall of an Adverſary, are to be deteſted, as infinitely oppoſite to that Innocence and Clearneſs of Spirit, that Openneſs and Freedom from Deſign, which becomes a Profeſſor of Chriſtianity. On the contrary, amidſt all theſe Opportunities of doing Miſchief, I muſt eſpouſe my Enemy's juſt Cauſe, as his Advocate or Sollicitor; I muſt help it forward by favourable Speeches of his Perſon, a due Acknowledgment of his Merit, and a fair Conſtruction of doubtful Paſſages; and all this, if need be, in ſecret, where my Enemy neither ſees nor hears me do him theſe Services, and, conſequently, where I have all the Advantages and Temptations to do otherwiſe.

In praying for them.

4. THE laſt and crowning Inſtance of our Love to our Enemies, is to pray for them; for by this a Man acknowledges himſelf, as it were unable to do enough for his Enemy, and therefore he calls in the Aſſiſtance of Heaven, and engages Omnipotence to compleat the Kindneſs. Prayer for my own Proſperity, is, indeed, a neceſſary Duty, but, if we conſider it narrowly, 'tis but a kind of lawful and pious Selfiſhneſs: But now, when I pray as heartily for my Enemy, as I do for my Daily Bread, [d] Gardiner's Sermons. [e] 1 Cor. iv. 10, &c. [f] Prov. xvi. 32. [g] South's Sermons, Vol. III.

Bread, and reckon his Felicity among my own Neceſſities; when I recommend him to God's infinite Power and Compaſſion, to reſtore his Health, relieve his Wants, and ſupply him with all needful Bleſſings, even at the ſame Time that he is maligning and perſecuting me; I then follow that Divine Pattern of perfect Charity, who, in the Midſt of the moſt barbarous and contumelious Uſage, made both this Prayer and Apology for his Murtherers; [h] Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.

[i] THIS then is the Perfection of Chriſtian Charity, to be kindly affected, not to our Friends and Benefactors only, but to our Enemies and Perſecutors. 'Tis a good Degree of Charity to ſpeak them fair, and give them good Words, at the ſame Time that they are reviling and reproaching us; 'tis an higher Degree of it, to confer real Benefits upon them, and contribute what we can to their Happineſs and Welfare; but 'tis the Top and Perfection of it, to recommend them to God, who can do them more Good than we can; can grant them that Grace of Repentance, which we can only wiſh them; can beſtow upon them that Pardon for their Faults, which we can only requeſt for them; and make them as great and as happy as he pleaſes, both in this World and in the next.

An Objection.

" BUT if all this is to be done for our Enemies, where is the Difference between " thoſe, that have done us Kindneſs, and thoſe, that have done us Wrong? The " moſt we can do for our beſt Friends, and kindeſt Benefactors, is to love them, " to bleſs them, to do good to them, and to pray for them; if therefore we are " obliged to do all this for our Enemies, there is plainly nothing more left to be " done for our Friends." [k] Now though it cannot be denied, that Friendſhip in general is to be extended to all Mankind, even to thoſe, that hate and injure us, as well as to thoſe, that do us good; yet that particular and ſpecial Friendſhip, i. e. the loving of one Perſon more than another, which induces an additional Obligation, and is one of the greateſt Comforts of Society, is ſtill as lawful, and as commendable as ever, we have an Inſtance in our bleſſed Saviour himſelf; who, though he was continually teaching and inſtructing, healing, and doing good to an ungrateful People, and though he purpoſely came into the World to die for his Enemies, (which is the ſtrongeſt Effort of Love, that can be made even to our deareſt Friends) yet nevertheleſs, he had his twelve Diſciples, with whom he converſed with more Intimacy; whom he inſtructed with more Diligence and Freedom; and prayed for, in a particular Manner, with more than ordinary Tenderneſs and Concern: And even, in that Number, three of them were ſingled out for ſpecial Confidences and Favours; and of theſe three, St John is eminently diſtinguiſhed, as his Boſom-Friend, and the Diſciple whom he loved: Which makes it evident, beyond all Controverſy, that however the Chriſtian Religion may require a very extenſive Charity, yet has it ſtill left Room for the Obligations of particular Friendſhips and Relations. I am bound, indeed, to relieve my Enemy if I can, when he wants; but I am not bound to make him extraordinary Preſents, to leave him Legacies, or make him the Inheritor of my Eſtate. I am required to love my Enemy, and to wiſh, and do him all the good I can; but it does not preſently become neceſſary, that I ſhould take him into my Boſom, and give him the ſame Place in my moſt ſecret Thoughts and Purpoſes, that is due to my moſt familiar Friend: And though I am to deny my Aſſiſtance to none, yet, when Friend and Foe ſtand in Competition, and both cannot be ſerved at once, the Apoſtle, I think, has determined the Preference; for [l] as we have an Opportunity, ſays he, let us do good unto all Men, but eſpecially unto them that are of the Houſhold of Faith; and by Parity of Reaſon, eſpecially to thoſe of this Houſhold, that are bound to us by a nearer Tie of Friendſhip or Conſanguinity.

Answered.

Another Objection.

BUT the greateſt Objection of all againſt the Practice of this Duty, ariſes from the vaſt Difficulty, that is ſuppoſed in it: " [m] What, love an Enemy, and embrace " a Wretch, that would take away my Life, had he a ſecure Opportunity! As " well may you bid me pull up Mountains by the Roots, or ſtop the Sun in its " Courſe: The Thing is impoſſible, and the whole Tendency of Nature is againſt " it. To forgive Injuries, and tamely put up Affronts, are Leſſons proper for the " Weak and Puſillanimous, for ſuch as want Power, or an Opportunity to ex- " preſs their Reſentments; but they badly comport with a Man of Spirit, and worſe " with a Man of Honour." Now to ſilence this Objection, we cannot do better than proceed,

II. To

[h] Luke xxiii. 34. [i] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [k] Gardiner's Sermons. [l] Gal. vi. 10.
[m] Horneck's Sermons, Vol. II.

Answered, from the Motives and Arguments for this Duty.
1. From the Consideration of our Enemy.

II. To some of the Motives and Arguments, that may recommend the Love of our Enemies, and reconcile us to the Practice of it, would we be impartial, and lay aside our Prejudice, we might perhaps discern several great and good Qualities in the Person that hates us: And, even in an Enemy, whatsoever is lovely, whatsoever is of good Report, should not go without its due Praise and Acknowledgment. [n] Nay suppose the worst, that he is never so much an Enemy, and never so bad a Man, yet still he is a Man, joined with us in the Society and Communion of the same Nature, and partaking of the Image and Super-inscription of our Heavenly Father; and we paint our Enemy then in wrong Colours, when we think him capable of affording us no Benefit at all; since [o] by him we may be admonished of our Faults, which our Friends perhaps would be shy of mentioning, and too tender in reproving: By him, and the Fear of his Censures, restrained from those Liberties, which, if we had taken, might have proved a Snare and Temptation to us: And by him, and his Injuries, have an Opportunity given us, of improving our Faith and Patience, and thereby of increasing our future Happiness. In him, indeed, there is no such Intention, and all that he does is in pure Hostility against us; but still we are to consider him as an Instrument in God's Hand, without whose Appointment or Permission nothing can befal us, and, consequently, not fasten our Eyes with Indignation upon him, but have always an awful Regard to the divine Providence that employs him; [p] and upon this Consideration it was, that David suppressed all impatient and resentive Thoughts, when he was sadly reviled, and treated with Indignity by Shimei. He had those about him, no doubt, that were ready enough to be the Executioners of his Revenge; but all that he had to say was; [q] let him curse; for the Lord hath bidden him: Who shall then say, wherefore hast thou done so?

THIS Enemy of ours perhaps, at present, may create us some Uneasiness, yet who knows, but that, in Time, he may become (what reconciled Enemies usually are) one of our best Friends, and the Matter of our Joy and Consolation? And to bring about this Event, what can we imagine so prevalent, as a continual doing of kind and good Offices to those that bear us Ill-will? For [r] if, to see an injured Person, when insulted by outrageous Malice, not only patient in bearing it, but quietly passing by all other Methods of Revenge, beside that of a generous Contempt; if such a surprising Sight as this, I say, cannot but fill, even him that does the Injury, with secret Shame and Confusion; what Operation may it not be expected to have, when the same innocent and injured Person, not contented only to forbear and forgive, pursues his very Persecutor with Courtesy and Kindness, and endeavours to reduce him by all seasonable good Offices, and by all the Overtures of Reconciliation, and Invitations to Friendship, that he can think of? Such resolved Goodness, without Dispute, must be enough to subdue the most obstinate Ill-nature, and can hardly fail of the Effect, whereof the Apostle gives us this Assurance; [s] if thine Enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him Drink; for, in so doing, [t] thou shalt heap Coals of Fire on his Head.——Coals that, when once they come to touch the Heart, will melt him down, be he made of never so stubborn Metal, into Easiness and Compliance, refine him from all his unsociable Passions, and fit him for your Familiarity and Friendship.

2. The Nature of the Duty.

BUT if this Event should not follow, nay, if even we are assured before-hand, that the Malice our Enemy bears us, is so settled and implacable, that no Love or Kindness on our Part can work upon his Temper, and regain his Friendship; yet, herein is the great Advantage of this Duty, that, in loving our Enemies, we really exercise and express our Love to ourselves: By loving an Enemy, notwithstanding his Hatred to me, I free my Mind of those boisterous Passions of Anger, Hatred, and Revenge, which put the Spirits into an unnatural Fermentation and Tumult. By not being easily provoked, I blunt the Edge of the Weapon, wherewith he seeks to hurt me; and, by returning Good for Evil, I have it in my Power sufficiently, though innocently to be revenged of him. I can make his very Eyes sore, to see so much Goodness in one that he hates; I can gall and vex him to the Heart, by a generous Return to an unworthy Provocation; and, in short, can shame and confound him quite, by shewing myself to be, in all the Contention between us, much the better, and the wiser, and the greater Man of the two.

AND

[n] Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [o] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [p] Mos's Sermons. [q] 2 Sam. xvi. 10, 11.
[r] Mos, ibid. [s] Rom. xii. 20.
[t] The Metaphor is taken from the Method used by Artificers in Metals, who, when they meet with any too hard to be dissolved by putting Fire under them, take and pour live Coals upon them, and, by that Means, bring them to their Purpose. Hammond, in Locum.

AND now, [u] what a pleaſing Proſpect muſt it be to the meek, the humble, and the patient Soul, whenever an Enemy approaches, to perceive himſelf placed, as it were, in Eminence above him, and that he is ſtill able to keep himſelf quiet and undiſturbed, notwithſtanding all the rude Attacks that can be made upon him; nay, to perceive, that, without any outward Force or Violence, without ſtriking a ſingle Stroke, or ſaying one Word, he can moſt ſweetly and innocently be revenged, only by continuing firm to his Duty? Nor can it but enhanſe this Pleaſure, to conceive ſome probable Hopes of vanquiſhing the ſturdieſt Oppoſition of an Enemy, by pure Dint of Courteſy and Kindneſs; and like a great and wiſe General, (as [x] one fitly compares it) by Art and Stratagem, by Skill and Conduct, by Patience and wiſe Delay, to make an End of the War, without ever putting it to the Hazard of a Battle.

3. The Example of God.

BY our Lord's Authority, we may venture to carry the Practice of this Duty to a ſtill higher Pitch of Commendation. [y] For, as Love for Love is but Juſtice and Gratitude, and Love for no Love Favour and Kindneſs; ſo Love for Hatred and Enmity is a moſt divine Temper, and that whereby we [z] become the Children of our Father, which is in Heaven: For he maketh his Sun to riſe on the Evil and on the Good, and ſendeth Rain on the Juſt and on the Unjuſt. [a] Who then can think it beneath him to paſs by an Injury, or to put up an Affront, when he ſees that God, the ſovereign Creator and Lord of all Things, whoſe Power no Creature is able to reſiſt, does nevertheleſs ſpare and preſerve us (vile Worms, and ſinful Duſt and Aſhes) who provoke him every Day, and, by our continual Abuſe of his Forbearance and Long-ſuffering, call for the ſevereſt Vengeance upon us? Who can think it unbecoming his Dignity or Greatneſs, even to buy his Peace with his Neighbour, who has done him Wrong, by doing him, as he has Opportunity, all Offices of Goodneſs and Kindneſs, when he has before him the Example of God himſelf, intreating us to be reconciled to him, and, notwithſtanding our manifold Provocations, deſirous to purchaſe our Friendſhip at any Rate: When we have the Example of the Son of God, our crucified Saviour, [b] who did no Sin, neither was Guile found in his Mouth; and yet, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he ſuffered, he threatened not: When we have the Example of his glorious Company of Apoſtles, who in all Things [c] approved themſelves, as the Miniſters of Chriſt, and his faithful Followers, in Honour and Diſhonour, by evil Report and good Report, as Deceivers, and yet true: When we have the Example of his Church, in the beſt Ages, who, as Juſtin Martyr tells the Jews, [d] prayed for them, and all others, that were unjuſtly their Enemies, that repenting of their Wickedneſs, and ceaſing to blaſpheme Chriſt Jeſus, they might, together with Chriſtians, be ſaved by him, at his ſecond glorious Coming: When we have his gracious Promiſe of a Recompence to be made us, for all that we ſuffer upon this Score; for [e] bleſſed are ye, when Men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſay all Manner of Evil againſt you falſly for my Sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your Reward in Heaven: And laſtly, when we have his ſevere Comminations, that, without forgiving our Enemies, we can have no Remiſſion of our own Tranſgreſſions; for, [f] if he that is but Fleſh (as the Son of Syrach obſerves) nouriſheth Hatred, who ſhall intreat for Pardon of his Sins? And therefore he concludeth, Remember thy End, and let Enmity ceaſe: Remember Corruption and Death, and abide in the Commandments: Remember the Commandments, and bear no Malice to thy Neighbour: Remember the Covenant of the moſt High, and wink at Ignorance.

SECT. I.

Of Juſtice in general.

Juſtice, what, and the ſeveral Kinds of it.

JUSTICE is that Virtue, which is concerned in the Obſervance of thoſe Laws, whether human or divine, which reſpect the ſeveral Rights of Men, whether natural or acquired.

1. With Relation to our natural Rights.

1. THE natural Rights of Men are thoſe, which appertain to them, as rational Creatures, dwelling in mortal Bodies, joined together in mutual Relations, and united in [u] Moſs's Sermons. [x] Barrow. [y] Archbiſhop Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [z] Matth. v. 45.

[a] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [b] 1 Pet. ii. 22. [c] 2 Cor. vi. 4, 8. [d] Cave's Primitive Chriſtianity.
[e] Matth. v. 11, 12. [f] Eccleſ. xxviii. 5, &c.

in one common Society. Theſe are Rights inherent in them, antecedently to all human Conſtitutions, and what they may juſtly claim of one another, as eternal Dues, which no Laws can cancel, no Cuſtom diſſolve, no Circumſtances make void or abrogate. [1] To do juſtly then, with Reſpect to this kind of Rights, is to render to every Man what we are indebted to him by the Obligation of Nature; as he is a rational Creature, to treat him equitably, and to do him all the good we can juſtly deſire he ſhould do to us, if we were in his Circumſtances; quietly to permit him to judge for himſelf, without endeavouring to tyrannize over his Conſcience, by perſecuting, cenſuring, and reviling him, becauſe he is not of our Opinion; freely to ſuffer him to comply with the Dictates of right Reaſon, and not to put him, by any kind of Violence or Neceſſity, upon any wicked or diſhonourable Act; and, in a Word, to pay him all thoſe fair Reſpects, and Inſtances of Courteſy, that are due to the Dignity of human Nature. Theſe are Debts, which every rational Creature owes to his own Kind, and which we cannot with-hold from one another, without manifeſt Injuſtice to human Nature: But then, as we are rational Creatures, inhabiting theſe mortal Bodies, we are obliged in Juſtice not to maim, or deſtroy, or captivate another Man's Body, unleſs it be in the neceſſary Defence of our own Lives, Eſtates, or Liberties; not to deprive him of his neceſſary Livelihood and Subſiſtence, but out of our Abundance (if he be rich and we poor) to ſupply his pinching Neceſſities. Theſe Things we owe to one another, as we are all the Tenants of God, ſent down into this lower World, and quartered in theſe Houſes of Clay. And ſo again, as we are rational Creatures, joined together by natural Relations, we are obliged to pay each other all thoſe Reſpects and Duties, which the Nature of our Relation calls for; as we are Parents, to love, and inſtruct, and make ſuitable Proviſion for our Children; and, as we are Children, to love, and reverence, to ſuccour, and obey our Parents; and ſo in all other Relations. Once again, as we are rational Creatures, united in one common Society, we owe Love and Peace, Truth and Credit, Protection and Participation of Profit to our Fellow-members; and when, inſtead of theſe, we hate and malign, we vex and diſturb one another; when we lye, and equivocate, and violate our Promiſes and Oaths; when we are negligent and prodigal of each other's Lives, Eſtates, and Reputations, and uſurp to ourſelves all the Profit of our mutual Intercourſe, we then deſtroy the natural Rights of human Society, and demean ourſelves as open Enemies to Mankind.

Our acquired Right.

2. THE acquired Rights of Men are ſuch, as ariſe from their ſacred and civil Relations, from their legal Poſſeſſions, their perſonal Accompliſhments, their outward Rank and Quality, and the like; of which we intend to diſcourſe ſomewhat more diſtinctly, after we have conſidered, 1. Our Obligation to Juſtice in general; and, 2. The Rule and Motives, that may engage our Practice of it.

Our Obligation to Juſtice.

I. THAT there is a ſecret Inclination, or Impreſſion upon the Minds of Men, whereby they are naturally carried to approve ſome Things, as good and fit, and to diſlike other Things, as having a native Evil and Deformity in them; and that, by theſe natural Inclinations and Impreſſions, the great Lines of our Duty may be traced out, a Man needs but conſult the Oracle of his own Breaſt to be ſatisfied. That to be juſt in our Dealings, true in our Truſts, faithful in our Promiſes, and in all Things to do to others, as we would they ſhould do unto us, are Actions eternally good, and fitted to the genuine Propenſions of our Nature; as on the contrary, to be falſe and perfidious in our Words or Deeds, to injure the Innocent, or oppreſs the Impotent, or defraud the Ignorant, are Actions eternally evil, and abhorrent to our natural and undepraved Notions, is viſible from the Glory and Appearance, which is known to attend the one, and the Shame and Confuſion which uſually accompanies the other; for Glory and Shame are nothing elſe, but an Appeal to the Judgment of others, concerning the Good or Evil of our Actions.

From the Dictates of our Nature.

From the Nature of God.

AND, as by our natural Propenſions we are called upon to the Practice of all Manner of Juſtice, ſo are we no leſs obliged to perform it, in Conformity to the Nature, in Submiſſion to the Providence, and in Obedience to the Will of our great Creator. As God, by the infinite Self-ſufficiency of his Nature, is ſecured from all Temptation to Injuſtice, ſo, by the infinite Goodneſs of it, he ſtands unvariably bent and inclined to deal juſtly and righteouſly by his Creatures, never to with-hold from them any Right, never to afflict them beyond their Demerit; and therefore the Royal Pſalmiſt

[1] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Part III.

Pſalmiſt makes his Acknowledgment; * Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy Judgments; even as the ſeven Angels, in the Song of the Lamb, declare, Great and marvellous are thy Works, Lord God Almighty, juſt and true are thy Ways, thou King of Saints. Since then the Nature of God is the great Exemplar and Pattern of all reaſonable Natures, as being in itſelf the moſt perfectly reaſonable, whatever is imitable in it, that we are obliged to tranſcribe into our own; and, conſequently, ſince he is eternally juſt, we are obliged to be juſt likewiſe. For indeed, conſider- His Providence.
ing that God, as the ſupreme Lord and Proprietor of all Things, has an eternal Right to ſhare his own Goods amongſt his own Creatures, as he pleaſes, to deprive another Man of what his Providence has allotted him, beſides the Injury done the Perſon, is a direct Oppoſition to the Divine Ordination and Appointment; a ſetting ourſelves up to carve for ourſelves out of thoſe Allowances, that he has diſtributed to others, and living in open Rebellion to his wiſe Government. Well therefore His revealed Will.
might the Word of God teach and admoniſh us, that denying Ungodlineſs, and worldly Luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent World; that, in all our Dealings, we ſhould maintain a Conſcience void of Offence, not going beyond, or defrauding one another; but, in every Thing, dealing with other Men, as we would they ſhould deal with us: For † he hath ſhewed thee, O Man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love Mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? What doth the Lord require of thee? All thy other Works, and Performances, thy coming before him with Burnt-Offerings, with Calves of a Year old; thy bringing to his Altar Thouſands of Rams, and ten Thouſand Rivers of Oil; nay, thy giving thy Firſt-Born for thy Tranſgreſſion, the Fruit of thy Body for the Sin of thy Soul, will avail thee nothing: ‖ So long as thou art a Tranſgreſſor of the eternal Rules of Righteouſneſs, whatever thy Worſhip, whatever thy Form of Religion be, it will never recommend thee to the Favour of that God, who loves Juſtice more than Sacrifice, and the Integrity of thy Dealings, more than all the Solemnity of thy other Services. And ſo we proceed,

II. To ſtate the Meaſure, and enforce the Motives of this Duty. It is reported The Rule or Meaſure of this Duty. of Alexander Severus, the Roman Emperor, that he had ſo great an Eſteem for our bleſſed Saviour, upon Account of his being the Author of this one Sentence, ‡ All Things, whatſoever ye would that Men ſhould do unto you, do you even ſo to them; that he was once minded to have built him a Temple, and received him into the Number of the Heathen Gods. And well might the Emperor have ſo good an Opinion of its Author, ſince this, of all others, is a Rule ſo plain and clear, ſo near at Hand, and accommodated to all the common Caſes of human Life, that nothing more excellent can be deviſed for the Regulation of our Intercourſe with one another; only there may be ſome Doubt concerning the Extent of the Matter contained in it, which we will firſt endeavour to explain, and then ſhew the manifold Uſefulneſs of it.

Now though this Rule be of excellent Uſe towards the Direction of our Behaviour The Limitation of this Rule.
in general, yet there are ſeveral Caſes, wherein it will not hold; wherein we are obliged not to grant that to others, which we ourſelves perhaps, were we in their Circumſtances, and they in ours, might be willing enough, unreaſonably willing, to obtain from them. ‖ A Benefactor, for Inſtance, is not bound to comply with the Demands of ſuch, as aſk unmerited Favours, though conſcious, that he himſelf might be apt to make as extravagant Requeſts, were it his Turn to be the Object of another Man's Beneficence: Nor is a Magiſtrate at Liberty, much leſs under an Obligation, to turn the Edge of Juſtice from an importunate Offender, becauſe, if he himſelf were the Criminal, he ſhould certainly and equally deſire to eſcape unpuniſhed. The Rule therefore, which makes what we deſire of other Men the Meaſure of our Dealings toward them, is to be underſtood, not of vicious or exceſſive Deſires, but of ſuch only as are fit and reaſonable; ſuch Requeſts as we can, in our calmeſt Thoughts, juſtify to ourſelves; ſuch as we are ſure may be made with Decency, and cannot be refuſed without Inhumanity.

THIS is the neceſſary Limitation of the Rule: And, were it but duly obſerved, The Excellency of it.
the Seller would not take Advantage of the Ignorance of the Buyer, nor the Buyer make an Advantage of the Neceſſity of the Seller; becauſe his own Conſcience would tell tell him, that if he were the Buyer, and another ſhould take ſuch Advantage of his Ignorance, if he were the Seller, and another ſhould make ſuch Advantage of his Neceſſity, he ſhould have Reaſon enough to complain of his being cheated, or oppreſſed. If this Rule were duly obſerved, the Borrower would reckon himſelf ſtrictly bound to reſtore what was lent him, in due Time; and the Lender would be far from exacting any extravagant Conditions for the Loan of his Money or Goods, becauſe he knows, that, when he lends, he expects the Borrower to be punctual, and, when himſelf is forced to borrow, he ſhould be very loth to fall into the Hands of an Extortioner. Were this Rule well remembered and obſerved, there would be no Need of ever binding Men in Obligations, or ſuing them at Law to perform their Bargains, or execute their Truſts; becauſe whoever ſtrikes a Bargain, or accepts a Truſt, cannot but know what he would account another, that ſhould falſify in either of theſe Particulars; and therefore ſhould he himſelf do ſo, he muſt be convicted, and condemned by his own Conſcience. In fine, (for to run through all Particulars would be endleſs) who is there, that does not call that Man a Knave, or an unjuſt Perſon, who robs him, who cheats him, who keeps from him his own, or who any Ways abuſes him in Word or Deed? Every Man has a quick Senſe, and is ready to make loud Complaints of the Injuries and Affronts that are put upon him; and therefore, if he would but make another Man's Caſe his own, he would have the ſame Reſentment of the Injuries that are done to another, and, conſequently, be reſtrained from doing any himſelf.

* Pſal. cxix. 137. † Micah vi. 8, &c. ‖ Cave's Primitive Chriſtianity. ‡ Matth. vii. 12. ‖ Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I.

Motives to the Practice of Juſtice.

From its Obviouſneſs.

[m] THIS Commandment (ſays Moſes, to engage the People to the Obſervance of the Moral Law) is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in Heaven, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, who ſhall go up for us to Heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Neither is it beyond the Sea, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, who ſhall go over the Sea for us, that we may hear it, and do it? But the Word is very nigh unto thee, in thy Mouth, and in thy Heart, that thou mayſt do it: And if this might be ſaid of the Law in general, much more is it true of thoſe eternal Rules of Righteouſneſs, which lie open to common Uſe, are obvious to all Sizes of Apprehenſion, and ready at all Times for preſent Application. The greater therefore, and more inexcuſable muſt the Violation of theſe Precepts be, ſince, [n] however other Sins may be excuſed by our Ignorance, and, in ſome Meaſure, alleviated upon Account of the natural Defects of our Underſtanding, this can admit of no Cloak or Extenuation; becauſe, whenever a Man deals unjuſtly by another, his Conſcience (if he puts but the Queſtion to his Conſcience) will be ſure to tell him, that he would not be ſo dealt with, were the Caſe and Circumſtances his own; and therefore, if he reſolves to deal unjuſtly, notwithſtanding ſuch Conviction, he can claim no Indulgence, deſerves no Pity, and can pretend to no Mitigation of his Stripes, ſince he knew his Maſter's Will, and did it not.

From the Unprofitableneſs,

IT may be conſidered farther, that, however the unjuſt Man may make Profit and Advantage his ultimate End, yet, one Way or other, he is generally diſappointed; becauſe, how ſecretly ſoever he may carry on his Myſtery, yet it will not be long, before ſome unforeſeen Accident will draw the Curtain, and bring to Light the Fraud and Villainy, which he practiſes behind it; and when theſe are once detected, farewel Credit and Reputation for ever. The Man, that has ſuffered by his Diſhoneſty, either out of Charity to others, or out of Reſentment of the Injury, will divulge his Knavery, and caution others againſt him; and what Expectance can he then have of thriving in his Trade or Calling, when his Houſe becomes haunted, as it were, and his Frauds and Cozenages appear like Spectres at his Door, to frighten all Men from his Converſation? But ſuppoſe the beſt, and (what ſometimes comes to paſs) that the Man thrives, and grows great in the World by his Frauds and Injuſtice; yet alas! what Comfort can he take in his ill-gotten Wealth, when every Part of it throws Guilt in his Face, and awakens ſome dire Reflection in his Conſcience? By a continued Tumult of Exceſs and Riot he may make a ſhift perhaps to drown theſe Remonſtrances; but, in all Probability, when Death, in ſome Diſeaſe or other, begins to approach him, and to place him within the Sight of a dreadful Eternity, his Conſcience will then begin to rouſe and awake, and raiſe an hideous Outcry againſt him. And what a wretched and deplorable Condition muſt he then be in, when his laſt Will and Teſtament ſets before him a woeful Catalogue of uncancelled Guilts, and every ill-gotten Penny puts him in Mind of his approaching Damnation?

Uneaſineſs,

[l] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. II. [m] Deut. xxx. 11, &c. [n] Scott's Chriſtian Life.

Damnation? Under these Circumstances, he has but these two Things to chuse, either to refund his unjust Acquisitions, or to venture to perish eternally for them. If his Resolution is to live and die with the Spoils of his Injustice about him, he thereby exposes himself to the Wrath of God, which is revealed from Heaven against all Unrighteousness of Men, and surrenders his immortal Soul, which the Gain of the whole World can never compensate, to the Pangs and Agonies of everlasting Death. But, if he is not so desperate as to intend this, he must then make Restitution of what he hath wrongfully taken from his Neighbour, and in doing so, perhaps, strip himself of all. And now, [o] what Folly and Madness is this, for a Man to take a great deal of Pains, only to create himself more Trouble and Vexation? To spin a Thread, which he knows himself must unravel? And to load and cumber himself, as it were, with bringing home to his own House his Neighbour's Goods, which he must afterwards carry back again upon his own Shoulders, and when that is done, leave his own House more naked and unfurnished, than it was at first? He certainly is the wiser, as well as the honester Man, wiser, I say, for this World, as well as the next, who, though he has but little, can call that little his own, as being the Fruit of God's Blessing upon his honest Industry, and may therefore (as the primitive Manner was) [p] eat his Meat with Gladness, and Singleness of Heart, praising God, and having Favour with all the People.

Desperateness,

and Folly of Injustice.

SECT. II.

Of Relative Justice.

BESIDES the general Justice, which is common to all Men, there is a special Kind of Justice, arising from the Respects and Relations, wherein we stand, as Superiors and Inferiors, to each other. Now Superiors, with their respective Inferiors, are such, either with Regard their Authority, or their Excellency. 1. Superiors in Authority are those, who, by God's Ordinance, have Power over us, and a Right to rule and govern us; and these are either in the State, in the Church, or in private Families. In the State, the Superiors are the Princes, or chief Magistrates, who are the secular Fathers of the Country, and God's Vicegerents in it. In the Church, they are the Ministers of the Gospel, who are the spiritual Fathers of the People committed to their Charge. In a Family, they and their respective Inferiors are Husband and Wife, Parents and Children, Masters and Servants. 2. Superiors in Excellency are such, as surpass others, either in the Gifts of the Mind, or in Wealth and Honour, or in Beneficence and Liberality, &c. and our Purpose must be to shew, what are the several Rights, that these Men may claim, and consequently, what are the Duties, that interfere between the Prince and Subject, the Pastor and People, [q] Parents and Children, the Husband and Wife, the Master and Servant, Friend and Friend; between Superiors in Rank and Riches, in Parts and Abilities, and their respective Inferiors.

Different Kinds of it.

1. Between Prince and Subject.

WHOEVER will give himself Pains to reflect upon the State and Condition of Things in this World, and to consider how much stronger Influence Men's Passions have over them, than their Reason, may soon be convinced of the Necessity of Government to the Peace and Happiness of it. We may perceive, by the Injustice and Wickedness that is done every Day, in Defiance of Law and Punishment, what Mankind would be, if these Restraints were withdrawn, and Will and Pleasure were the sole Principle of every one's Actions. It is of happy Design therefore, that God has appointed governing Powers in the World, for the Support and Comfort of human Society, [r] to be his Ministers to us for Good, and Revengers to execute Wrath upon him that doth Evil. [s] But then these Governors

The Reasons of Government.

[o] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [p] Acts ii. 46, 47. [q] The Duties relating to Parents and Children, we have sufficiently treated of in our Exposition of the fifth Commandment. [r] Rom. xiii. 4. [s] Hoadley's Sermons.

The Duty of Princes, both in ſecular and ſpiritual Affairs.

vernors are not to look upon themſelves, as Perſons exalted, by the immediate Direction of Heaven, to an Height above other Mortals, merely to be Arbitrators, at their own Pleaſure, of the Lives and Fortunes of their Fellow-Creatures; but as Perſons called, by the Providence of God, to a difficult and laborious Taſk; not to live in Eaſe and Delicacy, but to watch, Day and Night, for the Good of that Society, in which they preſide; to be diſtinguiſhed indeed from others, by the Enſigns of Greatneſs and Authority, but this only to make them more capable of ſerving the Publick, and conſulting the Intereſt of all their Subjects, in their endeavouring, by all proper Means, to promote the Honour and Intereſt of true Religion, but without uſurping an Authority over other Men's Conſciences; in their taking Care to have the Laws duly executed, and yet that Execution tempered with all the Lenity and Goodneſs, that may be conſiſtent with the publick Safety; in protecting their Subjects againſt all outward Violence, and providing them ſuch Things as are neceſſary for the Relief of their Wants; and in encouraging and promoting Perſons of Merit and Probity, and making them the more peculiar Objects of their Favour and Confidence.

IN the Language of Scripture, [t] Kings and Queens are called the nurſing Fathers, and nurſing Mothers of their People; [*] and the Terms (in what Senſe ſoever we take them, whether for natural Parents, or for ſuch as ſupply their Place in the Care and Tuition of Children, viz. Guardians and Nurſes) do certainly imply a wonderful Truſt repoſed in Princes, and a wonderful Care, Sollicitude, and Tenderneſs required of them, with relation to thoſe that are committed to them. As therefore they are nurſing Fathers, they are to ſecure and promote the temporal Peace and Happineſs of their Subjects; and, accordingly, ſhould think themſelves obliged to look into the Affairs of the Kingdom with their own Eyes, and to ſee that all Magiſtrates under them do their Duty, in their reſpective Stations and Offices; to take care that their Favourites incroach not upon them, or make uſe of the Credit they have with them, for the Oppreſſion of the meaneſt of the People; and to provide, that impartial Juſtice be adminiſtered to all; but Juſtice, (as we ſaid before) that is tempered with Mercy, becauſe they ſhould remember, that [x] their Thrones ſhould be upholden by Mercy. And as they are nurſing Fathers, with a more immediate Regard to the Church of God, their Buſineſs muſt be, to maintain and defend the true Religion; to encourage Piety and Virtue; to oppoſe and diſcountenance all Atheiſm and Infidelity, all Schiſms and Hereſies, and all Vice and Wickedneſs, and Impiety of what Kind ſoever; to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to make all their Subjects good Men, and good Chriſtians; and, in order to this, not only to be exemplary themſelves in Piety and Devotion, in Temperance and Moderation, and all other Virtues; but to take eſpecial Care, that Godlineſs be not defamed, and the Ways of Truth evil ſpoken of, by reaſon either of the ill Lives, or ill Principles of thoſe that encompaſs the Throne: For this was holy David's Reſolution, and the Meaſure he deſigned to follow in his Government, when God had advanced him to the Kingdom of Iſrael: [y] I will walk in my Houſe in a perfect Heart: I will take no wicked Thing in Hand: I hate the Works of the Unfaithful; no ſuch ſhall cleave unto me. A froward Heart ſhall depart from me: I will not know a wicked Perſon; but mine Eyes ſhall look upon ſuch, as are faithful in the Land, and whoſo leadeth a godly Life, he ſhall be my Servant: For [†] take away the Wicked from before the King, (ſays his wiſe Son Solomon) and his Throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed in Righteouſneſs.

TO be ſhort, as ſovereign Power was ordained by God for a publick Good, to guard and defend the Innocent, to ſhelter and relieve the Oppreſſed, to fence and propagate true Religion, and adjuſt and balance private Rights and Intereſts, every Subject has a Claim to be protected by it, (as far as he is able) in his Perſon and legal Rights, in his juſt Liberties and Privileges, and in the Profeſſion and Exerciſe of God's true Religion; and the Prince, who, being inveſted with ſovereign Power for this Purpoſe, either betrays, oppreſſes, or any Way enſlaves his Subjects himſelf, or, out of Negligence or Malice, permits others to do it, is an injurious Invader of their Rights and Properties, and, though not accountable to any human Authority, ſhall one Day anſwer for it at the Tribunal of God.

AND,

[t] Plutarch makes this to be the Character of a King: Ὑπηρετῶν Θεῷ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ σωτηρίαν, God's Miniſter or Servant for the Good and Welfare of Mankind. [u] Iſa. xlix. 23. [*] Sharp's Sermons. 1

[x] Prov. xx. 28. [y] Pſal. ci. 2, 3, &c. [†] Prov. xxv. 5.

AND, on the other Hand, as Kings are God's Vicegerents here on Earth, and reign by his Authority, they have a Right to be obeyed in all Things, wherein they do not interfere with the Commands of God. As they are the Repreſentatives of his Power and Majeſty, they have a Right to be honoured and reverenced by their Subjects: And, as they were ſubſtituted by him to maintain the publick Weal, and to guard the Properties of their People, they have certainly a Right to be aided and aſſiſted by them; [z] for they are God's Miniſters, ſays St Paul, attending continually upon this very Thing: Render therefore to all their Dues; Tribute, to whom Tribute is due; Cuſtom, to whom Cuſtom; Fear, to whom Fear; Honour, to whom Honour. The Duty of Subjects.

[a] SOVEREIGN Princes and States are the chief Inſtruments, which the Providence of God employs in his Adminiſtrations here below: To them is intruſted the Execution of all Laws; and Laws, we know, are the Source of every Advantage, that redounds to Mankind from Society. Even ill Princes cannot help doing a great deal of Good, by preſerving ſome Degree of Order and Government in the World; but when Virtue aſcends the Throne, it diſpenſes Bleſſings, without Number, and without Meaſure. Seeing therefore, that, by the Adminiſtration of our [b] Princes, we enjoy great Quietneſs, and many worthy Deeds are done to this Nation by their Care and Providence; it is certainly our Duty to accept it always, and in all Places, with all Thankfulneſs; and, inſtead of cenſuring and reviling, to eſteem them highly in Love, for their Works ſake. To honour and eſteem their Governors.

CHRISTIAN Charity and Beneficence is certainly a Debt, which we owe to Kings, as well as the meaneſt of their Subjects; but how ſhall we extend our good Offices to thoſe, who move in ſo high a Sphere? How, but by entertaining a ſincere Eſteem for their Perſons, and a good Opinion of their Adminiſtrations; by concealing their Faults, and commending their Virtues; by ſilencing the Clamours, and ſuppreſſing the Jealouſies, which proud, and envious, and ſelf-deſigning Men are too apt to propagate: Theſe, together with our hearty Prayer to God for their Proſperity and Preſervation, are the only Compenſation, or Return, which moſt of us are capable of making them, for their Vigilance and Concern for the publick Safety; the Pains which they take, and the Hazard which they run, to ſecure it.

[c] MOST Men, indeed, by their Condition of Life, are ſet at too great a Diſtance from the Springs of Government, to be rightly inſtructed in Facts and Circumſtances, and much leſs to enter into the Reaſon and Foundation of publick Councils; and therefore for ſuch to cenſure the Conduct of their Superiors, is talking without Knowledge, and judging without Examination. And even thoſe, who are placed in higher Stations, and have a nearer View of the publick Management, cannot but know what a large and weighty Taſk the Concerns of the Publick are; how many Difficulties ariſe, which the wiſeſt Councils cannot foreſee, nor the greateſt Diligence ſurmount: And hereupon they ſhould be ſo far from being the firſt in cenſuring and accuſing the publick Conduct, that they ought, in Reaſon and Equity, to be the Correctors of others, whoſe Ignorance in theſe Matters ſhall, at any Time, betray them into too great Freedom and Severity. Not to cenſure, or revile them,

[d] WHEN St Paul, ſtanding before the Council of the Jews, made a ſolemn Profeſſion of his Innocence, and that he had walked in all good Conſcience before God, even until that Day, the Declaration was thought an inſolent Boaſt, and offended the High-Prieſt to that Degree, that he commanded him to be ſmitten on the Mouth. Provoked at this opprobrious Uſage, the Apoſtle indeed charges him with Hypocriſy, in ſitting there to judge him after the Law, and yet commanding him to be ſmitten contrary to the Law: And though the Groſſneſs of the Affront he received might juſtify the Severity of this Charge, yet, when he is put in Mind, that it was the ſupreme Magiſtrate, of whom he had ſaid this, ſo far was he from vindicating, that he preſently revoked it, and condemned himſelf for it. [d] I wiſt not, Brethren, that he was the High-Prieſt; for it is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the Ruler of thy People. Inſtead of [e] deſpiſing Dominion then, and ſpeaking evil of Dignities; inſtead of [f] reviling the Gods, and curſing the Rulers of the People, what is the Advice that this ſame Apoſtle gives us, equally conducive to our own Happineſs and Intereſt, as well as theirs? I exhort, ſays he, that, firſt of all, Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions, but pray for them.

[z] Rom. xiii. 6, 7.
[a] Biſhop Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I.
[b] Acts xxiv. 2, 3.
[c] Biſhop Gibſon's Sermons.
[d] Acts xxiii. 5, &c.
[e] Jude, ver. 8.
[f] Exod. xxii. 8.

ſions, and giving of Thanks be made for all Men, and eſpecially, [s] for Kings, and all that are in Authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable Life, in all Godlineſs and Honeſty; for this is good and acceptable in the Sight of God our Saviour.

2. Between Paſtor and People.

THAT the Miniſters of God were, at all Times, a diſtinct Order of Men, inveſted with a peculiar Character, and appointed to the Office of preaching the Word, adminiſtering the Sacraments, and ordaining others to ſucceed in their Function, is what we had Occaſion to evince [h] in another Place, and ſhall now conſider them in a farther View, as they are the ſpiritual Fathers of the Flock of Chriſt: For that there is ſuch a Relation between them and their reſpective Congregations, St Paul has more than intimated, when he tells the Corinthians, that [i] though they might have Ten thouſand Inſtructors in Chriſt, yet had they not many Fathers; none, indeed, beſides himſelf; for in Chriſt Jeſus, ſays he, I have begotten you through the Goſpel.

The Paſtor's Duty.

St PAUL, being about to take his Leave of the Church of Epheſus, ſends for the Elders that preſided therein, and gives them this Injunction; [k] Take Heed unto yourſelves, and all the Flock, over which the Holy Ghoſt has made you Overſeers, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own Blood; for I know this, that, after my departing, ſhall grievous Wolves enter in among you, not ſparing the Flock; and alſo of yourſelves ſhall Men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe Things, to draw away Diſciples after them; and therefore watch. In his canonical Epiſtles to Timothy, he abounds with ſuch Exhortations as theſe; [l] Take Heed unto thyſelf, and unto thy Doctrine: Continue in them; for in doing this thou ſhalt both ſave thyſelf, and them that hear thee: [m] Study, therefore, to ſhew thyſelf approved unto God; a Workman that needeth not to be aſhamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth. [n] Preach the Word; be inſtant in Seaſon, and out of Seaſon; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all Long-ſuffering and Doctrine; and [o] be thou an Example of the Believers, in Word, in Converſation, in Charity, in Spirit, in Faith, in Purity; and, to compleat the Duty of God's Clergy, St Peter's Exhortation runs thus; [p] Feed the Flock of God, which is among you, taking the Overſight thereof, not by Conſtraint, but willingly; not for filthy Lucre, but of a ready Mind; neither as being Lords over God's Heritage, but being Examples to the Flock; and when the chief Shepherd ſhall appear, ye ſhall receive a Crown of Glory, that fadeth not away: For [q] they that be wiſe, ſhall ſhine as the Brightneſs of the Firmament; and they that turn many to Righteouſneſs, as the Stars for ever and ever.

THESE are ſome of the Lines, wherein the Spirit of God has drawn the paſtoral Care and Duty, by which he reminds every one, that has undertaken the ſacred Function, that he ought to preach ſuch ſound Doctrine, as may not be reproved, and in a Manner adapted to the Capacities of his Hearers; that he ſhould guard them againſt ſuch Errors in Opinion and Practice, as are contrary to the Principles and Rules of the Goſpel; that he ſhould be very diligent and induſtrious in his Calling; [r] in inſtructing the Ignorant, in reproving the Wicked, in exhorting the Negligent, in ſtrengthening the Weak, in viſiting the Sick, in comforting the Afflicted, in confirming thoſe that ſtand, and reducing thoſe that err; that he ſhould execute this Office freely and willingly, not ſo much for the ſecular Advantage and Emoluments of it, as for the ſpiritual Good and Salvation of thoſe Souls, that are committed to his Truſt; and, above all, that he ſhould be blameleſs himſelf, and, in his own Perſon, ſhew the People an Example of religious Behaviour, recommending them daily to God's Care and Protection, and [s] always, without ceaſing, making Mention of them in his Prayers.

NOR

[s] That the Primitive Chriſtians, in Obedience to this Advice of the Apoſtle, prayed devoutly for their Governors, we may learn, more eſpecially, from Tertullian's Apology, where, in ſeveral Places, he tells us, that they conſtantly prayed for the Emperors, and their Miniſters, the Secular State, and Repoſe of the Realm. Precamur pro omnibus imperatoribus, ſays he, vitam illis prolixam, imperium ſecurum, domum tutam, exercitus fortes, ſenatum fidelem, populum probum, orbem quietum, &c. Cave's Primitive Chriſtianity.

[h] See Pages 748 and 759. [i] 1 Cor. iv. 15. [k] Acts xx. 28, &c. [l] 1 Tim. iv. 16.
[m] 2 Tim. ii. 15. [n] Ibid. iv. 2. [o] 1 Tim. iv. 12. [p] 1 Pet. v. 2, 3. [q] Dan. xii. 3.
[r] Lucas's Sermons, Vol. II. [s] Rom. i. 9.

NOR is the Scripture leſs expreſs in declaring the Rights of the Church, and what the Duties of the People are with regard to their Miniſters. [t] We beſeech you, Brethren, ſays St Paul, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admoniſh you; and to eſteem them very highly in Love for their Works ſake; for [u] they are Ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech us by them, and they pray you, in Chriſt's ſtead, to be reconciled to God. [x] Obey them therefore that have the Rule over you, and ſubmit yourſelves; for they watch for your Souls, as they that muſt give an Account, that they may do it with Joy, and not with Grief; and [y] let him, that is taught in the Word, communicate to him that teacheth, in all good Things; for [z] as they, which wait at the Altar, are Partakers with the Altar; even ſo hath the Lord ordained, that they, which preach the Goſpel, ſhould live by the Goſpel. The People's Duty to him.

THUS Honour and Reſpect, Submiſſion and Obedience, an high Eſteem, and a liberal Maintenance, are what the People owe to their Miniſters, beſides their daily Prayers to God for his Bleſſing, and Succeſs upon their Labours.

St PAUL, writing to the Epheſians, exhorts them to [a] pray always with all Prayer and Supplication in the Spirit, and to watch thereunto with all Perſeverance, and Supplication, as for all Saints in general, ſo more particularly for himſelf; that Utterance might be given unto him, and that he might open his Mouth boldly, to make known the Myſtery of the Goſpel: And what he requeſts for himſelf in this Place, he elſewhere enjoins to be done for every one, that is employed in this ſacred Office: [b] Finally, Brethren, pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may have free Courſe, and that we may be delivered from unreaſonable and wicked Men; for all Men have not Faith. More eſpecially to pray for him.

[b] AND indeed, if ſpiritual Knowledge, whereby we diſcern our Duty, is conveyed by the Word, which God's Miniſters preach, and if ſpiritual Strength to perform our Duty is communicated by thoſe Sacraments, which they adminiſter; if they are appointed by God, as Guides, to direct his People in the right Way to Heaven; as Paſtors, to feed his Flock; as Watchmen, to prevent any Danger, that might ſurprize his Church; and as Stewards, to take Care of thoſe of his Houſhold: If ſo many and ſo valuable Bleſſings, I ſay, are imparted to the People of God by theſe Inſtruments, then will they deſerve the Love of thoſe, to whom their Miniſtry is ſo ſerviceable; and that Love will expreſs itſelf, as in other Acts, ſo particularly in praying to God for thoſe, by whom he beſtows his Mercies and Loving-Kindneſſes unto them. For what Reaſons.

AND, if the Conſideration of the Advantages, which God's People reap from the Miniſtry of their Paſtors, engages them to pray for them out of Love and Gratitude; the Weightineſs of their Charge, the great Difficulty of executing it as they ought, and the great Peril, that attends their not executing it, are no leſs powerful Motives, to engage all good Chriſtians to pray for them out of Pity and Compaſſion. The more eminent their Dignity is, and the more beneficial their Work is, if rightly performed, the greater Danger do thoſe, that aſſume this Dignity, and undertake this Work, expoſe themſelves to, if they are guilty of any Thing, which may bring a Blemiſh upon their ſacred Function, or if they do this Work of the Lord deceitfully. There is ſufficient Reaſon therefore, that they, who are called to this Function, ſhould not only themſelves conſtantly fly unto God, for the Pardon of their Defects, and for a plentiful Supply of his Grace; but ſhould beſeech all good Chriſtians likewiſe to ſtrive together with them in Prayer, that they, [c] who are not ſufficient of themſelves, may, by that Sufficiency, which is of God, be made able Miniſters of the New Teſtament, and, in a due Diſcharge of their Office, ſave both themſelves, and thoſe, that hear them.

[t] 1 Theſſ. v. 12, 13. [u] 2 Cor. v. 20. [x] Heb. xiii. 17. [y] Gal. vi. 6.
[z] 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. [a] Eph. vi. 18, 19. [b] 2 Theſſ. iii. 1, 2. [b] Smalridge's Sermons.
[c] 2 Cor. iii. 5, 6.

3. Between Husband and Wife.

THE Rights and Duties which arise from a married State, may be considered, either, 1. As they belong to the Man and Woman promiscuously; or, 2. As they more peculiarly belong to each of them, considered distinctly.

Duties common to both.

1. SINCE Marriage then is a Conjunction of Man and Woman, after the most strict and indissoluble Manner, and for their mutual Happiness, as long as they both shall live; 'tis most agreeable to the Nature, and absolutely requisite to this End of it, that they should entirely love one another; because it is impossible, that where this Passion is not strong and reciprocal, either the Unity should be preserv'd, or the Happiness attained, which is proposed by both Parties, when they contract to enter into it. [a] And this Reflection may serve to discover to us the imprudent Conduct of those, who, upon Motives of Interest, or any temporal Views whatever, marry without consulting their Inclination, or perhaps, in some Respects, contrary to it, and so involve themselves in Inconveniencies, greater than the Advantages, which they could propose, are capable of balancing. [b] By this Means it comes to pass, that many Times People of great Degree and Rank are made miserable, and more miserable than their Inferiors. Respect is generally had to nothing but Birth and Quality, but Fortune and Alliance, without any Regard to Person, Shape, and Figure; to Virtue, and good Qualities, and other Endowments, proper to engage, and detain the Affections: And hence they become splendidly and exemplarily unhappy, as if it were the Sport of Fortune to level Mankind, and, by some odd Disaster, or their own Folly, to reduce the greatest People to an Equality of Misery and Trouble with their Inferiors.

1. Love.

THOSE therefore, that propose Happiness to themselves in the Conjugal State, must be sure to lay the Foundation thereof in Love; and as their Love is to continue unto their Lives End, must needs be obliged to take such Courses, as are proper to confirm and strengthen it; and to avoid all Manner of Occasions, that may any ways impair, or weaken it. Some of the ancient Christians would allow the Wives to employ more Art and Cost, in decking and adorning themselves, than they did single Women; because they judged it absolutely necessary to the Peace and Happiness of their Lives, to preserve and secure to themselves the Affections of their Husbands: And, in like Manner, Husbands should take more Care than ordinary to continue their Affections to them; and, to this End, should not suffer Error or Mistakes, Miscarriages or light Offences, Infirmities and heedless Indiscretions, to alienate their Hearts, or give them a mean Opinion of their Understanding or Management. They, who cannot bear with many Failings and Defects, and cannot make a great many Allowances, are but badly fitted for Society and Friendship in general, and much less for a Society so constant and continued, as the married State requires; and therefore, if those, that are engaged therein, will not consider with themselves the Imperfections of human Nature; if they will not remember their own Mistakes and Miscarriages; if they will be unreasonable, take Advantages, and make ill-natured Observations and Reflections on the Follies and Weaknesses of their Partners; if they will treasure them up in Memory, and make them Occasions of Distrust, and Topics of Upbraiding, and unseemly Revilings; they will quickly see an End of Peace and Quietness, and find their Love cool and languish.

2. Fidelity.

2. ANOTHER Duty, common to Husband and Wife, is Fidelity, or a just Observation of their Engagements, and solemn Vows; and this is a Duty so essentially necessary to the Marriage-State, that any notorious Breach and Violation of it, not only invalidates the most religious Contracts, and sets the innocent Party at full Liberty, but even dissolves the Marriage-Band itself immediately before God. It is indeed the Ground and Foundation of all Marriage-Promises, and the Supposition, upon which all such Engagements are built; and therefore, when this Supposition fails, when this Ground and Foundation of the Contract and Engagement is removed and overturned, the Contract is itself no longer binding to the innocent and unoffending Party. They may proceed in their Engagements indeed, if they please; but the Transgression greſſion of the other Side ſets them at Liberty, notwithſtanding the moſt ſerious and moſt ſolemn Promiſes.

[a] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [b] Fleetwood's Relative Duties.

AND as Perfidy in this Kind is the Diſſolution of the Band of Matrimony, ſo is it a Crime of ſo deep a Guilt, as can never be attoned in this World, and of ſuch horrible Injuſtice, as can admit of no Reparation or Amendment. And therefore [f] how careful ſhould all married Perſons be, not only to adhere ſtrictly to the Letter of their Marriage-Vow, ſo as never to falſify it by any direct Violation; but to forbear, as much as poſſible, all Advances, and avoid all Occaſions, that may betray them into ſo heinous a Crime! And to this Purpoſe, the beſt and ſafeſt Way will be, to keep their Heart with all Diligence, ſo as to admit no foreign Inclination, or Deſire; but if they cannot always ſhut their Eyes againſt thoſe Objects, which are apt to affect them; if, through Inadvertency or Surprize, it cannot be helped, but that ſome irregular Emotions muſt unavoidably ariſe in their Minds, their next and immediate Care ſhould be, to repel, and, as ſoon as they can, totally to ſuppreſs them; leſt by Degrees they gather Strength, and get the Dominion over them; which has poſſibly been the Caſe of many Perſons, who, in the firſt Eſſays of their Inclination, apprehended nothing dangerous, nor deſigned any Thing criminal.

3. ANOTHER Duty, common to both, is their taking all ſuch prudent Methods in their Behaviour, as may remove all Occaſions of Jealouſy and Diſtruſt. For as all private Advances towards other Perſons, by Way of criminal Addreſs, are highly culpable, and to be avoided with the greateſt Caution; ſo, when they are made in an open or more undiſguiſed Manner, when they break out into Indecencies too notorious to be concealed, even from the offended Party, this is provoking to the laſt Degree, and apt to excite a Paſſion, of all others the moſt difficult to be reſtrained, and called by Solomon, the Rage of a Man, though the other Sex are ſometimes tranſported with it beyond the Nature, the Mildneſs, and Modeſty of their Temper. And therefore all Freedoms and Familiarities with others, that may give an untoward Umbrage, muſt be declined; and all Diſcourſes, that may allure into Sin, rejected with Abhorrence. The Eye, the Tongue, and the Ears muſt be all kept chaſte; the Garb and Apparel be modeſt and unaffected; and the whole Carriage honeſt and inoffenſive, and void of Suſpicion, as well as Blame. Nor are the Occaſions of Jealouſy and Diſtruſt to be mutually avoided only in the tender Point of matrimonial Chaſtity, but even in all others, wherein either their common, or their ſeparate Intereſts (ſo far as they can be ſuppoſed to have any ſeparate) are concerned. They ought, particularly, to concur in all the Methods of Frugality and prudent Management, and, in lower Life, of Labour and Induſtry, towards acquiring a competent Subſiſtence; and though it be ordinarily incumbent on the Huſband to have the Direction of Affairs relating to this End; yet, as Circumſtances ſometimes require, that he ſhould commit it to the Wife, ſo every Neglect in this Caſe, every Extravagance, every unneceſſary Expence, wherein his Concurrence is not implied, is at once a Breach of Truſt, and a Violation of her Conjugal Love: For Love will always conſult the Inclination and Intereſt of thoſe, who are the true Objects of it, and regulate itſelf accordingly.

3. Prudent Behaviour.

4. I MENTION but one Duty more, which is mutually incumbent upon them, viz. that they ſhould promote the Spiritual Good and Edification of one another, by recommending each other to God's Grace and Protection in their Prayers, and by admoniſhing and inſtructing each other in the Principles of Religion. The Buſineſs of Admonition and Inſtruction, by the Superiority of his Sex, ſeems more eſpecially to belong to the Man, but when it ſo happens, (as it ſometimes does) that the Woman is ſuperior in all the Advantages of Knowledge and a good Underſtanding, and that the Man is either guilty of ſuch Errors, or liable to ſuch Dangers, as both deſerve and require Admonition, the Woman is indulged the Liberty of ſpeaking in ſuch a Caſe: But then ſhe muſt intreat, rather than dictate, and inſinuate her Advice, rather than aſſume, on any Occaſion indeed, but eſpecially in the Preſence of others, ſuch magiſterial Airs, as are neither agreeable to the Character of her Sex, nor the Relation, wherein ſhe ſtands, as are both a Breach of Decency, and of that neceſſary Duty, which, diſtinctly conſidered, ſhe owes to her Huſband; and that is Subjection.

Admonition, and Inſtruction.

II. THAT where Nature has given the greateſt Strength and Abilities, [g] where ſhe has made the Body and the Mind fitteſt to undergo the Labours and Toils, that are

The Duty peculiar to the Wife, viz. Obedience.

[f] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

[g] Fleetwood's Relative Duties.

are neceſſary to the Being and Well-being of the World, there ſhe has deſigned the Superiority, can hardly be conteſted: That Women, in this Reſpect, are inferior to Men, and how neceſſary ſoever in domeſtick Affairs, with all the Uſe and Education imaginable, can never be qualified for the great Buſineſſes of Trade and Merchandize, of making Wars abroad, and executing Juſtice at home, is demonſtrably certain; and therefore, ſince Nature has made Men neceſſary for thoſe Offices, ſhe has certainly made them ſuperior to ſuch as are not able to perform them: Becauſe it muſt be admitted, that where People are, in other Reſpects, equal, Strength of Body and Capacity of Mind will undoubtedly make them ſuperior. And agreeable to this Ordination have been the Cuſtoms and Uſages of all Nations, which, in ſome Places, have done a manifeſt Injury to the Sex, by placing them in a Condition not much above Slaves and menial Servants; and even in Nations that have been accounted the moſt civilized, to provide for the Solace of Mankind, the Continuance of the World, and the Care of domeſtick Affairs, has been thought the chief End of their Creation.

Proved from Reaſon,

And Scripture. WITH good Reaſon therefore might St Paul order all Wives [h] to ſubmit themſelves unto their own Huſbands, as unto the Lord; becauſe the Huſband is the Head of the Wife, even as Chriſt is the Head of the Church: As therefore the Church is ſubject unto Chriſt, ſo let the Wives be to their own Huſbands in every Thing. The Apoſtle means in every Thing, that is innocent and lawful; for it is certain, that a Wife owes no Subjection to her Huſband againſt the Laws, either of God or Man. [i] Religion and good Morals claim the firſt Place in her Obedience; and though I think the Laws, or rather Cuſtoms of the Land, are very tender to Women, offending in the Company of their Huſbands, as preſuming them under ſome Kind of Conſtraint; yet Religion has no ſuch Conſideration, but includes them all under Sin, who commit any ſinful Actions. Where the Huſband's Commands therefore are evidently contrary to any natural or revealed Law of God, they muſt be rejected with Abhorrence; where his Commands are evidently unreaſonable and indiſcreet, unuſual and unheard-of, unbecoming the Age, the Credit, the Quality, and Condition of the Wife, they may be paſſed by and omitted, rather than deſpiſed: But where his Commands have nothing of this Nature in them, and relate only to ſuch Matters, as are common and indifferent, her Diſobedience will be faulty, if ſo be that Reaſon and Diſcretion, allow'd-of Cuſtom, Decency, and good Fame will not plead her Excuſe; for [k] I ſuffer not, ſays St Paul, a Woman (whoſe greateſt [l] Ornament is that of a meek and quiet Spirit) to uſurp Authority over the Man; but to be in Silence, with all Subjection: And for this he ſubjoins theſe Reaſons; for Adam was firſt formed, then Eve; and Adam was not [firſt] deceived, but the Woman, being deceived, was [firſt] in the Tranſgreſſion; where he plainly intimates, that her being laſt in the Creation, and firſt in the Tranſgreſſion, made her altogether uncapable of ruling; ſince he, that was firſt formed, muſt naturally have a Right of Dominion over all, that deſcended from him; and ſhe, that tranſgreſſed firſt, when left to her own Conduct, could never be preſumed afterwards qualified for a State of Independence; and therefore we find it made a Part of the Sentence for her Tranſgreſſion, that [m] her Deſire ſhould be towards her Huſband; i. e. "That ſhe ſhould "not be Miſtreſs of herſelf, nor have any Deſire ſatisfied, but what was approved of "by her Huſband; that ſhe ſhould be wholly under his Power and Tutelage; and "though he ſhould command her many Things that were contrary to her Will and "Good-liking, yet ſhould ſhe not be left at her Diſcretion, whether ſhe would "obey." For, to make this Subjection a Curſe to her, and her Poſterity, it muſt needs be ſuppoſed to relate to Things difficult and unacceptable; ſuch as the fooliſh, ſurly, and imperious Humours of ſome Huſbands are ſometimes known to impoſe upon their Wives.

The Duty peculiar to the Huſband, viz. ruling with Lenity,

BUT though the Puniſhment of the one be, in ſome Meaſure, the Privilege of the other Sex; though the Wife, both by the Order of Things, and the Declarations of God's Will, be obliged to obey; yet ought not the Huſband to employ his Authority after an arbitrary and tyrannical Manner, but in a Way agreeable to the Nature and Ends of the Conjugal State, which conſiders the Wife as allied to him by the ſtrongeſt Ties of Love, Friendſhip, and common Intereſt. Well therefore does St Paul adviſe all Huſbands, [n] not to be bitter againſt their Wives: Where the Phraſe proved from Scripture.

ſeems

[h] Eph. v. 22, &c. [i] Fleetwood's Relative Duties. [k] 1 Tim. ii. 12. [l] 1 Pet. iii. 4.
[m] Gen. iii. 16. [n] Col. iii. 19.

ſeems to be taken from the Offence and Diſguſt, which bitter Things give, when taſted, and not liked; and the Advice is, —— that Huſbands ſhould not, by a peeviſh and moroſe, by a churliſh and ill-natured Carriage, make themſelves as uneaſy and ungrateful to their Wives, as bitter Things are diſtaſteful to the Palate; or that they ſhould not be provoked to Anger and Averſion, to unkind Words or Actions, by any Failings and Imperfections of their Wives, as the Palate and Stomach are provoked to Diſguſt or Loathing, by the Taſte of any Thing very bitter: In a Word, that they ſhould not uſe, either in Deed or Word, any Unkindneſs or Severity towards them.

Bitterneſs of Language cutting to a Wife.

[o] THERE is a Bitterneſs of Language, that every one underſtands, and Words, that wound to the quick: But then, that which uſually gives them their Edge, is the Conſideration of the Perſon that ſpeaks them, and the Relation he ſtands in to us. The Words of a Stranger, though never ſo ſevere, affect us but little; the Words of an Enemy, as proceeding from Malice, make no deep Impreſſion: But the hard Words of Friends and Neighbours, of Acquaintance and Relations, occaſion us Grief and great Concern. The ill Uſage we receive from indifferent Perſons ſtirs us to Anger and Indignation indeed, but 'tis againſt them only; whereas the ill Uſage we receive at the Hands of thoſe we love, occaſions Pain and Uneaſineſs within. 'Tis the Defeat of our Expectation and Deſire, that hurts us moſt on theſe Occaſions: We know we love, and we would be beloved; we try to oblige, and we would again be obliged in our Turn; we favour and eſteem them, and would, in like Manner, be favoured and eſteemed by them: But, failing of theſe Returns, which we expected and deſired, we are the more afflicted and diſconſolate. 'Tis upon this Account, that harſh Words and ill Uſage become ſo grievous to near Relations, becauſe they are ſo little looked for and expected. The Mind is full of other Hopes, and ſurprized to find them ſo deceived; and therefore, when, inſtead of Gentleneſs and Patience, of Affability and Condeſcenſion, and every Thing, that can proceed from Conſideration and Good-nature, the Wife generally meets with Moroſeneſs and Peeviſhneſs, with Clamour and Impatience, with Revilings and ungenerous Upbraidings; this, to ſoft and tender Diſpoſitions, is a cruel Uſage, that ſits heavy on the Mind, and wounds the Heart moſt ſenſibly.

Reaſons for treating her kindly.

WELL therefore does the Apoſtle adviſe the Huſband, that, [p] dwelling with his Wife according to Knowledge, he ſhould give Honour unto her, as unto the weaker Veſſel, i. e. ſhould treat her with all Lenity and Softneſs, even as Veſſels which are of a finer, but weaker Contexture, are to be handled with greater Caution and Tenderneſs. And indeed, whoever gives himſelf Time to conſider, to what extraordinary Difficulties and Sufferings, God, by his Order and Appointment, has moſt unavoidably ſubjected and expoſed the Women above Men, as well by their own natural Frame and Make, as by a great many ſad, but uſual Accidents; will ſee himſelf obliged, in common Pity, to deal gently with them, to ſuſtain them under their Infirmities, and, by Patience and Forbearance, to endeavour to make their Burthen lighter. And if he conſiders farther, notwithſtanding theſe Diſadvantages, of what ſingular Uſe and Benefit a good and prudent Companion, in all the Viciſſitudes of Life is; what Solace in Health, what Comfort in Sickneſs, what Help in Diſtreſs, what Security in Trouble is occaſioned by her Means; and, above all, what Labour and Hardſhips, what Watchings and Diſquietudes, as well as many humbling Offices, ſhe is content to bear, with all the Chearfulneſs and Delight imaginable, in bringing up the Children, that are the Delight of his Eyes, and the Strength of his Old-age; he that conſiders this, I ſay, inſtead of taking Pleaſure in oppoſing and inſulting the Wife of his Boſom, will find himſelf bound, in Gratitude, and by the mutual Pledges of their Love, [q] to nouriſh and cheriſh her, even as his own Fleſh.

4. Between Maſter and Servant.

AS we are many Members, ſays St Paul, [r] in one Body, and all Members have not the ſame Office, but ſome are deſigned for nobler, and others for meaner Uſes, and yet all conſpire towards the Preſervation, and more commodious Support of the whole; ſo God hath ordained, that, in the civil or political Body, there ſhould be ſuch a Diverſity of States and Conditions, that, each ſupplying the Neceſſities of the other, there might, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, [s] be no Schiſm in the Body, but that the Members might have the ſame Care one for another. This is the true Reaſon, according to God's own Appointment, of the different Conditions of Maſters and Servants: And to give the former Precedence in this Matter, we ſhall, I. Conſider what in Juſtice is required of them: And then, II. What in Return may reaſonably be expected from the latter.

[o] Fleetwood's Relative Duties. [p] 1 Pet. iii. 7. [q] Eph. v. 29. [r] Rom. xii. 4.

The Duty of Maſters to Servants.

I. St Paul, treating of the Relations, wherein we ſtand towards one another, has compriſed the whole Duty of Maſters to their Servants in this ſhort Sentence; [t] Maſters, give unto your Servants that which is juſt and equal, knowing, that ye alſo have a Maſter in Heaven; [u] for though juſt and equal Terms be of near Affinity, yet may they be conſidered, as having a different Signification, and ſo, to give that, which is juſt to a Servant, is to deal with him according to the Contract and Agreement that is between us; to give him what we have actually covenanted for, and what; in Point of Law, he may demand: But to give him what is equal, is to deal fairly, honeſtly, and kindly with him; and to give him what is his Due in Reaſon and Conſcience, although we have not formally contracted with him. So that there is this Diſtinction to be made between Juſtice and Equity, that Juſtice makes our Contracts, and Equity our Conſciences the Meaſures of our Dealings with others. And accordingly, Juſtice.

1. IN Point of Juſtice, every Maſter is obliged to ſtand to his Agreement, and give his Servants what they have contracted for, whether it be Inſtruction, or Wages. Inſtruction is the Thing, for which Apprentices chiefly contract; for which they give their Money, their Time, and Labour; and therefore, (whether it be through Deſign or Negligence) to conceal from them that Skill, which properly belongs to them, and not to let them into that full Knowledge of their Buſineſs, according to the Meaſure of their Underſtanding and Capacity, is a Piece of great Injuſtice, and the Maſter, who does this, not only breaks his Covenant, and falſifies his Truſt, but deceives his Servant of what he expected, and defrauds him of the Time and Money, that he pledged in his Hand for that Purpoſe. Wages are Things, for which common Labourers and menial Servants do contract, and for which they pay down their Time and Labour; and therefore a Maſter may as well agree for Goods with any Cuſtomer, receive the Price beforehand, and yet retain the Goods withal, as take his Servant's Time and Labour firſt, and then either deny, or retard, or curtail the Payment of his appointed Wages. 'Tis a wiſe Proviſion therefore, which the Jewiſh Law has made; * Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired Servant, that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy Brethren, or of thy Strangers, that are in the Land, within thy Gates. At his Day thou ſhalt give him his Hire, neither ſhall the Sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and ſetteth his Heart upon it; leſt he cry againſt thee to the Lord, and it be Sin unto thee: For [x] behold, ſays St James, the Hire of the Labourers, who have reaped down your Fields, which is of you kept back by Fraud, crieth, and their Cries have entered into the Ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth; who has himſelf expreſſly threatened, that [y] he will be a ſwift Witneſs againſt thoſe, that [z] uſe their Neighbour's Service for nought, and oppreſs the Hireling in his Wages, Equity.

2. IN Point of Equity, every Maſter is obliged to deal fairly, honeſtly, and kindly with his Servants; and to give them that, which is their Due in Reaſon and Conſcience, although they have not formally contracted for it: And to this Purpoſe he is to treat them with Humanity and Good-nature, in order to make their Lives as eaſy, as he can conſiſtently with the Performance of their Duty. All arbitrary and tyrannical Power over them he is to diſclaim, and never put them upon any Hardſhips but what are agreeable to the Conditions of their Service. All his Commands muſt be mercifully fitted to their Strength and Capacity; all his Reproofs expreſſed without Rage or Paſſion, without Contumely or Inſult; all his Corrections (if there be Neceſſity for any) inflicted with Tenderneſs and Compaſſion; and tho' he has a Right to their whole Time and Labour, yet muſt not the Taſks he ſets them be ſo immoderate, as to allow them no competent Space for Reſt and Intermiſſion, for Attendance on God's Worſhip, and, at ſome proper Seaſons, for innocent Sports and Recreation; that they may, for that Time, forget the Infelicity of their low Condition, and return to their Labour with more Alacrity.

ADD

[s] 1 Cor. xii. 25. [t] Col. iv. 1. [u] Fleetwood's Relative Duties. * Deut. xxiv. 14.
[x] James v. 4. [y] Mal. iii. 5. [z] Jer. xxii. 13.

ADD to this, that he is to give them good Advice; ſet them a good Example; afford them Opportunities of ſerving God; inſtruct them in the Rules of Honeſty and Juſtice, Truth and Faithfulneſs; excite them to Induſtry and Carefulneſs, and encourage their Diligence ſometimes with an uncovenanted Reward. Nor muſt this be his Conduct to them in their Health only; but even in their Sickneſs, he is to take Care that they want nothing, that is fitting for their Condition, and in their Old-age, that ſome competent Proviſion be made for their comfortable Support: [a] For I can hardly think, in Point of Equity, that long and faithful Services, eſpecially in great and opulent Families, ought to be put off with the bare Payment of ſtipulated Wages, and not ſome additional Bounty beſtowed, that may contribute to the Eaſe of an aged Servant, and to bring his grey Hairs with Quiet to the Grave.

THESE are ſome of the chief Duties, which every Maſter owes to his Servants: And, in order to engage the Performance of them, let him conſider, that he is Maſter of a Man of the ſame Kind with himſelf, who has thereupon a Right to be treated with Humanity, which if he does not, he is no better than a Tyrant: That he is Maſter of a Man of the ſame Civil Society, and has therefore a Right to Equity and Juſtice, which if he does him not, he is an Oppreſſor: That he is Maſter of a Man, who is of the ſame Religion, and has thereupon a Right to be treated religiouſly, which if he neglects to do, he hath denied the Faith, and is worſe than an Infidel: And laſtly, that he is the Maſter of a Man, who is his Fellow-Servant; for they have both one common [b] Maſter in Heaven, with whom there is no Reſpect of Perſons; [c] to whom the Bond and Free are both alike; to whom the meaneſt Servant is as dear as the moſt honourable Maſter; by whom all ſhall be judged alike, and with the ſame Impartiality; and by whom the unjuſt and cruel Maſter, no leſs than the falſe and diſobedient Servant, ſhall be puniſhed with the utmoſt Severity. Wherefore remember, that thou haſt a Maſter in Heaven, who, while he was on Earth, took on him the Form of a Servant, not only to give us an Example of his great Humility and Condeſcenſion, but to ſanctify all Conditions, and to ſhew the World, that God looks not with Man's Eyes; that he regards not Birth and Fortune, Quality and Title; but that the meaneſt People in the World are acceptable to him, if they obey his Laws, and do his Will: That it is Virtue and Religion only, which recommend Men to his Favour, of which the pooreſt Servants in the World are full as capable, as the moſt rich and mighty Maſters: And therefore, as he has made them Partakers of the ſame Grace here, and capable of the ſame Glory hereafter, ſo he commands them to treat them with all the Mercy and Humanity, that their Condition requires; and therefore, [d] if thy Brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, thou ſhalt not rule over him with Rigour, but ſhalt fear thy God.

Motives and Inducements to them.

II. THE ſame Apoſtle, that acquaints Maſters with their Duty, is very exact and copious, in what, on the other Hand, is required of Servants. [e] Let as many Servants, ſays he, as are under the Yoke, count their own Maſters worthy of all Honour, that the Name of God and his Doctrine be not blaſphemed; and let them [f] be obedient to their Maſters, and pleaſe them well in all Things, not anſwering again; neither [g] with Eye-ſervice, as Men-pleaſers, but in Singleneſs of Heart, fearing God, and as the Servants of Chriſt, doing every Thing heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto Men: And this they muſt do, [h] not only for the Good and Gentle, but alſo for the Froward; becauſe this is Praiſe-worthy, if a Man, for Conſcience toward God, endure Grief, ſuffering wrongfully. From whence it appears, that Honour and Reverence to their Maſter's Perſon, expreſſed by all the external Signs of Words and Actions; Obedience to all his lawful Commands, without diſputing; Submiſſion to his juſt Reproofs and Corrections, without murmuring; Faithfulneſs in Truſt, without purloining or embezzeling; Diligence in Buſineſs, without loitering or eye-ſerving; a cautious Fear of offending; an earneſt Deſire of pleaſing; and a general Conformity to what they know are the ſecret, as well as declared Intimations of their Maſter's Will, are the great Lines and Characters of every Servant's Duty: And for their Comfort and Encouragement herein,

The Duty of Servants to their Maſters.

LET

[a] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [b] Eph. vi. 9. [c] Fleetwood's Relative Duties.
[d] Lev. xxv. 39, 43. [e] 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2. [f] Tit. ii. 9. [g] Col. iii. 22.
[h] 1 Pet. ii. 18, 19.

Encouragements to it.

LET it be conſidered, that how mean and miſerable ſoever a State of Servitude may be deemed, yet there are ſome Ingredients in it, that make it eaſy, if not deſirable. [l] Servants, indeed, may have more of the Labours of Life, but then they have leſs of the Cares, than other People. Their Concern is only in one Matter, to do the Work, that lies before them; whereas others have a World of Things to think on. Their Maſters they have only to pleaſe; but their Maſters, perhaps, have all they deal with, to court and humour. Themſelves, for the moſt part, are all they have to provide for; but their Maſters have Wives, Children, and Relations to maintain at a great Expence. Whatever publick Miſchiefs, whatever Changes of Government, whatever Scarcity or Dearneſs happen, they find but little Alteration: They pay no Rates or Taxes, loſe no gainful Employments, ſuffer nothing by the Malice or Inſolence of Parties, and, in a Word, feel leſs Hardſhips and Misfortunes than their very Maſters: And yet they have their ſtately Houſes and Gardens to live and walk in, their fragrant Flowers and rich Furniture to pleaſe their Smell and Sight, without ever conſidering what they coſt.

THESE are Conveniencies that generally attend Servants of the loweſt Condition: But then it muſt be conſidered, that an honeſt and faithful Diſcharge of their Duty will gain them the Favour and Eſteem of all People; will make their Service uſeful and acceptable, and, conſequently, very eaſy and delightful to themſelves; will raiſe them, very probably, above the Condition they were born to, and lay a good Foundation for their own Self-ſubſiſtence, when once an Occaſion ſhall offer. But, however this happen, they are to conſider, that there is an unſpeakable Pleaſure and Satisfaction in having done their Duty, and that the Reflections of a good Conſcience are a continued Feaſt; that they ſerve not Men only, but God, who ſees all their Diligence and Induſtry, all their Faithfulneſs and Honeſty, though removed from the Eye of their earthly Maſter, and will reward them openly; that the Time is coming, when [k] of the Lord they ſhall receive the Reward of the Inheritance; and, from being Servants, ſhall be made happy in the glorious Liberty of the Sons of God: And then, whatever Hardſhips or Uneaſineſs they undergo, whatever Want of Neceſſaries and Conveniencies they ſuffer, whatever Severities or cruel Inflictions they endure here, by the undue Rigour of their Maſters or Superiors, they are confident, that there will be an ample Amends made them by that God, who judgeth righteouſly, and with whom there is no Reſpect of Perſons.

5. Between Friend and Friend.

The Neceſſity and Benefit of Friendſhip.

OF all the Relations, wherein we ſtand towards one another, there is none more ſtrict and binding, none more neceſſary and beneficial, than that of Friendſhip. [l] For human Nature is imperfect; it has not Fund enough to furniſh out a ſolitary Life; and the moſt delicious Place, barred from all Commerce and Society, would be inſupportable, and make a Man run mad with his own Happineſs. Beſides, there are ſo many adverſe Accidents attending us, that, without the Communion of Friendſhip, Virtue itſelf is not able to accompliſh its End; becauſe the beſt good Man, on ſeveral Occaſions, often wants an Aſſiſtant to direct his Judgment, and quicken his Induſtry, and fortify his Spirits. [m] A Brother, indeed, as the wiſe Man obſerves, was born for Adverſity, but [n] there is a Friend, that ſticketh cloſer than a Brother; and therefore he that has found this precious Treaſure, has laid up a good Foundation againſt the Day of Trouble; [o] becauſe every true and real Friendſhip will be an Alloy to his Sorrows, an Eaſe to his Paſſions, a Sanctuary to his Calamities, a Relief of his Oppreſſions, a Repoſitory of his Secrets, a Counſellor of his Doubts, and an Advocate for his Intereſt, both with God and Man. And yet, as neceſſary and beneficial as this Relation is in all Conditions of Life, there is no one Thing, wherein we miſtake ourſelves more. [p] Men uſually call them their Friends, with whom they have an Intimacy, tho' that Intimacy, perhaps, is nothing elſe, but an Union and Combination in Sin. The Drunkard, for Inſtance, thinks him his Friend, who will ſwallow Wine in Bowls, and keep him Company in his Debauches;

A common Miſtake herein.

[l] Fleetwood's Relative Duties. [k] Col. iii. 24. [l] Collier's Eſſays. [m] Prov. xvii. 17. [n] Ibid. xviii. 24. [o] Scott's Chriſtian Life. [p] The Whole Duty of Man.

bauches; the proud Man, him his Friend, who will blow up the Bladder, and indulge his Vanity with fulſome Flattery; and the deceitful Man, him his Friend, that will aid and aſſiſt him in carrying on his Schemes of Fraud and Diſhoneſty: But, alas! this is ſo far from being Friendſhip, that it deſerves a very different Appellation, and is, indeed, too near a Reſemblance of the Practice of the Prince of Darkneſs, who is a Worker together with Mens Paſſions, for the Deſtruction of their Souls. A true Friend loves his Friend ſo, that he is very zealous for his Good; and certainly he that is really ſo, will never be the Inſtrument of bringing him into the greateſt Evil. How far ſoever then [q] a Reſemblance in Humour or Opinion, a Fancy for the ſame Buſineſs or Diverſion, may, on ſome Occaſions, be a Ground of Affection; yet [r] this is generally allowed, both by Moraliſts and Divines, that Virtue is the only proper Foundation of Friendſhip, and [s] that none, but good Men, are capable of it: And, among theſe, it may not improperly be defined to be, "An "induſtrious Purſuit of our Friend's real Advantages, or obliging ourſelves to do "unto him all the good Offices, that our Fidelity and Aſſiſtance, our Advice and "Admonition, our Candour and Conſtancy, can effect."

The Offices of it.

1. FRIENDSHIP, both in the Latin and Greek Languages, takes its Denomination from Love: And as Love is every-where the ſame, ſo is there no Principle more faithful, and what leſs conſults the Arts of Diſſimulation. A Friend therefore will purſue the Advantages of thoſe he truly loves, as if they were his own; becauſe there will be no great Difference between the Power of Self-love, and the Love of a Perſon, whom, by the Laws of Friendſhip, he is bound to love as well as himſelf. From this Principle he eſpouſes his Intereſt, whether the Opportunities of doing him Service be known to him, or not: He maintains his Honour and Right, though invaded by the moſt potent Adverſary, or ſtruck at by the moſt clandeſtine Malice. And as he ſuffers none, he can hinder, to injure his Character or Fortune; ſo he is eſpecially careful himſelf, to avoid all indecent Familiarities in Company, or mercenary Incroachments upon his good Nature, as very well knowing, that [t] Friendſhip, tho' it be not nice and exceptious, yet muſt not be coarſely treated, and [u] that the Neglect of Modeſty and good Manners therein is the Want of its greateſt Ornament. Above all, he is continually upon his Guard, to keep the Secrets, which his Friend has repoſed in his Breaſt, with the moſt ſacred Taciturnity; becauſe a Diſcovery of theſe, in the Opinion of the wiſe Son of Syrach, who well underſtood the Laws and Punctualities of Friendſhip, is an Offence, of all others, the moſt provoking, and the moſt unpardonable. For * whoſo diſcovereth Secrets, loſeth his Credit, and ſhall never find a Friend to his Mind. Love thy Friend, and be faithful to him; but if thou bewrayeſt his Secrets, follow no more after him: For as one letteth a Bird out of his Hand, ſo haſt thou let thy Friend go, and ſhalt not get him again. Follow after him no more; for he is too far off: He is as a Roe, eſcaped out of the Snare. As for a Wound, it may be bound up, and after reviling there may be a Reconciliation; but he, that bewrayeth Secrets, is without Hope.

Fidelity.

2. How far the Meaſure of mutual Aſſiſtance ought to extend among Friends, is not ſo eaſy a Matter, in each Particular, to determine; but this we may ſay, in general, that, as far as Opportunity, Diſcretion, and former Pre-engagements will give us Leave, we may be allowed to go; and that to break upon the Score of Danger or Expence is narrow-ſpirited; provided the Aſſiſtance may be given, without Ruin to ourſelves, or Prejudice to a third Perſon, without Breach of Honour, or Violation of Conſcience. [x] Where the Thing is unlawful, we muſt neither aſk, nor comply. All Importunities againſt Juſtice are feveriſh Deſires, and muſt not be gratified. He that would engage another in an unwarrantable Action, takes him for an ill Perſon, and, as the Motion is an Affront, ought to be renounced for the Injury of his Opinion. But where this is not the Caſe, we ought to treat our Friend, as far as Prudence and Juſtice will permit, with all the Frankneſs and Generoſity imaginable; to counſel him, when he wants Advice; to cheer him, when he wants Comfort; to give unto him, when he wants Relief; and, even with ſome Hazard to ourſelves, to reſcue him, when he is in Danger: And, in doing of this, [y] we ſhould conſider his Occaſions, and prevent his Deſires, and ſcarce give him Time to think, that he wanted our Assistance; because a Forwardness to oblige is a great Grace upon our Kindness, and that which doubles the intrinsick Worth of it.

Aſſiſtance.

[q] Collier's Eſſays. [r] Nam cum conciliatrix amicitiæ virtutis opinio fuerit, difficile eſt amicitiam manere, ſi à virtute defeceris. Tull. de Amic. [s] Ita fit verum iſtud, quod initio dixi, amicitiam niſi inter bonos eſſe non poſſe. Tull. ibid. [t] Collier, ibid. [u] Maximum ornamentum amicitiæ tollit, qui ex ea tollit verecundiam. Tull. ibid. * Ecclus. xxvii. 16, &c. [x] Hæc igitur lex in amicitia ſanciatur, ut neque rogemus res turpes, nec faciamus rogati. Tull. ibid. [y] Collier, ibid.

Advice. 3. IT is the Observation of the wise King of Israel, Woe to him, that is alone! For if he falleth, he hath not another to help him up: And this Observation is verified upon none so much, as upon him that is destitute of Friends, [a] who, when he is under a Perplexity of Affairs, where a Determination is dubious, and yet of uncommon Consequence, cannot fetch in Aid from another Person, whose Judgment may be greater than his own, and whose Concern he is sure is no less. Every Man, in his own Affairs, is found to be less cautious, than a prudent Stander-by: He is generally too eagerly engaged, to make just Remarks upon the Progress and Probability of Things; [a] and, in such a Case, nothing is so proper as a judicious Friend, to temper the Spirits, and moderate the Pursuit; to give the Signal for Action, to press the Advantage, and strike in the critical Minute. Foreign Intelligence may have a Spy in it; and therefore should be cautiously received; Strangers (I call all such, except Friends) may be designing in their Advice, or, if they be sincere, by mistaking the Case, they may give wrong Measures; but, now, an old Friend has the whole Scheme in his Head. He knows the Constitution, the Disease, the Strength and the Humour of him, he assists; what he can do, and what he can bear; and therefore none so proper as he to prescribe; to direct the Enterprize, and secure the main Chance.

Admonition, 4. BUT, among all the Offices of Friendship, [b] there is none that comes up to our aiding and assisting the Soul of our Friend, and endeavouring to advance his spiritual State, by Exhortations and Encouragements to all Virtue, by earnest and vehement Dissuasions from all Sin, and especially by kind and gentle Reproofs, where there is Reason to presume an Offence has been committed. This is so peculiarly the Duty of a Friend, that there is none besides so duly qualified for it. The Reproofs of a Relation may be thought to proceed from an Affectation of Superiority; of an Enemy, from a Spirit of Malice; and of an indifferent Person, from Pride or Impertinence, and so be slighted: But when they come from one, who loves us as his own Soul, and come armed with all the tender Concern, that an unfeigned Affection is known to dictate, they must of Course take Effect, and become irresistible. Men, like false Glasses, generally represent their Complexion better than Nature has made it: They have no great Inclination to be prying into their own Deformities, and have such Unwillingness to hear of their Faults, that whoever undertakes the Work, had Need have a strong Prepossession in his Favour; and therefore the Friend, that alone is qualified for it, acts the Part of a Flatterer, and betrays the Offender into Security, when he sees him commit Things worthy of Blame, and yet silently passes them by: [a] Open Reproof, says the wise Man, is better than such secret Love; for faithful are the Wounds of a Friend, but the Kisses of an Enemy are deceitful.

must be candid, BUT tho' we are required to admonish our Friend, when we see him do amiss, yet the Manner, in which we are to do it, will require our utmost Care, and shew our Skill and Address, as well as our Love and Esteem for him. A Word fitly spoken, says Solomon, is like Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver: As an Ear-Ring of Gold, and an Ornament of fine Gold, so is a wise Reprover upon an obedient Ear: [a] What Gracefulness there is in Colours judiciously chosen, and rightly put together; what Agreeableness there is in the most valuable Metals, so appositely placed, as to add to each other's Lustre; what Beauty arises from the richest and choicest Ornaments; such is the Gracefulness, such is the Excellency, such the Beauty of a wise Reproof, fitted to the Occasion of it, to the Person and Character of those, that reprove, and of those, that are reproved: And this, in the Case of Friends, ought certainly to be managed with all Candour and Kindness, with all Meekness and Humility, without any Signs of Bitterness, any Words of Reproach, or Airs of Superiority.

and private. BUT tho' we are allowed, in this Manner, to reprove the Faults of our Friend, yet are we to remember, that this is to be done in private: And that no Care must be be wanting, on our Parts, to conceal them from the Knowledge of others. And believe me, it is a great and noble Thing, to cover the Blemiſhes, and excuſe the Failings of a Friend; to draw a Curtain before his Stains, and to diſplay his Perfections; to bury his Weakneſs in Silence, and proclaim his Virtues upon the Houſe-Top. This, as [e] one expreſſes it, is an Imitation of the Charities of Heaven, which, when the Creature lies proſtrate in the Weakneſs of Sleep, ſpreads the Covering of Night and Darkneſs over it, to conceal it in that Condition: But as ſoon as our Spirits are refreſhed, and Nature returns to its Morning Vigour, God then bids the Sun riſe, and the Day ſhine upon us, both to advance and ſhew our Activity.

[a] South's Sermons, Vol. II. [a] Collier's Essays. [b] The Whole Duty of Man. [c] Prov. xxvii. 5, 6. Molesta veritas, si quidem ex eâ nascitur odium, quod est venenum amicitiæ: Sed obsequium multo molestius, quod peccatis indulgens, præcipitem amicum ferri sinit. Tull. de Amic. [a] Smalridge's Sermons.

THESE are ſome of the Duties or approved Qualities of Friendſhip, viz. to be faithful in our Profeſſions, zealous in our Services, prudent in our Advices, and gentle in our Reproofs to our Friend; to be dumb to his Secrets, ſilent to his Faults, and full of the Commendations of his Virtues: And where theſe are mutually practiſed, there is leſs Danger of the remaining Duty, which is Conſtancy, or ſuch a Stability and Firmneſs of Friendſhip, as overlooks and paſſes by all thoſe leſſer Failures of Kindneſs and Reſpect, that, through Frailties incident to human Nature, a Man may be ſometimes guilty of, and yet ſtill retain the ſame habitual Good-will, and prevailing Propenſity of Mind to his Friend, that he had before. Alas! there is no expecting the Temper of Paradiſe from poſt-diluvian Mortals: The beſt of People cannot be always in the ſame Temper, always awake and entertaining. The Accidents of Life, the Indiſpoſitions of Health, the Imperfections of Reaſon muſt be allowed for, nor muſt every ambiguous Expreſſion, or every little Chagrin, or Start of Paſſion be thought a ſufficient Cauſe of Diſunion. 'Ointment and Perfume, ſays the wiſe Man, rejoice the Heart; ſo does the Sweetneſs of a Man's Friend: Whereupon it follows, thine own Friend, and thy Father's Friend, forſake not: To part with a tried Friend, and one that is grown old, as it were, in the Service of the Family, beſides the Injuſtice done him, is both unreaſonable Levity, ſuch as argues a Mind governed by Caprice only; and egregious Folly, ſuch as prodigally caſts away one of the greateſt Bleſſings of human Life: For a faithful Friend is a ſtrong Defence; and he, that hath found ſuch an one, hath found a Treaſure. And as nothing can countervail a faithful Friend; ſo, when we have once entered into that Relation, I know of nothing that ſhould diſſolve it, but either downright Malevolence, or incorrigible Vice. Theſe indeed ſtrike at the Fundamentals, and make a Correſpondence impracticable: But even when the Caſe comes to this unhappy Paſs, there is ſtill a Decency in the Manner of our Diſunion, and Prudence ſeems to direct, that we ſhould draw off by Degrees, rather than come to an open Rupture.

Conſtancy.

FROM what has been ſaid on this Subject, it ſeems plainly to follow, that every one is not qualified to enter into the Relation of Friendſhip, wherein there is Occaſion for Largeneſs of Mind, and Agreeableneſs of Temper; for Prudence of Behaviour, for Courage and Conſtancy, for Freedom from Paſſion and Self-conceit. A Man, that is fit to make a Friend of, muſt have Conduct to manage the Engagement, and Reſolution to maintain it: He muſt uſe Freedom, without Roughneſs; and oblige, without Deſign. Cowardice will betray Friendſhip, and Covetouſneſs will ſtarve it: Folly will be nauſeous; Paſſion is apt to ruffle; and Pride will fly out into Contumely and Neglect: And therefore to conclude with the Wiſdom of the Son of Syrach, in Relation to the Choice of a Friend; If thou wouldſt get a Friend, ſays he, prove him firſt, and be not haſty to credit him; for ſome Man is a Friend for his own Occaſion, and will not abide in the Day of thy Trouble: As again, ſome Friend is a Companion at the Table: In thy Proſperity he will be as thyſelf; but if thou be brought low, he will be againſt thee, and hide himſelf from thy Face. Wherefore prove thy Friend firſt, and be not haſty to credit him.

The Qualifications of a Friend.

[e] South's Sermons, Vol. II.

[f] Prov. xxvii. 9, &c.

6. Between

6. Between Superiors in Rank, Parts, Riches, and Beneficence, and their respective Inferiors.

What Superiority these Things give them.

HOWEVER we are born alike, and derived all from the same Original, yet, when we come into the World, there are certain Rights and Privileges, either natural or acquired, that occasion an Inequality, and give one Man a Superiority over another. [g] As all Titles of Honour rose originally from the Field, and were the Royal Rewards of martial Adventures and Atchievements, though in After-ages dispensed to such, as had merited for their civil Conduct; so the common Consent of Mankind has always accounted them honourable, and that the Persons, where they reside, whether by Descent, or Creation, deserve a Deference and Respect extraordinary. Wisdom, or Knowledge of any Kind, as the wise Man observes, raises Men above the common Level, and abundantly compensates the Obscurity of Birth: [h] Exalt her therefore, says he, and she will promote thee; she will bring thee to Honour; she will give to thine Head an Ornament of Grace; and a Crown of Glory will she deliver to thee. Riches are so universally courted, that every one sees what Respect they demand, wherever they appear, and how they seem to atone for personal Defects, even when fallen into Hands, that make no laudable Use of them; but when dispensed in Acts of Beneficence and Generosity, how they attract the Eyes of all, and make the Man shine with a distinguished Lustre.

But they should not make Men proud,

BUT though these Excellencies create a Superiority, and set the Possessors of them in an Elevation above others; yet will they by no Means countenance Pride, or give them a Licence to trample upon those that they thus surmount: For [i] who maketh thee to differ from another? And what hast thou, that thou didst not receive? Thy Descent from an ancient and honourable Family, thy great Proficiency in Arts and Sciences, thy immense Increase of Wealth and Riches, nay the very [k] Power to eat thereof, and Heart to make use of them, now that thou hast them, are all from the Gift and Ordination of Providence, which might have sent thee into the World an Idiot, a Beggar, or (what is as ill) a Niggard of thy Wealth; and therefore since thou didst receive it from God, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?

because they are uncertain,

BUT if even all these Accomplishments were our own, yet are they of so precarious and uncertain a Texture, of so imperfect and limited an Use, that they can, by no Means, be the proper Matter of our boasting. In Relation to Wealth, which is equally applicable to Nobility and Learning, St Paul enjoins his Son Timothy to [l] charge them, that are rich in this World, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain Riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all Things to enjoy. The great Strength of the Argument, we may observe, is couched in the Word uncertain; for as nothing is more fluctuating than Wealth, which every Element can destroy; so the Infatuation must needs be great, to place a Trust on that, which is so flitting and unsteady; or (in Solomon's Phrase) to [m] set one's Eyes on that which is not; for Riches certainly make themselves Wings, and fly away, as an Eagle towards Heaven.

and of no great Use.

BUT admitting they were more permanent, yet still we may be allowed to ask, wherein are they to be accounted of? Since there are so many Miseries incident to human Life, wherein they can give us no Aid or Relief. [n] Is a Man, for Instance, afflicted in his Body with Pain? The Indies are not a competent Price for a Minute's Ease, for an Hour's Sleep. Is he persecuted in his Name with Reproach? 'Tis not whole Ingots of Gold that can stop the Mouth of Fame: Nay, many Times the Obloquy itself is but the Progeny of Wealth, of Wealth breeding Envy, and Envy Detraction. But if the Sore lies deeper yet, and affects his immortal Part, he is still farther removed from the Possibility of Relief. If he suffer as a Slave under the Dominion of Vice, no Treasure can redeem him from that Vassalage: If he groans under a Sense of Guilt, and the Terrors of an accusing Conscience; alas! Gold is no Balm to a wounded Spirit: The Luxuries, which that has supported, may help to pierce, but it has no Power to heal: Or lastly, if the Soul fall finally under the Punishment of Sin, [g] Vid. Selden's Titles of Honour. [h] Prov. iv. 9. [i] 1 Cor. iv. 7. [k] Eccles. vi. 2.

[l] 1 Tim. vi. 17. [m] Prov. xxiii. 5. [n] The Gentlemen's Calling.

Sin, there is no commuting that Penance, no buying off that Smart: Riches abuſed may indeed ſwell the Account, and multiply the Stripes; but this is the Day of Wrath, wherein they will not, wherein they cannot bribe the Remiſſion of one Pain. Since then the Accompliſhments of Birth, Fortune, and Erudition, are not ſufficient to ſecure us in our moſt important Intereſts; [o] Thus ſaith the Lord, let not the wiſe Man glory in his Wiſdom, neither let the mighty Man glory in his Strength; let not the rich Man glory in his Riches; neither let the Nobleman glory in his Birth or Titles; but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he underſtandeth, and knoweth me.

II. ANOTHER Duty that Perſons of this Eminence owe to their Inferiors, is not to deſpiſe them, upon the Account of their Poverty, Ignorance, or obſcure Parentage, ſo long as they are honeſt and harmleſs Men, but to be kind and condeſcenſive, in relieving the Poor, inſtructing the Ignorant, and ſetting them at all Times a good Example. Think we never ſo long, we cannot imagine any Thing, that could poſſibly induce God to create the World, and to ſtock this ſublunary Part of it with Mankind, for either the Manifeſtation of his Glory, or the Communication of his Goodneſs. His Glory ſeems to come ſecondary in View, as ſubſequent to the Work, when finiſhed; † the prime impulſive Cauſe and Reaſon was certainly his Goodneſs. And if Goodneſs was the great Motive of communicating Exiſtence to Mankind, we cannot but conclude, that the ſame Goodneſs attended the Conſultations of his Wiſdom, when he appointed them their different Stations and Conditions of Life: For with him there is no Reſpect of Perſons; [p] the Rich he regardeth no more than the Poor, the Prince than the Peaſant; for they are all the Work of his Hands. And if they be the Work of his Hands, we cannot but ſuppoſe, that they are as excellent in their Kind, as thoſe that appear in the World in a brighter Figure. The Sun, Moon, and all the Hoſt of Heaven, are, at the firſt Sight, mighty Demonſtrations of the Creator's Power and Godhead; but thoſe, that look farther into the Works of Nature, can ſhew us the Traces of the ſame Almighty Hand in the Texture of the ſmalleſt Inſect, or on the Surface of the meaneſt Plant: They can behold, and admire, I ſay, the Wonders of creating Providence in an Ant, as much as an Elephant; and in the loweſt Shrub, as much as in the talleſt Cedar in Lebanon: For the ſmaller the Compound is, the more curious the Workmanſhip; and the more curious the Workmanſhip, the greater the Skill, both in contriving and compleating it. And, in like Manner, the Condition, that makes but a mean Appearance in the World, is not without its Excellencies, and the Marks of God's Favour and Benignity abiding upon it.

They ſhould not deſpiſe their Inferiors, becauſe none are contemptible.

THE poor illiterate Man, that riſes up with the Sun, as ſoon as he is riſen, directeth his Prayers and Oriſons to God, his chiefeſt Comfort and Support, to bleſs his little Family, to aſſiſt them with his Grace, and protect them with his Providence, and to proſper the Thing, that they ſhall take in Hand; that, having eaten his Morſel with Content and Thankfulneſs, goeth out to his Labour and to his Work, with the ſweet Perfumes of the Morning-Air, and the warbling Notes of every Hedge and Wood to attend him; that, in the Courſe of his Labour, preſerves Chearfulneſs and a good Conſcience; ſings away one Part of the Heat and Burthen of the Day, ſanctifies the other with good Meditation, and, in the Concluſion, performs his Taſk, and gives up his Account with Joy; that, at his Return home, is received with the Smiles of his little Ones, and the undiſſembled Love of his Wife; amuſes the Evening with their innocent Talk and Play; what ſhe has provided, eats with Appetite, and in Communion; calls his little Branches about his Table, and is revived himſelf to ſee them proſper and thrive; bleſſes God, in fine, for the Mercies of the Day; implores his Forgiveneſs for the Tranſgreſſions of it; recommends himſelf and his Family to the Protection of his good-appointed Angels; and ſo ſecurely lays him down to Reſt, and, in one continued ſweet Repoſe, repairs Nature, and beguiles the live-long Nights: The poor conſcientious Man, I ſay, that, in this Tenor of Life, goes ſmoothly on, makes a Figure enough to raiſe our Envy, and engage our Choice; and, in this humble Sphere, God looks down upon him with more Pleaſure and Delectation, than he did upon Cæſar in his triumphal Chariot, or Solomon

A Deſcription of the poor Man's State.

[o] Jer. ix. 23, 24. † This is ſo diſcernable by the mere Light of Reaſon, that the Philoſophers, when they are upon the Enquiry, what ſhould be the impulſive Cauſe and Reaſon of God's making the World, without Heſitation, ſolve the Problem by Divine Goodneſs; for ſo we find Seneca arguing, Quæris quid ſit propoſitum Deo? BONITAS. Ita certè PLATO ait. Quæ Deo faciendi Mundum Cauſa fuit? BONUS EST: Bono nulla cujuſquam boni invidia eſt. Epiſt. 65. [p] Job xxxiv. 19.

men in all his Robes of Glory. Where then are [q] the Kings of the Earth, and the great Men, and the rich Men, and the chief Captains, and the mighty Men? Where is the Wise? [] Where is the Scribe? Where is the Disputer of this World? God hath chosen the foolish Things of this World to confound the Wise? and God hath chosen the weak Things of the World, to confound the Things which are mighty; and the base Things of the World, and Things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and Things which are not, to bring to nought Things that are, that no Flesh should glory in his Presence.*

'TIS the Observation of the wise Man, and a very important one it is, [r] whoso mocketh the Poor; the Poor, whether in Parts, Pedigree, or Fortune, reproacheth his Maker, finds Fault with the Dispensations of Providence: For, since the poor Man could not help his Station in Life, the Reproach falls ultimately upon God; but he that honoureth his Maker, hath Mercy upon the Poor. The greatest Man living therefore must not disdain to be told, that he who made him in the Womb, made likewise the Poor, and fashioned them both alike; that human Nature, even the meanest Guise, as being the Image of God, cannot be contemptible; that the Outside and Trappings of the Man make no Part of his Species; and that, in the Eyes of God Almighty, no Man is better looked upon for having rich Blood in his Veins, or for loading himself with thick Clay: Must not disdain to be told, that the Man of Thousands, and ten Thousand times ten Thousands, is not properly the Owner of one Farthing; at the most, he is but a Steward in God's Family; his Revenues, consequently, are his Debts, and the larger his Estate, the greater his Labour and Charge, [s] to give every one their Portion of Meat in due Season; which if he neglects to do, and begins to live luxuriously himself, and to beat and oppress his Fellow-Servants, his Lord will come in a Day, when he looked not for him, and will cut him asunder, and appoint him his Portion with Unbelievers. Above all, let them not disdain to be reminded of the high, but dangerous Station, wherein Providence has placed them; [t] of the Support of Parentage and Alliances, of the Accomplishment of Parts by a liberal Education, the Advantages of their Wealth and large Fortune, the Power of their Authority, and the Influence of their Example; and, from a Sense and right Estimate of these, as they would do honour to the Families from whence they spring, and improve the Talents committed to their Trust, and make themselves Friends of the Mammon of Unrighteousness; as they would gain the inward Esteem of Mankind, whereof their outward Titles are sometimes false Eccho's, and be looked upon like so many Gods, and tutelar Angels in the several Countries where they live, resolve to pursue the Practice of Job (a Person of equal Quality with themselves) of [u] being Eyes to the Blind, and Feet to the Lame; and a Father to the Poor; of drawing out their Soul to the Hungry, and satisfying the afflicted Soul; of [x] undoing the heavy Burthens, and breaking every Yoke; and especially of letting their Light so shine before Men, that the whole Sphere, wherein they move, may be influenced and directed by the Brightness of their Example. Then [y] shall their Light break forth as the Morning, when every [z] Ear, that hears them, shall bless them, and every Eye, that sees them, shall give Witness to them, and glorify their Father, which is in Heaven.

THESE are the Duties, wherein Persons of high Birth, Fortune, and other Accomplishments stand indebted to their Inferiors: And what their Inferiors, in Return, owe to them, may be reduced to these two Particulars, Honour and Gratitude: Honour, where eminent Qualities are observ'd; and Gratitude, where Favours and Obligations have been received.

The Duties of Inferiors to their Superiors.

Honour,

I. AS Honours were at first designed for the Reward of great and laudable Actions, so were they made successive, for the farther Encouragement and Promotion of them. Were the Honours, which Men propose to themselves in performing any great Atchievements, to terminate with their Lives, this would discourage their Zeal, and put a Damp upon their Resolutions to undertake them; but when they understand, that the Renown, which will accrue to them, will be made hereditary, and descend to their latest Posterity; this is such a Spur to illustrious Actions, as he, who has any Sense of Ambition, or Love for his Country, cannot but feel: And for this Reason it is presumed, that Persons of noble Birth, having the Examples of their Ancestors, and the Sense of Shame (if they should fall short of their Virtues, and incur the Imputation

[q] Rev. vi. 15.
[r] Barrow's Works, Vol. III.
[s] Job xxix. 11.
[*] 1 Cor. i. 20, &c.
[t] Job xxix. 15, 16.
[u] Prov. xvii. 5.
[x] Isai. lviii. 6, &c.
[y] Luke xii. 42, &c.
[z] Ibid. ver. 8.

putation of Degeneracy) always before their Eyes, ſhould exert themſelves with a more than ordinary Vigour and Reſolution, to avoid that Reproach, and conſequently, to ſignalize themſelves in every Thing that is excellent and praiſe-worthy. Upon theſe Accounts it is generally ſuppoſed, that Perſons of high Titles and honourable Parentage are Men of real Worth; and though they chance to be the Reverſe, yet, in Compliance to the End of civil Inſtitution, they ought to be treated with external Obſervance, leſt, in the Perſon of Particulars, the whole Order ſhould think itſelf neglected. In like Manner, when any Honour is conferred by a Prince, though the Perſon ſhould not have all the Merit that might be expected, yet an outward Regard is certainly due to him, becauſe the Expreſſions of Royal Favour have the ſame Efficacy in diſtinguiſhing the Objects of it, that the Royal Stamp has, to put a Difference between Coins, and even ſometimes to give a current and intrinſic Value to that, which has little or none of itſelf. And ſo again, though Riches are ſometimes found in the Hands of Perſons, that have the leaſt Pretence to perſonal Merit; though not only Folly, (as Solomon obſerves) but ſometimes Vice and Injuſtice are ſet in high Dignity, yet the Reaſons of outward Reſpect are oftener founded on the relative, than real Characters of Men. So that, as Riches make a Man more conſiderable in the Commonwealth, and more capable of ſerving its Intereſt, thoſe that are the Poſſeſſors of them, have a Right at leaſt to ſome Share of our Regard in their civil Capacity, how little ſoever they may deſerve it in their private. But where, in Conjunction with an ample Fortune, we diſcover any generous and laudable Qualities; where the Perſon, whom the King delights to honour, puts on Righteouſneſs, as Job expreſſes it, for his Cloathing, and Judgment for his Robe and his Diadem, there the Degrees of our Honour and Reſpect can hardly tranſcend the Bounds of our Duty.

II. ANOTHER Duty which Inferiors, thoſe eſpecially, that have received Favours and Obligations, owe to their Superiors, is Gratitude; which conſiſts in a Senſibility of Kindneſs received, and an Endeavour either to acknowledge or repay them. To repay them perhaps by an equivalent Return may not be in the Perſon's Power, and, conſequently, cannot be his Duty: But Thanks are a Tribute payable by the pooreſt, ſince none is ſo indigent, as not to have a Heart to be ſenſible, and a Tongue to expreſs its Reſentment of a Benefit, when he hath received it. What ſhall I render unto the Lord for all his Benefits towards me? Says holy David, reflecting upon the Divine Goodneſs to him: And, in like Manner, under a lively Apprehenſion of any human Favours, [a] "What ſhall I do, ſhould the grateful Man ſay to himſelf, for "ſuch a Friend, for ſuch a Patron, who hath ſo frankly, ſo generouſly, ſo uncon-"ſtrainedly relieved me in my Diſtreſs; ſupported me againſt ſuch an Enemy; ſup-"plied, cheriſhed, and upheld me, when Relations would not know me, or at leaſt "could not help me; and, in a Word, has prevented my Deſire, and out-done my "Neceſſities? I can never return him a Kindneſs any Ways anſwerable, but I may, "as I am in Juſtice bound, expreſs my thankful Remembrance of what he has "done. I can take all fair Occaſions to commemorate his good Offices, and, by the "little Services I am able to do, teſtify my Willingneſs to make him a full Requi-"tal, if I could." [b] For, as in the Matter of Debt, he who cannot pay all, muſt compound, and pay as far as he is able; ſo, in the Matter of Beneficence, when we cannot make a compleat Requital, we are obliged to make ſome ſmall Compoſition; and if we can do no more, to expreſs a grateful Senſe of what we have received, and give thankful Words for beneficial Actions, which all generous Benefactors eſteem the nobleſt Return; except it be to bleſs God for theſe great Inſtruments of his Bounty to us; to offer up our Prayers for their Proſperity, both ſpiritual and temporal; and to intercede with Heaven, ſince we find ourſelves inſolvent, to make them a full Requital, at the Retribution of the Juſt.

and Gratitude.

[a] South's Sermons, Vol. I.

[b] Scott's Chriſtian Life.

SECT.

SECT. III.

Of Mercy in General.

Mercy, what.

MERCY, in the general Notion of it, is a Trouble or Uneaſineſs of Spirit, conceived at ſome Evil, that has befallen another, and attended with an ardent Deſire to help him out of it: And from hence we may perceive, that it is a mixed Paſſion, compounded of Sorrow and Deſire; Sorrow, for the Evil of the Patient, and Deſire to deliver him from it. But here a Queſtion will ariſe, what Kind of Evil is the proper Object of this Sorrow, or what is it that ſhould recommend a Man to our Pity? [c] Some very conſiderable Moraliſts and Divines will allow no other Evil to be capable of Pity, but the Evil of Pain, and that only, when it is undeſerved: But why Sin ſhould not fall under our Pity, as well as any other Evil, ſince an irreclaimable Sinner is the moſt miſerable Object we can think of, I cannot conceive: And though I readily grant, that Affliction, when joined with Innocence, is very apt to excite Compaſſion; yet, upon the whole, I cannot but think, that the guilty Sufferer is more to be pitied than the innocent; ſince I can pity him for his Demerit and his Miſery too; whereas the latter is pitiable only for his Miſery. The guilty Patient indeed is not to be pitied ſo much for his direct Miſery, becauſe he deſerves it; but then he is more to be pitied for his Deſert and Miſery together, than the other is for his Miſery only: And I make no Doubt, but that our compaſſionate Saviour, when he wept over Jeruſalem, relented as much for the Sins, as for the Vengeance, that was hanging over that unhappy City, and that, had theſe two great tragic Scenes been at once preſented before him, the Slaughter of the innocent, and the Deſtruction of the guilty People, he would have found more to be pitied in the latter, than in the former Tragedy.

Who the Objects of it.

THIS being premiſed, concerning the Extent of Mercy and Compaſſion, that it is converſant about Evils of all Kinds, whether ſpiritual or temporal, deſerved or undeſerved, we ſhall now proceed to conſider, 1. Some of the Obligations and Reaſons; and, 2. Some of the Motives and Inducements, we all lie under to the Practice of this Virtue.

The Uſefulneſs of it.

I. THE Stoicks indeed are ſo far from accounting Mercy a Virtue, that, according to the Vogue of their Morality, it paſſes for a [d] Sin, for an Inſtance of Weakneſs and Littleneſs of Soul, and ſuch a Piece of Softneſs and Effeminacy, as does not comport with the Character of their wiſe Man, who is allowed indeed to relieve, but not to be troubled for the Afflicted; to add, if he can, to the Tranquillity of their Minds, but not to ſuffer his own to be diſcompoſed at the Sight of any Calamity. This however, inſtead of improving, is debaſing human Nature, and robbing it of that Happineſs and Security, which we may reaſonably promiſe ourſelves from the Protection of Society; for the Protection of Society, without a kind Compaſſion and Inclination to aſſiſt, avails us nothing: 'Tis then only that we reap the Benefit of Society, when there is the ſame Sympathy in the politick, that there is in the natural Body; when, [e] if one Member ſuffer, all the Members ſuffer with it, or, if one Member rejoice, all the Members rejoice with it.

Interwoven in both Mind and Body.

UPON the Account then, that this Paſſion is of ſuch happy Advantage to the preſent Condition of Man, God has been pleaſed to plant in our Nature ſo ſtrong a Propenſity to it, that when we read or hear of the Calamities of other Men, our Bowels yearn by a natural Sympathy, though they be never ſo far diſtant from us, and are no otherwiſe related to us, than as they partake of the ſame common Nature. Nay, though we know the Calamities which we read and hear, to be nothing but romantick Fictions, yet ſtill the very Imagination of them melts us into Tears, in Deſpite of our Will and Reaſon; an evident Inſtance of the general Sympathy, which interferes between all Men, ſince we can neither hear, nor ſee, nor imagine other Miſeries, without being touched with a ſenſible Pain and Affliction for them.

NOR

[c] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I. [d] Ægritudo animi ob alienarum miſeriarum ſpeciem eſt miſericordia; ægritudo autem in ſapientem virum non cadit. Sen. de Clem. c. 4. And according to his Maſter Seneca, Lipſius defines it to be vitium puſilli minutique animi ob ſpeciem alieni mali collabentis. [e] 1 Cor. xii. 26.

NOR has God given this Propenſity to the Soul only, but together with that has diſpoſed the very Make and Figuration of the Body ſo, that the whole Man might ſtand inclined to Acts of Mercy and Commiſeration. How the animal Spirits operate, is hard to determine; but this we know, that whenever we happen to caſt our Eyes upon a Man that is wounded, we find a ſudden Tide of them thronging towards thoſe Parts of our own Body, which anſwer to the Parts of the wounded Man, and ſo raiſing a Sentiment of Pity or Compaſſion in us, which we can no more help being affected with, than we can hinder our animal Spirits from flowing to, and affecting that Part of our Body, which correſponds to the Object before us.

Agreeable to the Nature of God.

SINCE the God of Nature, therefore, has laid the Ground of this Affection, in the Compoſition both of Soul and Body; ſince he has implanted in us ſuch a mutual Sympathy, as makes another's Miſery our Pain, which, without doing Violence to ourſelves, we cannot be eaſed of, without wiſhing, at leaſt, to be able to remove it; this I take to be an eternal and immutable Reaſon, why we ought to be merciful to one another, eſpecially conſidering, that this is farther incumbent upon us, both in Imitation of the Nature, and in Conformity to the Will of our Great Creator.

THE Doctors of the Talmud, ſpeaking of the Employment of God before the Creation of the World, lay it down for a Truth, that he was contriving how to be merciful to Mankind: And contriving indeed he was, how to ſhew Mercy to Man, but not by the Way of Study and Employment of Mind, as theſe idle Dreamers groſſly imagine. His Mercy is eſſential to his Nature, and therefore it is ſaid to be [g] from everlaſting, [h] to endure for ever, and himſelf is ſtiled [i] the God of all Grace, and [k] the Father of Mercies, whoſe Compaſſions, and [l] the Sounding of whoſe Bowels fail not, and who [m] keepeth Mercy for Thouſands, forgiving Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion, and Sin. And, indeed, if we conſider a little the Method of God's Dealing with Mankind, in creating them at firſt, in ſuſtaining them with his Power, in protecting them with his Providence, in ſanctifying them with his Grace, and, above all, in redeeming them from eternal Ruin, by the coſtly Price of his own Son's Blood; we cannot but obſerve a continued Series of Divine Mercy and Compaſſion, running through every Age of the World, and through every Moment of each Man's Life.

Preſcribed in his Word.

NOW, for the ſame Reaſon that God does himſelf continually delight in Acts of Mercy, and takes a peculiar Pleaſure in deſcribing himſelf by that particular Attribute; for the ſame Reaſon, it muſt neceſſarily be his Will, that we ſhould imitate him, in what he himſelf finds ſo great Complacency. [n] Be ye therefore merciful, ſays our Bleſſed Saviour, as your Father, which is in Heaven, is merciful; [o] Put on, as the Elect of God, Bowels of Mercy, Kindneſs, Meekneſs, Long-ſuffering; and [p] be of the ſame Mind one towards another, weeping with thoſe that weep, and [q] bearing one another's Burthens, in order to fulfil the Law of Chriſt.

Exemplified by Chriſt.

AND well might the Law of Chriſt preſcribe us this Duty, when he himſelf, while on Earth, in Commiſeration to Mankind, went about healing every Sickneſs, and every Diſeaſe; and ſeeing the Multitudes fainting, and ſcattered abroad like Sheep wanting a Shepherd, ἐσπλαγχνίσθη περὶ αὐτῶν, was moved with Compaſſion on them; ſo we render it indeed, but the Expreſſion is too high and pregnant for any verbal Tranſlation: When he himſelf, even now that he is in Heaven, retains ſtill the ſame Tenderneſs of Spirit, though, in other Reſpects, impaſſible, and for this Reaſon is called [r] a merciful High-Prieſt, that cannot but be touched with a Feeling of our Infirmities.

The Excellency of it.

WELL might the Law of Chriſt preſcribe us this Duty, which, of all others, is moſt appoſite to our preſent State and Circumſtances: For, ſince every Man is liable to become miſerable, nothing is more juſt and equitable, than that we ſhould deal with others, as we would be dealt by. Put the Caſe then, (as you very well may) that you were now as miſerable, as that wretched Creature is, that craves your Succour and Relief, would you not deſire Relief with the ſame Importunity, that he does? Since the Senſe of Miſery and the Deſire of Mercy are inſeparable, doubtleſs you would: And is there not all the Reaſon in the World then, that you ſhould grant him what you would aſk for yourſelf, if you were in his Circumſtances, and [f] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I.

[g] Pſal. ciii. 17.
[h] Ibid. cvi. 1.
[i] 1 Pet. v. 10.
[k] 2 Cor. i. 3.
[l] Iſa. lxiii. 15.
[m] Exod. xxxiv. 7.
[n] Luke vi. 36.
[o] Col. iii. 12.
[p] Rom. xii. 15, 16.
[q] Gal. vi. 2.
[r] Matth. ix. 35, 36.
[s] Heb. iv. 15.

he in your's? What therefore the Apoſtle ſays, in relation to Offences, may, with a ſmall Variation, be applied to other Infelicities of Life; "Brethren, if a Man be overtaken with Misfortunes, ye which are proſperous, relieve ſuch an one, in the Spirit of Compaſſion, conſidering thyſelf, leſt thou alſo be afflicted.

AND well might our Holy Religion recommend this Affection to us, ſince, of all others, it is one of the moſt noble and excellent Diſpoſitions of the Mind: So noble, that the moſt generous and brave Spirits of Antiquity, thoſe whom Paganiſm has deified, and Chriſtianity ſainted, whom Hiſtory mentions with Honour, and Malice itſelf is aſhamed to calumniate, have all along been famed and remarkable for it: And ſo excellent, that no other Paſſion, but Love or Charity, from whence it reſults, is to be compared with it. "Other Paſſions are in their own Natures indifferent, neither Good nor Evil in themſelves, but equally determinable to either, and for the moſt part, are actually determined to the wrong Side. They are generally irregular, either in the Degree, or in the Object; are either miſgoverned or miſplaced; and, when moſt orderly managed, the higheſt Character they can pretend to, is only to be Inſtruments and Servants to Virtue: But now this Affection of Pity and Compaſſion riſes higher than Indifferency: It is of itſelf a virtuous Diſpoſition, needs only actual Exertion to make it a direct Virtue, and then its own Excellency will place it among the higheſt Orders. For this Reaſon, I ſuppoſe it is, that God himſelf declares, I will have Mercy, and not Sacrifice, i. e. Mercy rather than Sacrifice; for when Matters fall out ſo, that we cannot conveniently attend both, he had rather that we ſhould teſtify our Love to him by Acts of Kindneſs, done for his Sake, to our Brethren, whoſe Neceſſities call for immediate Help, than that we ſhould neglect theſe, and employ ourſelves in the moſt ſolemn Acts of Worſhip, which entirely terminate in him, who neither needs them, nor can receive any Advantage by them: And for this Reaſon not improbably it is, that, of all the Affections implanted in Man's Mind, our Bleſſed Saviour thought proper to ſelect and adopt this only in the ſacred Number of his few Beatitudes; * Bleſſed are the Merciful; for they ſhall obtain Mercy. Which leads us,

Motives to it.

II. To the Motives and Inducements of our practiſing this Duty. And to this Purpoſe let it be conſidered, that, though Mercy, as well as other Virtues, may be ſometimes abuſed and ill-treated, yet, generally ſpeaking, nothing more naturally recommends us to the Compaſſion of others, than being of a merciful and benign Temper ourſelves. And for this Reaſon it is, that the wiſe Man adviſes, "Give to Seven, and alſo to Eight; for thou knoweſt not what Evil ſhall be upon the Earth: "As if he had ſaid, "Be careful, whilſt thou art in Proſperity, to lay an "Obligation on as many as thou canſt, by Works of Mercy and Bounty; for "thou knoweſt not how the World may change: Riches may make themſelves Wings, "and fly away; and it is not in the Power of all thy Art and Skill to ſtop them in "their Flight, or bring them down to thy Lure, when they are once upon the "Wing. A raging Fire, a violent Storm, unſeaſonable Weather, undutiful Children, the Falſeneſs of Friends, or the Malice of Enemies, may conſume an Eſtate "in a ſhort Time, which thou haſt a long while been gathering: And therefore, "if, whilſt thou haſt it, thou art kind and merciful, thy Kindneſs to others (ſhouldeſt "thou chance to be deprived of it) will be remembered to thy Advantage, and en"gage them to give into thy Cup, as our Saviour expreſſes it, "good Meaſure, preſſed "down, ſhaken together, and running over."

It engages the Mercy of Men, and of God.

BUT if this ſhould not happen, if even Mankind, whom thou haſt obliged, ſhould fail in Point of Gratitude; yet "God is not unrighteous, that he ſhould forget thy Work, and Labour of Love, in that thou haſt miniſtered to the Diſtreſſed. "For this Thing, he ſhall bleſs thee in all thy Works, and in all that thou putteſt thine Hand unto; "he ſhall deliver thee in the Time of Trouble; he ſhall preſerve thee from the Hand of thine Enemies, and ſtrengthen thee on thy Bed of Languiſhing. For this Thing, he will bleſs thee in thy Relations and Poſterity, "the Seed of the Merciful ſhall be mighty on the Earth, and the Generation of the Upright ſhall be bleſſed; and therefore, "caſt thy Bread upon the Waters, (as the wiſe Man elegantly expreſſes the Duty of Beneficence) and thou ſhalt find it after many Days; for thy Children's Children ſhall find the Advantage of it. For this Thing, he will bleſs thee in (what is more than all) the Salvation

---

[a] Gal. vi. 1. [b] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I. [c] Matth. v. 7. [d] Eccleſ. xi. 2.
[e] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I. [f] Luke vi. 38. [g] Heb. vi. 10. [h] Deut. xv. 10.
[i] Pſal. xli. 1, &c. [k] Ibid. cxii. 2. [l] Eccleſ. xi. 1.

Salvation of thine immortal Soul; for as [f] he shall have Judgment without Mercy on him, who hath shewed no Mercy; so, in him, that hath shewed it, Mercy shall rejoice against Judgment, when, in that great and terrible Day of the Lord, he shall meet with a gracious Sentence from his Judge, and a kind Reception in the Kingdom prepared for him. And therefore, [g] to sum up all in that elegant Discourse of Lactantius, concerning Works of Mercy and Charity: "Since human Nature, says "he, is weaker than that of other Creatures, who came into the World armed with "defensive Powers; therefore our wise Creator has given us a tender and merciful "Disposition, that we might place the Safe-guard of our Lives in mutual Assistan-"ces of one another. For being all created by one God, and sprung from one "common Parent, we should reckon ourselves a-kin, and conjoined to all Mankind; "and, being ourselves obnoxious to Misery, we may more comfortably hope for "Help, in case we need it, when we are conscious to ourselves, that we gave it to "others. If any be hungry then, let us feed him; is he naked, let us cloath him; "is he wronged by a powerful Oppressor, let us rescue and relieve him. Let our "Doors be open to Strangers, and such as have no Habitation: Let not our Assist-"ance be wanting to Widows and Orphans; and (what is a mighty Instance of "Charity) let us redeem the Captive, deliver the Prisoner, visit the Sick, and, in "case he should die, not suffer him to want the Conveniency of a Grave. These "are the Works and Offices of Mercy: And to prepare us for these, let us not set "our Heart on Money, but transmit it into the heavenly Treasures, where it shall "be kept to our eternal Advantage, under the Custody of God himself."

The Sum of the whole Argument.

SECT. IV.

Of Mercy to Mens Souls.

MERCY, as we said before, has properly Misery for its Object; and the Miseries incident to human Life are of two Kinds, either such as affect the Body, or such as affect the Soul of Man. The Miseries, which affect the Soul, are either Blindness, and Ignorance in Matters of the greatest Importance; or Malice, and Obstinacy of Will in wicked and pernicious Courses: To the former belongs the Business of Instruction; and to the latter, the Office of Reproof; and our Purpose is to see what Duties are required of us, with Respect to both these.

I. BLINDNESS, and Ignorance in Things of the highest Moment for us to know, is one of the greatest Miseries that can possibly happen to the Soul in this Life: For, as Souls are designed to live happy or miserable for ever, which Happiness depends upon the right Use of their Liberty, and that upon their Knowledge, how to use and determine it, it will be impossible for them to attain eternal Happiness, or escape eternal Misery, without Knowledge to steer and direct them right. [h] And now, what a miserable Case is this, to have an eternal Interest at Stake, and not to know how to manage it? To be travelling on this narrow Line of Life, which divides the boundless Continents of Happiness or Misery, and not see one Step of our Way before us, nor perceive whither we are going, until we are gone beyond all Recovery? Should we behold a blind Man, walking upon the Brink of a fatal Precipice, without any Guide to direct his Steps, and secure him from the neighbouring Danger, would not our Hearts ake, and our Bowels yearn for him? Should we not call out to him, and warn him of his Danger, and make all the Haste we could to take him by the Hand, and conduct him to a Place of Safety? And is it not a much more deplorable Sight, to see a poor ignorant Wretch, walking blindfold on the Brink of Hell, and, for Want of Sight to direct him Heavenwards, ready to blunder at every Step into the Pit of Destruction? Certainly, if we duly understood the Worth and Value of Souls, such a woful Spectacle could not but affect us with Commiseration, and excite us to employ all our Faculties, to convince him of the Danger he is incurring, and to instruct him, by what Means he may avoid it: For this is the proper Act of Mercy, which such a miserable Case requires, viz. to endeavour to dispel that fatal Ignorance which surrounds Mens Minds, and to enlighten them with all the Principles of Religion, that are necessary to conduct them to

The Misery of an ignorant Soul.

Instruction proper for it.

[f] James ii. 13. [g] Cave's Primitive Christianity. [h] Scott's Christian Life, Part III.

Charity-Schools.

to eternal Happineſs. And this, by the Way, may recommend thoſe liberal Foundations, which are now ſo frequent in this Nation, [l] whereby great Numbers of Perſons, by a virtuous Education, are inſtructed in the Doctrines of Faith, and ſeaſoned with the Principles of pure Religion, that ſo, knowing their Duty, and the manifold Obligations to it, they might not fall blindfold into everlaſting Perdition; and whereby the poorer Sort, that are leaſt of all capable of inſtructing their Children, or making any competent Proviſion for them, have pious Grounds to hope, that their [k] Sons may grow up as young Plants, and their Daughters be as the poliſhed Corners of the Temple.

How much we ſtand obliged, not only in Fidelity to God, who has committed the Souls of our Children and Dependents to our Charge, and will one Day require an Account of them at our Hands, but in Mercy likewiſe to them, that they may not periſh for Lack of Knowledge, to inform their Minds in all the Duties and Obligations of Religion, is what we had Occaſion to conſider [l] before; and ſhall only take Notice farther, that, beſides thoſe, who are thus immediately related to us, Mercy requires us to take all fair Opportunities of inſinuating the Knowledge of Divine Truths to any, we know deſtitute of it; or, if we ourſelves cannot do it, without incurring the Imputation of Impertinence or Pedantry, to recommend them to others; whoſe Authority with them is greater, and from whoſe Hands the kind Office may be better taken; for what St Paul ſays to Timothy, is applicable to all Chriſtians that have a Capacity for it; [m] the Servant of the Lord muſt be gentle unto all Men, apt to teach, in Meekneſs inſtructing thoſe, that oppoſe themſelves, if God peradventure will give them Repentance, to the Acknowledgment of the Truth; and that they may recover themſelves out of the Snare of the Devil, who are taken Captive by him at his Will.

Of religious Diſcourſe in common Converſation.

And this gives us too ſad an Occaſion to lament the great Decay of religious Diſcourſe in common Converſation, though certainly the moſt eaſy and effectual Way of Inſtruction. Sermons may do good, and Books may edify; but, being deſigned for general Uſe, they cannot come down to particular Caſes; they cannot ſuit the Condition and Capacities of all Men: They want that Life and Energy, that Addreſs and Inſinuation, which only dwell on the Tongue: [n] They are indeed but dead Things, in Compariſon of thoſe lively Births of Piety, which come from the Mouth in Converſation, when Hearts, truly touched with the Love of God, communicate their Light and Heat, and blow up one another's dormant Fires into a burning and ſhining Flame. As Iron ſharpeneth Iron, ſays Solomon, ſo a Man ſharpeneth the Countenance of his Friend, i. e. quickens and enlivens him, and ſets a new Edge, both upon his Wit, and upon his Paſſions and Affections. With good Reaſon therefore does our holy Religion direct, that we ſhould [o] provoke unto Love, and to good Works, by exhorting one another; that [p] our Speech ſhould be always with Grace, ſeaſoned with Salt; and that [q] no corrupt Communication ſhould proceed out of our Mouths, but that which is good to the Uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter Grace unto the Hearers.

And indeed, if we conſider the End and Deſign of Speech, we can hardly imagine, but that it was given us for higher and more material Purpoſes, than to drive Bargains upon the Exchange, to talk Politicks over a News-Paper, or to hold an impertinent Chat in goſſiping Company about Cloaths, and Faſhions, and the little Affairs and Tranſactions of the Neighbourhood. Among all the Creatures under Heaven, Man is the only one, that has Religion, and the only one too, that has Speech; which is no obſcure Intimation, that the one was deſigned to be ſubſervient to the other. For what ſhall a Man talk of? What Subject is there worthy his Diſcourſe, if not that, which is at once both the Perfection and Diſtinction of his Nature? If not that, wherein the Glory of God, as well as the Fate of his own and his Brother's Soul, is ſo nearly concerned? And yet, alas! if we look into the World, we ſhall find nothing leſs talked of, than Religion. Wicked Men cannot, and good Men, for Fear of being accounted ſingular, will not make it the Subject of their Diſcourſe; ſo that, what through the Indiſpoſition of the one, and the Incapacity of the other, a Man may make Viſit after Viſit, go from Houſe to Houſe, out of one Company into another, for it may be, a Twelve-Month together, and not hear one Word of Religion paſs. It is no Wonder indeed, if wicked Men prefer the light Flaſhes of a wanton Mirth, [l] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [k] Pſal. cxliv. 12. [l] See the Explanation of the Fifth Commandment.

[m] 2 Tim. ii. 24, &c. [n] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. III. [o] Heb. x. 24, 25. [p] Col. iv. 6. [q] Eph. iv. 29.

Mirth, which, for a while, ſuſpend Reflection, and hide the Sinner from himſelf, to ſuch Diſcourſes, as awaken Conſcience, and propheſy no Good concerning them, but only Evil continually; or, if Men of Virtue are, at any Time, guilty of ſo much Weakneſs, as to appear diſpleaſed with a ſerious and inſtructive Converſation, it cannot proceed from an Averſion to the Argument, becauſe it is impoſſible that they ſhould really be offended with ſuch Subjects, as are the great Entertainment of their Retirement; but it is the Uneaſineſs, they perceive in the Company, and Want of Courage to oppoſe ſo corrupt a Cuſtom, that makes them behave in this Manner; whereas, had they Reſolution enough to attempt it, theſe fooliſh Diſcouragements would ſoon be removed. Would good Men, I ſay, with the Liberty of an honeſt Zeal, oppoſe and reprove all profane and immodeſt Freedoms in Converſation, and ſtudy to promote and encourage the contrary, Veneration and Reſpect would attend them, and Religion would ſoon improve itſelf into a Faſhion. The Libertine would retire to the Stews, and Profaneneſs be confined to the Brothel; Joy, and Peace, and Eſteem would bleſs the Dwellings of the Righteous, and the Purity and Holineſs of their Converſation here would fit and prepare them for that Aſſembly of the Firſt-born, where, (inſtead of the preſent Impertinencies of Society) the Excellency of the Divine Being and Perfections, the Order and Wiſdom, the Juſtice and Goodneſs of his Government, the Reaſonableneſs and Equity of his Laws, the Pleaſantneſs and Freedom of his Service, and the great Inſtances of his Love, eſpecially that amazing one, in the Redemption of the World by the Paſſion of his Son, ſhall be the eternal Theme, whereof we ſhall then diſcourſe with all mutual Freedom and Endearments, without Reſerve, without Paſſion, without Affectation, or any of thoſe little Deſigns and Artifices, which now both diſguiſe and diſreliſh Converſation *.

The Miſery of a wicked Soul.

II. THE other ſore Miſery, which affects the Soul, is Obſtinacy of Will, in wicked and pernicious Courſes. For what a deplorable Sight is this, to ſee a wretched Soul, madly purſuing its own Deſtruction, and forcing, as it were, its Way into Hell, through all the Reſiſtances of its Religion, its Reaſon and Conſcience together? ' Were we to ſee a Madman break looſe from his Chain, and run his Head againſt a Wall; or catching up a Dagger, thruſt it into his own Breaſt, and repeat Stab after Stab, in Deſpite of all our Counſels and Diſſuaſives, ſhould we not pity and lament his Caſe, and endeavour to reſtrain him from ſuch violent Outrages againſt himſelf? And is it not a much more lamentable Spectacle, to ſee a wild and deſperate Soul break looſe from thoſe Ties of Religion and Conſcience, which bind it to its Duty and Happineſs, and, in a deaf and obſtinate Rage, ſeize on the Weapons of Perdition, (for ſuch all Wickedneſs is) plunge them into its own Bowels, and, with repeated Acts of Iniquity, imbrue its Hands in its own Blood; whilſt the bleſſed Spirit, together with its own natural Senſe of God, is ſtruggling with it, and endeavouring in vain to diſarm its deſperate Fury? What merciful Heart would not be tempted to interpoſe, in order to reſtrain it by Reproof, and bind it down with good Counſel and Admonition? Now this is the proper Act of Mercy in the Caſe before us: When we ſee an obſtinate Sinner reſolutely purſuing his own Deſtruction, we ſhould endeavour, by prudent and ſeaſonable Reproofs, and by pious and compaſſionate Admonitions, to reclaim him from the Error of his Way.

The Mercy to be extended to it, is Reproof, which is conſonant to Reaſon.

THERE are ſome Offices of Humanity, which thoſe, who had no other Light, but that of natural Reaſon, to guide their Actions, thought themſelves obliged to perform, not only to their Familiars, but Strangers, not only to their Friends, but to their Enemies. ' To ſhew the Way to Travellers, who had loſt it; to warn Perſons in Danger of a Rock, or of a Precipice; to permit others to light their Lamp by ours, are particularly ſpecified as Benefits, which, being uſeful to thoſe, that receive them, and no Ways prejudicial to thoſe, that give them, are to be denied to none. Now can we think ourſelves bound by the Laws of Humanity to thoſe common Inſtances of Kindneſs, and can we pretend to be exempt from others of much more Importance? Does common Humanity oblige us to put miſguided Travellers into their right Way; and will not Chriſtianity prevail with us to call back thoſe wandering Souls, which have ſtrayed from the narrow Paths, which lead unto Life, into the more wide and beaten Way, which leads to Deſtruction? Are we ſo careful to reſcue an unwary Voyager from the Danger of ſtriking on a Rock, and have we no Compaſſion on thoſe, who, without our Interpoſal, are in immediate Hazard of making Shipwreck of a good Conſcience? Do we cry out, when a Stranger is running upon a Precipice, and are we ſilent, when our Brother is falling into the bottomleſs Pit? Should we think it an Inſtance of Surlineſs and Barbarity, to deny another to borrow Light from our Light, and is there no Cruelty in with-holding from them, [t] who ſit in Darkneſs, and in the Shadow of Death, that Light, which would not ſhine with leſs Luſtre to us, by guiding their Feet likewiſe in the Way of Peace?

* Rogers's Sermons, Vol. I. ' Scott's Chriſtian Life, Part III. ' Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons.

and Scripture. THE Law of Moſes gives us this Injunction; [u] Thou ſhalt not ſee thy Brother's Ox or his Aſs go aſtray, and hide thyſelf from them: Thou ſhalt in any Caſe bring them again to thy Brother. Thou ſhalt not ſee thy Brother's Aſs or his Ox fall down by the Way, and hide thyſelf from them; thou ſhalt ſurely help him to lift them up again. And may we not apply to this Caſe what St Paul ſaith in another? * Doth God take Care for Oxen? Or ſaith he it altogether for our Sakes? For our Sakes no Doubt it is written, that thoſe, who, by the Laws of Charity, are obliged to bring back a ſtrayed Sheep, and to lift up a fallen Ox that belongs to their Brother, ſhould think themſelves much more obliged by the ſame Law, to bring back their Brother himſelf, when gone aſtray; and to lift him up, when fallen into the Pit of Deſtruction. But it is not only in Parables that this Duty is delivered to us; the Scripture ſays expreſſly, [x] Thou ſhalt not hate thy Brother in thine Heart, thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy Neighbour, and not ſuffer Sin upon him; where, in the Eye of the Moſaic Law, not to rebuke our Brother, is to hate him, and [y] he that hateth his Brother, in the Eye of the Chriſtian Law, is in Darkneſs, and knoweth not whither he goeth, becauſe that Darkneſs hath blinded his Eyes. If therefore the not rebuking our Brother is Hatred of him, as Moſes affirms; and if the Hatred of our Brother is a Sign of Infidelity, as St John aſſerts; then does the Duty of reproving our Brethren ſtand upon as firm Ground as any other in the Word of God. The Law, which was given by Moſes, required it of thoſe that lived under that Diſpenſation; and the Grace and Truth, which came by Jeſus Chriſt, has enforced it upon all Chriſtians, directing us, that we ſhould [z] exhort one another daily while it is called To-day, leſt any of us ſhould be hardened thro' the Deceitfulneſs of Sin: And to prevail with us to ſet about ſo good and charitable a Work, this is the great and bleſſed Encouragement which St James has left us; [a] Brethren, if any of you err from the Truth, and one convert him, let him know, that he, who converteth a Sinner from the Error of his Way, ſhall ſave a Soul from Death, and ſhall hide a Multitude of Sins. But whoſe Sins they are, that by this Means are hid, is a Point, wherein Expoſitors are not ſo well agreed.

The Words of St James explained. GROTIUS, indeed, is of Opinion, that they are the Sins of the converted Perſon, which, upon his Repentance and Reformation, (wherein his Brother's Zeal for his Soul was, under God, a great Inſtrument) are all pardoned and forgiven, be they never ſo numerous and many; but the more obvious and eaſy Senſe of the Words, as well as the plain Deſign of the Apoſtle, ſeems to refer to the Perſon converting. [b] The Apoſtle's Deſign was, to ſhut up his Epiſtle with recommending to all Chriſtians one of the moſt important and uſeful Duties, that of endeavouring the Converſion and Reformation of Men; and he intended likewiſe to ſtir them up to the Practice of this Virtue, by the moſt powerful Motives, that he could propoſe: And what are theſe? Why firſt, that he, who converteth a Sinner from the Error of his Ways, ſhould firſt conſider, that he ſaved a Soul from Death; and then ſecondly, and chiefly, that he ſhall alſo cover a Multitude of Sins: But whoſe Sins? Thoſe of the converted Perſon? No. That was already ſaid, and much more than that, in the foregoing Motive, he ſhall ſave a Soul from Death; for ſurely the ſaving a Soul from Death neceſſarily includes and preſuppoſes the Remiſſion of its Sins. So that the Paſſage muſt be meant of his Sins, who makes, and not of his, who becomes the Convert; and thus, indeed, the laſt Clauſe carries a new Motive in it, diſtinct from that of the former, and ſuch an one, as riſes higher, and more ſenſibly touches thoſe, to whom it is addreſſed. "Let ſuch an one know, (for this may be a proper Pa-
"raphraſe upon the Apoſtle's Words) that he ſhall, by this Means, not only ſave
"a Soul from Death, though this itſelf be a very great and deſirable Thing, but "what more nearly concerns him, ſhall alſo ſecure to himſelf, on this Account,
"the

[t] Luke i. 79. [u] Deut. xxii. 1, 4. * 1 Cor. ix. 9, 10. [x] Lev. xix. 17.
[y] 1 John ii. 11. [z] Heb. iii. 13. [a] James v. 19, 20. [b] Biſhop Atterbury's
Sermons, Vol. I. 3

"the Pardon of many Sins;" not groſs and heinous Sins (the Words of the Apoſtle do not imply that, neither can a Chriſtian, zealous for the Converſion of others, be ſuppoſed to be guilty of ſuch) but only many leſſer Neglects and Failings in his Duty; many Sins of Infirmity, Surprize, and daily Incurſion, which, God knows, in the beſt of Men are too frequent, and therefore properly enough ſtiled a Multitude of Sins.

Motives to engage us in the Converſion of others.

AFTER this, I need not urge the Practice of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, and what mighty Pains and Hazards the primitive Chriſtians underwent, that they might bring Mankind to the Knowledge of the Truth, and reſcue their Souls from the Snares of the Devil. If [c] there be Joy in Heaven, over one Sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine juſt Perſons, which need no Repentance; think, O think, with what Joy and holy Triumph muſt that Man appear, at the Day of Judgment, when, in the full Aſſembly of Saints and Angels, it ſhall be reported and proclaimed aloud, that his Teaching and Inſtruction, his Counſel and Advice, his Admonition and Reproofs gave the firſt Turn to ſuch an one's Converſion and Amendment, and was, under God, inſtrumental to the Salvation of his Soul, and the Joy and Rejoicing, which thereupon appeared in Heaven! How muſt his Countenance ſhine, and his Heart chear him, when, after ſuch Commendation, the Eyes of Men and Angels ſhall be turned upon him in full Applauſe and Admiration!

THIS one Conſideration, I think, is enough to excite us all, by every proper Means, to endeavour the Inſtruction and Reformation of the moſt Ignorant and Miſtaken, the moſt Profligate and Perverſe. [d] But if, after all, as it too often happens, the one will not receive our Inſtruction, nor the other endure our Reproof; yet, even then, pitying and praying for them becomes our Duty, and the worſe we find their Condition, and the more intractable their Diſpoſitions, the more vehemently muſt we ſtrive with God in their Behalf, that he would ſoften their Hearts, and ſhew them their Errors, and bring them, firſt, to a teachable Temper, and, then, into the Ways of Holineſs and Truth.

SECT. V.

Of Mercy to Mens Bodies.

THE Miſeries, which affect Mens Bodies, are either natural Blemiſhes and Defects, accidental Sickneſs and Diſeaſes, outward Force and Violence, or Want and Scarcity of the common Neceſſaries of Life, about which the Offices of Mercy and Compaſſion are differently converſant.

How we are to be affected towards Men under natural Blemiſhes.

1. ALL natural Blemiſhes and Defects, ſuch as Lameneſs, Crookedneſs, Want of Senſes, or Diſproportion of Parts, are real Infelicities, that render our Bodies either leſs uſeful to ourſelves, or leſs graceful and amiable to others: And, therefore, in this Caſe, [e] the Law of Mercy requires us, not to contemn or undervalue Men, not to upbraid or reproach them upon that Score; but to overlook theſe Blemiſhes, as inconſiderable Flaws, which they could not prevent, and which they cannot rectify: To remember, that the Body is not the Man, but the immortal Mind, that inhabits it; that the richeſt Diamonds wear, many Times, the rougheſt Coats; and that, ſince it was nor in their Power to order Nature in their own Compoſition, to deride or expoſe them for any Miſhap or Deformity therein, is like flinging Salt into their Wounds, and turning that into a Triumph of Mirth and Drollery, which is properly an Object of Pity and Compaſſion.

Under Sickneſs or Diſeaſes.

2. SICKNESS and Diſeaſes are ſore Miſeries, ſuch as waſte the Strength of Nature, rebate the Vigour of the Spirits, and make the whole Body, through inceſſant Pains and Weakneſs, not only uſeleſs, but burthenſome to the Soul: In which Caſe the Laws of Mercy require us (provided our Company will be acceptable) to viſit the Afflicted very frequently, in order to chear their drooping Spirits with the Livelineſs of our Converſation, and to adminiſter to their wearied Thoughts the Supports and Comforts of Religion: To contribute what we can to their bodily Eaſe and Refreſhment; to be ready to ſerve them in all their Neceſſities; to compaſſionate their Griefs; to bear with their Peeviſhneſſes; and, if they are poor and indigent, to ſupply ſupply them with all ſuch Remedies, as are neceſſary to their Health and Recovery. But, above all, to take all fair Opportunities to awaken in their Minds ſerious Thoughts and Purpoſes; to prepare their Souls for an happy Death, and a glorious Eternity; and, to this End, to become their Advocates at the Throne of Grace, that the God of all Power and Goodneſs, in whoſe Hands are the Iſſues of Life and Death, would commiſerate their Sorrows, and refreſh their Wearineſs, and either remove their Sickneſs, or ſanctify it to their eternal Health.

[c] Luke xv. 7. [d] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I. [e] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Part III.

Under outward Force and Violence.

3. OUTWARD Force and Violence, ſuch as Captivity and Impriſonment, are great and comprehenſive Miſeries, which draw a long and heavy Chain of Calamities after them. When Mens Perſons are expoſed to the Will and Tyranny of their Enemies, and eſpecially, when they are exaſperated againſt them upon the Account of Religion, what can be expected but cruel and barbarous Uſage; but to be worn out with Stripes, and Hunger, and intolerable Labour; and to be forced to pine away their wretched Lives in unpitied Anguiſh and Vexation of Soul? In which Caſe Mercy obliges us, when any fair Opportunity is propoſed to us, to contribute to their Ranſom proportionably to our Ability, and to ſollicit their Cauſe both with God and Men; to beſeech him to ſupport and preſerve them, and to perſuade all thoſe, with whom we have an Intereſt, to extend their Liberality towards their Redemption. And ſo, in the Caſe of Impriſonment, which, indeed, is but another Sort of Captivity, if they are our Friends and Acquaintance, Mercy requires us to viſit them in their ſad Solitude and Confinement, in order to divert their Sorrows, and raiſe and ſtrengthen their Hopes by our Converſation; to endeavour to mollify their Adverſaries; if they are inſolvent, to compound their Debts; and, if it be juſt and feaſible, to contribute, according to our Power, to their Releaſe and Enlargement; for this is fulfilling the Chriſtian Precept, of 'remembering them, that are in Bonds, as being bound with them, and thoſe which ſuffer Adverſity, as being ourſelves alſo in the Body.

Under Poverty and Want.

4. WANT of the outward Neceſſaries of Life is a very ſore Miſery, and what Mercy requires us, not only to commiſerate, but to relieve; and relieve in Proportion to our Abilities, and the Neceſſities of the Perſons that are in Want. But becauſe Mercy and Bounty to the Poor is a Duty of great Moment, and general Concern, we ſhall conſider it a little more diſtinctly: 1. As to the Reaſonableneſs and Excellence: 2. The Manner and Meaſure: And, 3. The Motives and Inducements of our performing it.

Bounty to the Poor, ſhewn from the Ties of Nature.

I. THAT God has implanted in our Nature, and woven, as it were, into the very Frame of our Being, an Inclination to Acts of Tenderneſs and Compaſſion, inſomuch, that a Man muſt diveſt himſelf of Humanity, before he can reſiſt ſuch Calls and Importunities, is what we were led to obſerve in our general Conſideration of the Duty of Mercy. [g] Now the true Reaſon, why this Paſſion of Pity was born with us, and made a Part of our Conſtitution, is, that thereby we might be excited and ſtirred up to help and ſuccour all, that are in Neceſſity and Diſtreſs. Our Bowels do therefore naturally yearn at all miſerable Objects, and we cannot help, unleſs we would deface the firſt and moſt genuine Impreſſions of God upon our Souls; we cannot help, I ſay, feeling within, ſomewhat anſwerable, and a-kin to all the Miſery, that we feel without, and, conſequently, we eaſe our own Bowels, when we compaſſionate the Miſeries, and relieve ourſelves, when we remove the Afflictions of a Brother. [h] Thus God and Nature within us ſollicit the poor Man's Cauſe: Our own Eaſe and Satisfaction demand from us Pity and Compaſſion; and the tender Relentings and Stirrings of Humanity, which ariſe in every Man's Breaſt, do even mechanically incline us to Acts of Mercy and Benevolence, if we will but ſtand neuter, and leave Nature to her own Workings.

From our Relation to each other.

BUT, beſides the Propenſity of Nature, there is a farther Obligation to this Duty ariſing from the near Relation, which every Man has to the very meaneſt and moſt abject, the pooreſt and moſt miſerable of his own Kind. We are all the Workmanſhip of the ſame Hands, made of the ſame Matter, moulded in the ſame Form, and copied from the ſame Image, even that of God himſelf: For, [i] did not he, that made me, ſays holy Job, make him? And did not one faſhion us in the Womb? And as one Hand made us both, ſo has it made us ſo very near the ſame, that, in the main eſſential Ingredients of our Nature, we are all one; and therefore, in uſing him well, I am kind to [f] Heb. xiii. 3. [g] Duke's Sermons. [h] Norris's Diſcourſes. [i] Job xxxi. 15.

to myſelf, and in feeding and ſupporting him, I ſuſtain and cheriſh a Member of my own Body: Whereas, to deny Bread to the Hungry, Lodging to the Outcaſt, and Covering to the Naked, &c. (in the ſtrong and elegant Expreſſion of the Prophet) is [l] hiding a Man's Self from his own Fleſh; nay, in the Phraſe of the wiſe Man, 'tis ſomething more unnatural; for while [m] the merciful Man does Good to his own Soul, ſaith he, he that is cruel, troubleth his own Fleſh.

BUT how ſtrictly ſoever we are obliged to this Duty by the Ties of Nature, yet there is ſtill a more forcible Obligation upon us from our ſpiritual Relation and Conſanguinity, as we are the Children of the ſame Father, born to the ſame Hopes, and Co-heirs of the ſame Inheritance in Light. For is it not fit, that they ſhould partake of the Bowels of Man's Compaſſion, who communicate with us in the everlaſting Mercies of God? Who are endued with the gracious Influences of the ſame Spirit, and have the Image of the ſame God, not only by Nature ſtamped upon them, but by Grace renewed within them? [n] Who are Partakers of the ſame high Calling, the ſame honourable Privileges, the ſame glorious Promiſes, and, in ſhort, have been purchaſed and purified by the precious Blood of the ſame common Saviour? Since in theſe great and ineſtimable Benefits we all communicate alike, why ſhould the ſecular Trifles of Wealth and Riches be made ſo private and particular? Eſpecially conſidering, that, as we are deſigned for a better and celeſtial Country, we are but Pilgrims upon Earth, and all Travellers upon the ſame Road; where, though the greateſt may appear with a coſtlier Equipage, and more ſplendid Retinue, yet ſtill he is but a Paſſenger, taking a Journey to the ſame Country, where the meaneſt Perſon, that ſets out with him, may perhaps be as great as he. [o] And is it not then extremely fooliſh and ridiculous, as well as barbarous and inhuman, for one in an opulent Condition to deny ſo poor a Sum, as would defray the neceſſary Expences of a Fellow-Traveller, who at his Journey's End, and in his own Country, (which from any of us is not far diſtant) has as great, perhaps a greater Eſtate; as good, perhaps better Friend and Ally, than himſelf? and preſent Condition.

THUS it appears from the ſeveral Relations we bear to each other, whether as Men or Chriſtians, that this great Act of Religion, the relieving the Poor, is a moſt reaſonable Service: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find Moſes and the Prophets, in the Old, and in the New Teſtament, our bleſſed Lord and his Apoſtles, inculcating nothing ſo often, urging nothing ſo preſſingly, recommending nothing ſo affectionately, as this. The Law was a Diſpenſation of Servility and Fear, and had no great Power to excite and improve the tender Reſentments of Nature; and yet we find God inſerting this Precept in the very Body of it: [p] If there be among you a poor Man, thou ſhalt not harden thy Heart, nor ſhut thine Hand from thy poor Brother; thou ſhalt ſurely give him, becauſe that for this Thing the Lord thy God will bleſs thee in all thy Works. Job in his own Practice and Example has ſhewn us, that Perſons of large Fortunes ſhould not hold the Poor from their Deſire, nor cauſe the Eyes of the Widow to fail; ſhould not eat their Morſels alone, and the Fatherleſs not eat thereof; ſhould not ſee any periſh without Cloathing, or the Poor without a Covering; but order their Bounty ſo, that being warmed with the Fleece of their Sheep, his Loins ſhould bleſs him. The Royal Pſalmiſt calls upon us [q] to conſider the Poor, and [r] to diſperſe our Riches abroad, that the Lord may deliver us in the Time of Trouble. The Royal Preacher exhorteth us [s] to caſt our Bread upon the Waters, in order to find it after many Days; and for this, in another Place, he gives us this Encouragement, [t] he that hath Pity on the Poor, lendeth to the Lord; and that which he hath given him, will he pay him again: And to mention no more, the Prophet Micah hath made it one of the three great Articles in the Syſtem of Religion, [u] to love Mercy; or as another Prophet hath explained it, [x] that thou deal thy Bread to the Hungry, and bring the Poor, that are caſt out, to thine Houſe; when thou ſeeſt the Naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyſelf from thine own Fleſh. From the Word of God, both in the Old, and New Teſtament.

WELL therefore may we expect, that in a Religion, deſigned to cultivate the tender Sentiments of human Nature, our Inſtructions ſhould be, [y] not to lay up to ourſelves Treaſures upon Earth, but [z] to be rich in good Works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; [a] to abound in the Grace of Liberality; [b] to give to every one that asketh; and [a] if we would be perfect, to sell all that we have, and give to the Poor, that so we may have Treasure in Heaven. This is that [b] pure Religion, and undefiled before God; this that [c] Sacrifice, wherewith he is well pleased; this is the Method of expressing our Love to our gracious Lord, and making him our Debtor; [d] for verily I say unto you, in as much as ye have done it to one of the least of these my Brethren, ye have done it unto me. What a surprisingly gracious Sentence is this? Can a Man be profitable to God? As Job asks the Question: And as Elihu; if thou be righteous, what dost thou give him? Or, what does he receive at thy Hands? Alas! my Goodness extendeth not to thee, is the Confession of the Man after God's own Heart: Yet see here the infinite Condescension of our Saviour! He has found out a Way, how we may give somewhat even to him, that is already Lord of all; be merciful to the Fountain of all Mercy, and do good even to Goodness itself; in that he places to his own Account, and graciously accepts, as done to himself, whatever we do to his afflicted Members for his Sake: And for this Reason he hath ordained, that since himself was to return to his heavenly Father, we should [e] have the Poor always with us, that, whenever we will, we may do them good. Them he hath left his Representatives, that we might never want whereupon to exercise our Love to him, even to the End of the World: And it is by Means of their Poverty, that we may make our Riches truly Blessings, as they afford us an Opportunity of employing them to the best of Purposes, and of setting forth the Honour and Love, which we always owe, and ought always to be paying to our Lord.

[l] Iſa. lviii. 7. [m] Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [n] Duke's Sermons. [o] Deut. xv. 7, 10. [p] Pſal. xli. 1. [q] Pſal. cxii. 9. [r] Eccleſ. xi. 1. [s] Prov. xix. 17. [t] Micah. vi. 8. [u] Iſa. lviii. 7. [x] Matt. vi. 19. [y] 1 Tim. vi. 18. [z] 2 Cor. viii. 7. [a] Luke vi. 30.

Why the Poor are ordained to be among us.

[f] 'Tis from no Defect then, or Failing of the inexhaustible Stores of God's Goodness, that there is such a Thing as Poverty among the Sons of Men. Had it been as agreeable to his infinite Wisdom, as it was easy to his Almighty Power, he might have made the same Abundance and Plenty common to all Mankind, and left no Room for the foolish Cavils against Providence, from the present unequal Distribution of the good Things of this World: Or, since it had pleased God to make the World consist, as it does, of rich and poor, he, who, through the whole Scripture declares such a tender Regard for the Poor, might supply their Necessities with his own Hand. He, that fed the Israelites in a barren Wilderness with Angel's Food, and Bread sent from Heaven, and preserved their Garments from wearing out, or waxing old; he, that fed his Prophet by Ravens, and blessed the poor Widow's Handful of Meal and Cruise of Oil, so that neither wasted nor failed, could still, (if he saw it good) without calling in the Help of the Rich, relieve all the Wants of his Creatures himself, but therefore he chuses to wave his Almighty Power, and to send Man to Man for Relief and Support, not only that he might make Trial of our Faith and Affection to him, but that he might endear us likewise to each other, and diffuse continually through the whole intelligent Creation a divine Principle of mutual Love. As then the Poor are the Representatives of Christ in his weak and suffering Humanity, so the charitable Rich, who feed and sustain them, may be said to represent him in his powerful and all-sufficient Divinity. They supply the Place of an extraordinary Providence: They are instead of God to their indigent Brethren; and, if they take Care to give every one his Portion of Meat in due Season, their Reward shall be commensurate to their Talents. And so we proceed to the Consideration,

The Manner wherein we are to give our Alms.

II. Of some of the Methods and Measures of performing this Duty. [g] When thou dost thine Alms, says our blessed Lord, do not sound a Trumpet before thee, as the Hypocrites do in the Synagogues, and in the Streets, that they may have Glory of Men; but, when thou dost Alms, let not thy Left-Hand know what thy Right-Hand doth, that thine Alms may be in Secret. And, indeed, he that relieves the Necessities of others out of a virtuous Principle, out of Gratitude to God, and a tender Compassion for human Nature in Distress, as he will esteem the divine Approbation more than all the Applauses of Men, so will he be very tender of making his Bounty a Reproach, or exposing the Poverty he relieves, by divulging his Charity; and will therefore give it secretly and privately. He will consider, that, as God has made him a Steward and Dispenser of his Bounty to the Poor, after his own Conveniencies, and those that depend on him are served, the Remainder belongs to them; and, in stating this Account, [h] he will not extend his Conveniencies beyond their just Dimensions, but abate what he decently can of his superfluous Expences, and of that needless Pomp and Ceremony,

[a] Matt. xix. 21. [b] James i. 27. [c] Heb. xiii. 16. [d] Matt. xxv. 40. [e] Mark xiv. 7.
[f] Duke's Sermons. [g] Matt. vi. 2, &c. [h] Scott's Christian Life, Part III.

Ceremony, which his Station and Character require not, and will thereupon give liberally and bountifully, He will be thankful to God for the kind Diſtinction of his Providence, for having made his Cup to overflow, and given him Lands, which he laboured not, and Vine-yards and Olive-yards, which he planted not, whilſt others remain in Poverty and Want. He ſees their Wants preſs them hard, and that the longer he delays their Relief, the longer he continues their Griefs and Miſeries upon them, and therefore he gives readily and chearfully. He conſiders his own Mortality, and the Uncertainty of human Affairs, whereby he may be deprived of the Opportunity of doing the Good he deſigns, and being not ſo well ſatisfied, that poſthumous Deeds of this Kind will pleaſe the living God, he watches all Occaſions, ſuch as Times of Sickneſs, Scarceneſs of Work, Dearneſs of Proviſion, &c. when Mens Wants and Neceſſities call loudeſt for Relief; and thus he gives timely and ſeaſonably. And, laſtly, becauſe the Number of miſerable People is too great for one to relieve, he conſiders where the greateſt Neceſſities, and the greateſt Obligations are, and, conſequently, gives the Preference to Chriſtians before Heathens; to thoſe of his own, before thoſe of a different Family and Communion; to good Men, before the Wicked; and to God's Poor, (whom the Divine Providence, by Sickneſs or Loſſes, has made Objects of Charity) to the Poor of their own making, whom Idleneſs, and Luxury, and Vice has reduced to Want and Miſery; and thus he gives diſcreetly and prudently.

THESE are the Conditions, that make the Sacrifice of Alms both grateful to the Receiver, and acceptable to God. But, beſides the Duty of Almſgiving, there are ſeveral others, ſuch as aſſiſting the Oppreſſed, releaſing the Inſolvent, and lending freely, and without Uſury, upon ſome Occaſions, that are included in our Mercy to the Poor, and are very proper and ſignificant Expreſſions of it. Our aſſiſting the Oppreſſed is enjoined by Solomon, in theſe Words: [k] If thou forbear to deliver them, who are drawn unto Death, and thoſe that are ready to be ſlain; and ſo of any other Injury or Oppreſſion, occaſioned by the Violence of lawleſs Men, if thou ſayeſt, behold, we know it not, excuſing an uncompaſſionate Careleſſneſs by a pretended Ignorance, doth not he, that pondereth the Heart, conſider it? And he, that keepeth thy Soul, doth not he know it? And ſhall not he render to every Man according to his Works? Our releaſing the Inſolvent from their Debt or Confinement, is what our Bleſſed Saviour has ſufficiently intimated, in the Parable of the unmerciful Servant, who, when his Lord had frankly remitted him a Debt, which he was by no Means capable of paying, laid hold on his poor Fellow-Servant for a trifling Sum; and, notwithſtanding his Submiſſions and Intreaties, hurried him to Priſon, for which he is reproached by his Lord; [l] O thou wicked Servant, I forgave thee all that Debt, becauſe thou deſiredſt me; ſhouldſt thou not alſo have had Compaſſion on thy Fellow-Servant, even as I had Pity on thee? Our lending freely, and without Uſury, is an Injunction likewiſe of our Saviour's; for, [m] love your Enemies, ſays he, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again, and your Reward ſhall be great. But, becauſe ſome Diſputes have riſen among Divines, concerning the Matter of Uſury, it may not be amiſs, in this Place, to determine the Point, and ſettle its proper Limitations.

Other Inſtances of Mercy to the Poor.

THAT the Jews were forbidden to lend to the Poor upon Uſury, is manifeſt from this one Paſſage, among many others; [n] If thy Brother be waxen poor, and fallen to decay with thee, take no Uſury of him, nor Increaſe, but fear God, that thy Brother may live well with thee. Nay, that the ſame Prohibition was extended to the Rich, as well as the Poor, ſo long as they were Iſraelites, is evident from that remarkable Paſſage in Deuteronomy: [o] Thou ſhalt not lend upon Uſury to thy Brother; Uſury of Money, Uſury of Victuals, Uſury of any Thing that is lent upon Uſury. Unto a Stranger thou mayeſt lend upon Uſury, but unto thy Brother thou ſhalt not lend upon Uſury, that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all that thou ſetteſt thine Hand unto. We may obſerve, however, that there can be no moral and intrinſick Evil in Uſury, becauſe God allows them to require it of Strangers, though they were not to do it in any immoderate or exceſſive Manner, in which Senſe we may underſtand that Prohibition ſo frequently repeated, [p] Thou ſhalt not vex a Stranger, nor oppreſs him; for ye were Strangers in the Land of Egypt.

Uſury forbid among the Jews, and why; but, in itſelf, not unlawful.

* NOW the true Reaſon, why the Jews were permitted to take Uſury of Strangers, and not of their Brethren, is this, that their Heathen Neighbours, as [q] is plain of [l] Gardiner's Sermons. [k] Prov. xxiv. 11, 12. [l] Matth. xviii. 32. [m] Luke vi. 35.

[n] Lev. xxv. 35, &c. [o] Deut. xxiii. 19, 20. [p] Exod. xxii. 21. [q] Sherlock's Sermons, Vol. I.
[q] Iſai. xxiii. 2.

of Tyre and Zidon, were Merchants, that improved their Money by Trade, and therefore it was fit that they ſhould pay a moderate Intereſt for it; but the Jews, maintaining no foreign Commerce with other Nations, had no Occaſion to borrow Money, but to ſupply their preſent Wants; and to take Advantage of the Neceſſities of the Poor, to increaſe their own Fortunes by increaſing their Neighbour's Poverty, was againſt all the Laws of Goodneſs and Charity; and therefore this Uſury, which was the only Uſury known in thoſe Days, is ſtrictly forbidden. All other Kinds of Uſury are introduced by Trade and Commerce: And though it is againſt Charity to lend upon Uſury to Men, who borrow to ſupply their Wants; yet, if Men borrow to increaſe their Trade and Fortunes, there is Juſtice and Equity in it, that the Lender ſhould make ſome Increaſe of his Money, as well as the Borrower: And, accordingly, our Bleſſed Saviour, in the Anſwer he gives to the Servant, who hid his Talent in a Napkin, ſeems to juſtify this Procedure: [x] Thou oughteſt to have put my Money to the Exchangers, and then, at my Coming, I ſhould have received mine own with Uſury.

THE Sum of our Enquiry is this,——That though Uſury is expreſſly prohibited under the Jewiſh Law, and comes ſometimes in Company with many groſs Enormities; yet having no moral Turpitude in it, and being not forbidden by the Goſpel, being accounted expedient in Matters of Trade, and to many, that have no other Way of ſubſiſting, abſolutely neceſſary (whatever the Jews, who had no Opportunities of Trafficking with Money, might be required to do) in Countries, whoſe whole Wealth and Support depend upon Commerce, and the Produce of their Money, it can never juſtly be deemed an Iniquity to make a moderate Gain thereby, provided always, that ſuch as are in Poverty and Neceſſity be not concerned. To theſe we muſt lend without Uſury, nay, to theſe we muſt lend, hoping for nothing again: The plain Senſe of which Precept is this, that [y] where a Perſon, under the Preſſure of great Neceſſity, ſhall come to us, and deſire to borrow ſuch a Sum of Money, as his preſſing Circumſtances require, provided we can ſpare it, and, if the Providence of God render the Perſon unable to repay us, we can diſpenſe with the Loſs of it, we ought not to refuſe ſuch a reaſonable Charity as this, or be afraid of lending, becauſe we run probably a Hazard of never being paid again; but, on the contrary, ſhould freely and chearfully ſupply him, with a Reſolution to loſe it, if God never enables him to repay us. This is the Duty; and we come now, Except to the Poor.

Motives and Encouragements to our Bounty to the Poor. As the Pleaſure,

III. To ſome of the Motives and Encouragements to it. And, to this Purpoſe, let it be conſidered, that, of all the good Things we do, there is none that gives that true Comfort and Delectation to the Mind, as a reaſonable Refreſhment to the Wretched and Neceſſitous. For, when I ſee a Man ſtruggling with Want, and groaning under a heavy Burthen of Poverty, if I relieve him, I eaſe and refreſh my own yearning Bowels; and the human Nature within me, which is common to us both, by a Kind of Sympathetick Motion, exalts and raiſes up itſelf, and ſwells with a generous Pleaſure: I find an Eaſe of Mind, a Complacency of Spirit, and a ſecret irreſiſtible Joy ſpringing up in my Breaſt. All the Good, which I deſigned to ſhed abroad, and part with to my poor Brother, recoils back upon myſelf, and the Comfort I feel within, confirms me in the Truth of this Poſition of our Bleſſed Saviour, that it is more bleſſed to give, than to receive.

the Security;

MEN may pretend a Danger of exhauſting their Subſtance by too liberal Contributions, but let us a little conſult Experience. * Who ever knew an Eſtate impaired by Charity? By Love of our Brethren? But by Love of ourſelves, how many? By Luxury, by Prodigality, by the Love of the World, by the very Deſire of increaſing and multiplying, how many? Theſe are the Wings, that Riches moſt uſually take to themſelves, when they fly away; and then, as the wiſe Man ſpeaks, [z] what Profit hath he, that laboureth for the Wind? The beſt and ſecureſt Way then, to fix theſe uncertain and fleeting Things, is to lay them up where it is impoſſible they ſhould be loſt. [x] They may be loſt, while they are at Home; for while they are at Home, in Truth, they are Abroad, and at Adventures; ſailing among perilous Storms, and Rocks, and Pirates, and can never be ſafe, until they be brought to this Port, and inſured this Way: For the poor Man's Belly is a Grainary for our Corn, which can never be exhauſted; the poor Man's Back is a Wardrobe for our Cloaths, which can never be pillaged; and the poor Man's Pocket is a Bank for our Money, which can never break or deceive us.

WHAT

[x] Matth. xxv. 27. [y] See Jer. xv. 10, &c. Ezek. xviii. 7, &c. Pſal. xv. 5, &c. [z] Gardiner's Sermons. * Duke's Sermons. [z] Eccleſ. v. 16. [x] Barrow's Works, Vol. I.

WHAT we give to the Poor is laid up in Heaven, whither no Thief can climb, and where no Moth or Rust doth abide; and, therefore, in Despite of all the Fortune, all the Might, all the Malice of the World, the liberal Man will ever be rich, who has God's Providence for his Estate, God's Power for his Defence, God's Favour for his Reward, and God's Promise for his Assurance, that [y] he who giveth to the Poor, shall not lack; that [z] the liberal Soul shall be made fat; and [a] that he who deviseth liberal Things, by liberal Things shall he stand. [b] Lay up thy Treasure therefore, says the wise Son of Syrach, according to the Commandments of the Most High, and it shall bring thee more Profit than Gold. Riches, that are kept, profit not in the Day of Wrath; but shut up Alms in thy Store-Houses, and they shall deliver thee from all Affliction: Especially in the great and momentous Times of Death and Judgment, when, as the Royal Psalmist says, [c] Blessed is he that considereth the Poor, the Lord shall deliver him in Time of Trouble; the Lord shall preserve him, and keep him alive, and he shall be blessed upon Earth; the Lord shall strengthen him upon the Bed of Languishing, and make all his Bed in his Sickness: And when, as our gracious Saviour says, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the Beginning of the World; for I was an hungry, and ye gave me Meat; thirsty, and ye gave me Drink; naked, and ye cloathed me; sick, and ye visited me; in Prison, and ye came unto me: Or, at least, in as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these my Brethren, ye did it unto me; and therefore come unto me, ye blessed of my Father. And Profit of it.

[y] Prov. xxviii. 27. [z] Ibid. xi. 25. [a] Isa. xxxii. 8. [b] Ecclus. xxix. 11. [c] Psal. xli. 1.

CHAP. III.

Our Duty towards Ourselves; and,

1. Of the Government of our Thoughts.

THE Duty, which we owe to ourselves, seems chiefly to consist in the right Ordering and Management of the two constituent Parts of our Nature, Soul and Body, i. e. in the Direction of our Thoughts, [a] in the Submission of our Wills, in the Regulation of our Passions, in the Government of our Tongues, in the Subjection of our Bodies, and in the Renewal and Sanctification of our whole Nature. Our Duty to Ourselves.

I. KEEP thy Heart with all Diligence, is the Advice of the wise Man, [b] who, according to the current Opinion of the ancient Philosophy, taking the Heart for the chief Seat of the Soul, and the Instrument of its most noble Operations, sets it to signify our inward Thoughts and Affections, which we are to keep, or attend to with all Diligence, because out of them are the Issues, i. e. the Fruits and Effects, which appear in our Lives and Conversations. Since the Goodness or Badness of our Lives then does altogether depend upon the good or bad Government of our Thoughts and Inclinations, it may not be improper, 1. To consider what Power God has given us over these inward Motions of our Minds; and, 2. Wherein the Art of governing them does consist.

THAT God has given us some Power over the Thoughts and Affections of our Minds, cannot be disputed: But then, because some People, by the very Principles of their Make and Constitution, as others, by long Usage and frequent Trials, are better qualified for this Government than others, and, according to several Contingencies of outward Things, have, at some times, a greater Command over their Passions, than What Power we have over our Thoughts.

[a] The Submission of our Will we have treated of in our Duty towards God, page 872. [b] Barrow's Works, Vol. II.

at others; it cannot be expected, that any particular Reſolution ſhould be anſwerable to all theſe Caſes: And therefore all that we can do, muſt be to lay down ſome ſuch general Propoſition, as may comprehend moſt of them: And, to this Purpoſe, it ſeems very manifeſt,

Little or none over the firſt Motions of our Minds.

1. THAT the firſt Motions of our Minds are very little, if at all, under our Power and Dominion. [c] By the firſt Motions of our Minds, we mean thoſe ſudden Thoughts or Apprehenſions, thoſe involuntary Paſſions and Deſires, which are excited in our Minds by any Object, that is, at that Time, preſented to our Imaginations: And theſe we are not ſo much Maſters of ourſelves, as to be able to ſtop, even though they ſhould chance to be irregular, becauſe they are produced ſo very quick; they take Poſſeſſion of the Mind, before the Mind is apprehenſive of them, before the Judgment is awakened, and Reaſon alarmed to make a timely Interpoſure. Thus, upon a great Provocation, a Man of a paſſionate Temper cannot avoid feeling a ſudden Reſentment of Anger; upon hearing himſelf commended, a Man, that deſires to be well thought of, cannot but entertain ſome Vanity of Imagination; and, when all the Temptations are ſet before him, a Man, addicted to his Pleaſures, can hardly prevent ſome ſecret irregular Inclinations towards them. He may indeed (as he ought to do) ſuppreſs theſe Irregularities, when he perceives them riſing in his Breaſt; and by long Conſideration, and a ſerious Exerciſe of himſelf in the Ways of Godlineſs, make thoſe, that were formerly Temptations to him, in Time become none at all: But, as for the firſt Motions and Workings of his Mind, theſe he can no more prevent, than he can alter his Temper, or evade the Circumſtances that do ſurround him; and therefore the Art of ruling his Thoughts does not lie here.

2. AND as the firſt Motions of our Minds are excepted from our Power and Juriſdiction, ſo, from the Preſence of ſome outward Object, the Violence of ſome inward Paſſion, or the Temper and Indiſpoſition of a Man's Body, it very frequently happens, that he loſes the free Command of his Thoughts, and Fancies and Imaginations are forced upon him, whether he will or no. When a Man, for Inſtance, is under a ſharp tormenting Pain, as he cannot avoid feeling, ſo neither can he forbear thinking of it: When he is full of Grief for the Loſs of ſome dear Relation, or tranſported with Paſſion for ſome unworthy Treatment; until his Paſſions cool, and the Impreſſions, that cauſed them, are abated, it is in vain to bid him forget theſe Grievances; for the Nature of Man is ſuch, that, when it is once engaged in warm Thoughts about any Matter, it is very hard, if not impoſſible for it, to diſengage itſelf on a ſudden. The like is to be ſaid, not only in all Sorts of Diſtempers, where the Brain is viſibly diſturbed, but even in the Caſe of ſome deeply hypochondriac Perſons, who are often known to be haunted with a Set of Imaginations and Fancies, that deſtroy their inward Peace and Tranquillity of Mind, and yet ſuch as they can, by no Means, get quit of, tho' they deſire it never ſo impatiently; and therefore the Art of governing their Thoughts does not lie here neither.

WELL: But if a Man be ſuch a Slave to his Thoughts; if, from the Complexion of his Body, outward Objects, and inward Paſſions, Fancies and Imaginations are ſo obtruded upon him, that he cannot controul them, would he never ſo fain, the great Queſtion is, wherein does this boaſted Liberty of Thinking conſiſt? And to this we anſwer, Wherein it properly conſiſts.

3. THAT, excepting the Caſes already mentioned, we have a Liberty of Thinking; which Liberty conſiſts in bending our Thoughts, and applying our Minds more vigorouſly to one Kind of Object, than another. Thus, of the Multitude of Objects that occur to our Minds, it is in our Power to determine which of them we will dwell upon; and, when we have pitched upon any one, it is farther in our Power to determine how long, and in what Degree we will attend to it; whether we will purſue it with the utmoſt Vigour of our Minds, or with ſome Indifference and Remiſſneſs. In this, as we conceive it, conſiſts the very Nature of our Freedom of Thinking; but then,

And wherein the Morality of our Thoughts.

4. THERE is a farther Power we have over our Minds, more eſpecially to be conſidered, becauſe, in the good or ill Uſe of it, the very Foundation of all our Virtue or Vice is laid. We cannot, indeed, in many Caſes, think always of what we would; nay, we cannot oftentimes hinder Abundance of Thoughts from taking Poſſeſſion of our Minds, whether we will or no; but this we certainly can do: We can aſſent to our Thoughts, or deny our Aſſent to them; when any Suggeſtion ariſes in our our Minds, we can observe its Nature and Tendency, and accordingly cherish, or reject it. And here it is, that the Morality of our Thoughts begins; according as we assent or dissent to the Motion that is made in our Minds, so will our Thoughts put on the Nature of Virtue or Vice.

[c] Sharpe's Sermons, Vol. I.

WHEN any Temptations are presented to us from without, we cannot perhaps, on such Occasions, but feel an irregular Passion, or Inclination stirring within us; but yet, at that very Time, it is in our Power, whether we will comply with these Passions and Inclinations or not; whether we will consent to them or not; whether we will pursue them any farther or not. Now, if we do not consent to them, but endeavour to stop, and stifle, and resist them, as soon as we are aware of them, there is no Harm done. Our Thoughts, how indecent and irregular soever they were, are rather to be accounted the Infirmities of our Nature; the Bruises we contracted by our Fall, than any Sins of ours, properly so called. But then, on the other Side, if we consent to any wicked Motion or Inclination, that we feel in ourselves, (let it come in how it will, never so suddenly, never so unexpectedly) if we close with any Thought, that prompts us to Evil, so as to be pleased with it, to delight in it, and to think of pursuing it, 'till it be brought into Action; in that Case, we are no longer to plead our original Corruption; for, in that very Instant, we become actual Sinners, actual Transgressors of the Law of God, whose Obligation extends to our Hearts and Thoughts, as well as our outward Actions; though it must be allowed, we are not so great Transgressors, while our Sin continues in the Thought and Intention only, as when it proceeds to outward Action; for this is the Gradation wherein the Apostle has described it; [d] Every Man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own Lust, and enticed; then, when Lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth Sin, and Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth Death.

II. THIS I take to be the true Measure of that Power and Authority, which God has given us over our Thoughts: And from hence we may, 1. In the first Place, lay it down for a certain Rule, that the Way to secure the Government of them, is to be always upon our Watch, and attending to the first Motions and Workings of our Minds, that whenever we find them tending to any Thing that is forbidden, we may stop and restrain them as soon as we can. We cannot indeed (as we said before) prevent irregular Passions and Desires from arising in our Minds upon sundry Occasions, but this we can do; as soon as we are aware of them, we can refuse our Consent to them, (and in that Case, it is to be hoped, they will not be imputed to us as Sins) nay, not only so, but we can restrain them from breaking out, or shewing themselves in our Words and Actions; for the Motions of our outward Members are all at our Command, though the first Motions of our Minds be not. Here therefore will lie a great Point in the Art of governing our Thoughts. [e] We cannot perhaps, for Instance, prevent a sudden Passion of Anger from rising in our Minds, upon sundry Occasions; but, as soon as we feel this Passion, we can seal up our Mouths, so that it shall not vent itself in unseemly Words; and if we withdraw the Fewel from the new-kindled Fire, it will extinguish of itself; whereas, if we suffer it to break out into bitter Speeches and Expressions, it will flame beyond Measure. The like is to be said of any impure Fancies or Desires, which may be excited in us occasionally. It was not perhaps in our Power to keep them from coming into our Minds, but it is in our Power to withdraw from the Temptation, that occasioned them, and to endeavour to direct our Thoughts to some other Object, or at least, not to proceed one Step in any outward Action towards the Accomplishment of them; and if we take this Course, the Disturbance of our Minds will soon abate, and we return to our ordinary Tempers again.

The Method of governing them.

1. By attending to them at first.

2. IF ever we desire to keep our Thoughts under due Regulation, there are two Things that we must have an especial Care to avoid, Idleness and loose Company; for both of these do strangely unhinge a Man's Mind, disarm it of that Severity, which is its best Defence against evil Thoughts, and expose it, as an easy Prey, to every Temptation that will attack it. Whatever therefore Mens Circumstances and Quality may be, some useful Way or other should be found out, whereby those many Hours, which, for Want of a settled Business, might otherwise be lost or miss-spent, may be expended innocently at least, if not advantageously. And, believe me, what vast Improvements in divers Parts of Knowledge might those Men make, who have Time

2. By avoiding Idleness and bad Company.

[d] James i. 14, 15.

[e] Sharp's Sermons, Vol. I.

Time at their Command, and may enjoy Privacy and Solitude, when, and as long as they please! This however would be the immediate Conſequence: That by keeping the Mind continually exerciſed and employed, it would not be at leiſure to admit unlawful Thoughts into its Preſence; whereas Idleneſs, and having nothing to do, is the Mother of thoſe vain, unprofitable, and ſinful Fancies, wherein ſome Men ſpend their Days. Temptations, alas! too frequently come in our Way, whether we will or no, but the idle Man is forced to ſeek out Temptations for the Shipwreck of his Virtue; and therefore no Wonder, if, in a World ſtored with Variety of ſuch, as are ſuited to every one's Diſpoſition, the Man, that ſeeks for them, finds Abundance; and as he finds Abundance, ſo he is left naked and defenceleſs to every one that comes in his Way. I went, ſays Solomon, by the Field of the Slothful, and by the Vineyard of the Man void of Underſtanding; and lo! it was all grown over with Thorns, and Nettles had covered the Face thereof: For though the Words may be explained in a literal Senſe, yet, as it is uſual for the inſpired Penmen to deſcribe heavenly and ſpiritual Things by ſenſible Repreſentations; ſo is there no Queſtion, but that Solomon had a farther and more noble Deſign in theſe Words: Namely, to ſhew us, that there is nothing more apt to choak and deſtroy the good Seed of Religion, or to contribute to the Growth of all Manner of Sin and Impiety, than an Habit of Idleneſs.

AND truly looſe and impertinent Converſation, which was the other Thing we mentioned, though it looks ſomething with a better Grace, yet it is not of ſo much better Conſequence: For wherever it is much uſed, it will ſo emaſculate a Man's Mind, and take off the Edge and Vigour of it, as to all ſerious Concerns, that he will not eaſily get it into a good Frame again. Evil Communications, ſaith St Paul, corrupt good Manners: And therefore thoſe People, who ſpend a great Part of their Time in gadding up and down, in Play, in Merry-meetings, in telling and hearing idle Stories, and the like, muſt neceſſarily have their Thoughts and Inclinations of the ſame Piece, i. e. very frothy, very light and fooliſh, not to ſay prophane, and wicked, and atheiſtical too, if the Company they converſe with be of that Complexion.

3. By making Religion our chief Concern.

3. IF ever we intend to order our Thoughts to good Purpoſes, above all Things we muſt be mindful to make that the Buſineſs of our Lives, which is indeed our greateſt Concern, and ought therefore to be our principal Deſign. What that is, we need no Detail of Arguments to prove, ſince it is evident to every one, who believes he has an immortal Soul to ſave, that the great Concern of all is to approve himſelf to that God who made him, who diſpoſes of all his Affairs, and who, accordingly as he endeavours, or not endeavours to ſerve him, will make him inconceivably happy, or miſerable to all Eternity. Now, if we be ſo wiſe as really to propoſe the Service of God, and the Salvation of our Souls, as our main End, and reſolve to mind and follow it accordingly, we have made a very conſiderable Step towards the obtaining a Security to ourſelves, that the greateſt Part of our Thoughts and Affections will be ſuch, as are acceptable to God, and ought to be ſatisfactory to ourſelves. For ſince our Natures are ſo contrived, that they muſt always be thinking on ſomething or other, and yet are ſo contrived withal, that we think moſt on that, which is moſt in our Eſteem and Purſuit; whatever it is that we make our main Buſineſs, or place our chief Delight in, upon That will our Thoughts run, upon That will our Deſires, our Inclinations, our Affections be fixed. The Man, for Inſtance, that has ſet his Heart on Money, and makes it the great Buſineſs of Life to become rich, finds it ſo far from being difficult to keep his Mind ſteady to his main Intereſt, as he calls it, that the Difficulty lies in thinking of any other Matter. The Man, that is given up to Pleaſure and Debauch, puts no Force or Violence upon himſelf, in thinking and contriving, all the Day long, how he may bring to paſs the Gratifications of his Luſts and Appetites. Did we but then make the Service of God, and the Attainment of Heaven and Happineſs, as much our Buſineſs, our End, our Deſign, as theſe Men make Wealth and Pleaſures to be theirs, we ſhould certainly be thus affected: The common Courſe of our Thoughts would naturally and eaſily, without the leaſt Conſtraint or Violence, run upon theſe Objects. For I cannot, for my Life, apprehend what Charms there can be in worldly and ſenſual Things, to attract a Man's Mind; what Fetters there can be in them, to bind down the Thoughts, and tie them to themſelves, but that there are the ſame, or much greater in Virtue and Goodneſs; in the Love and Favour of [f] Prov. xxiv, 30, 31.

of God; in a pure Conscience here, and eternal Happiness hereafter; always provided, that they are as much made the Objects of our Choice and Pursuit, as the other.

4. ANOTHER excellent Rule for the good Government of our Thoughts is, that we should live under a constant Sense of God's Presence and Inspection over us. It is impossible to enumerate the several ridiculous Fancies, wherewith the Imagination amuses itself; yet we please ourselves, that whatever the inward State and Disorder of our Minds may be, those, we converse with, know nothing of the Matter. And indeed it is wisely designed by Providence, that we cannot see one another's Thoughts; for if, notwithstanding all the Arts of Hypocrisy and Dissimulation, Men cannot, on several Occasions, forbear to render themselves distasteful and offensive; how intolerable would they appear to one another, if all their vain and aspiring, all their envious and revengeful, all their covetous and carnal Thoughts laid open without Disguise? But in the mean time, that we are so careful, not only to hide our secret criminal Inclinations, but to put on the false Colours of Virtue, he that made the Eye, shall not he see? And, if he do see, shall not he punish? [h] Hell and Destruction are before the Lord, how much more then the Hearts of the Children of Men? 4 By living under a Sense of God's Presence.

THESE are some of the Rules, that are generally prescribed for the good Government of our Thoughts: And to give them a greater Power and Efficacy, there are some particular Exercises, proper to be recommended on this Occasion; such as reading the Holy Scriptures, and other good Books; frequent Meditation on religious Subjects; and above all, devout and constant Prayer to God, that he would be pleased to send his Holy Spirit into our Souls, in order to illuminate our Understandings, and sanctify our Wills: [i] to search us, and know our Hearts; to try us, and know our Thoughts; to see if there be any wicked Way in us, and to lead us into the Way everlasting.

Of Religious Meditation.

UNDER the Government of our Thoughts, may very well be reduced the particular Act or Exercise of Meditation, which consists in a serious Consideration of Matters relating to Religion, that are discovered and set before us, to the End, that we may receive Advantage, by fixing our Thoughts upon them, and thereby becoming more pious and holy: And, in order to explain this Duty, we shall, 1. Observe what are the proper Objects of it; and then, 2. Endeavour to recommend it to Practice, by the Consideration of its Excellence and Usefulness. Meditation, what.

I. MEDITATION is called by the Antients, the Soul's conversing with itself; its contemplating its own Nature, and reflecting upon its own Actions; and therefore the first Work, that it puts us upon, is to consider the inestimable Worth and Value of our immortal Spirits; and what the great Business, for which they were sent into this World, is: To remember, that the State we are now in, is but a State of Trial, in order to another World, and that therefore it nearly concerns us to know, how we are provided for it: To weigh and consider, how frail, how uncertain our Life is, a Vapour, that appears but a little, and then is gone; but that, after Death, most certainly comes Judgment: To represent to our Imaginations the dismal Scene of the last Day; how impartial the Judge is, before whom we must appear; and how severe the Inquisition will be into all our Actions: To ponder it in our Minds, that we shall then be consigned, either to that perfect Bliss and Happiness, which are in the Mansions of Glory, or to that unspeakable Woe and Misery, which is the just Reward of the Impenitent, in the Regions of Darkness: And because the Eternity of those two States is That, which makes the one so desirable, and the other so terrible, it will nearly concern us to be very frequent and serious in our Consideration of what it is to live for ever in the Presence of God, what to live with everlasting Burnings. The proper Objects of it. Ourselves.

THUS our own Nature and Concerns afford us Matter worthy our Meditation, and much more then may we find it in the Nature and Attributes of God: In his God's Nature.

[h] Prov. xv. 11. [i] Psal. cxxxix. 23, 24.

Omnipotence, whereby he created the World at firſt, and continues to maintain it in its Being: In his Omniſcience, whereby he not only takes Notice of all Events, but has a perfect Knowledge of them, before they come to paſs: In his Wiſdom, whereby he ſo governs and diſpoſes of all Things, that they ultimately redound to his Glory, and the Good of Mankind: In his Goodneſs, whereby he ſhews himſelf kind to his Creatures: In his Juſtice, whereby he ſeverely animadverts on thoſe that tranſgreſs his Laws: In his Immenſity, whereby he fills all Places, but is contained in none; and, in his Immutability, whereby he is always the ſame, without any Variableneſs, or Shadow of Change.

His Works of Creation.

THUS the Nature of God gives Scope for our ſublimeſt Thoughts, and moſt exalted Contemplations; and, in like Manner, his Works, whether of Creation, Providence, or Redemption, are the deſerved Objects of our Meditation. "Look up to the "Heavens, (was [k] the Advice of ſome ancient Philoſophers) and obſerve the Or- "der, and conſtant Courſe of the bright Luminaries, placed there, becauſe thoſe "illuſtrious Spectacles are viſible Arguments, and ſhining Demonſtrations of the "greater Glory of him, that made them." Look down upon the Air, the Earth, the Sea, and all the Things contained in them; obſerve their admirable Frame and Compoſition, and the excellent Ends and Uſes for which they were deſigned; nay, obſerve the Make and Contexture of the leaſt and meaneſt Animals, that vaſt Variety of their Kinds, and the wonderful Inſtinct of their Natures; [l] how the Stork knoweth her appointed Time, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow obſerve the Time of their Coming; and [m] by theſe Things, that are made and viſible, the inviſible Things of God, i. e. his eternal Power, and Wiſdom, and Goodneſs will be clearly ſeen and underſtood.

Providence.

FROM the Works of the Creation, we may proceed to thoſe of Providence, and, for ſome Time, dwell upon this comfortable Thought and Reflection, that, notwithſtanding the ſtrange Viciſſitudes, and ſurpriſing Changes, that we may obſerve, God rules among the Children of Men; that [n] the Eyes of all wait upon him, and he giveth them their Meat in due Seaſon; that he openeth his Hand, and ſatisfieth the Deſire of every living Thing, [o] filling their Hearts with Food and Gladneſs: For certainly this common and large Proviſion, which is made for Mankind, may juſtly entertain our Thoughts; and a pleaſant Meditation it needs muſt be to obſerve, how this great Family of the World is, every Day, taken Care of, and ſupplied.

Redemption.

FROM the Works of Providence, we may ſtill advance to a nobler Theme, the Work of our Redemption; and here we ſhall find Occaſion to cry out, with the Apoſtle, O the Depth of the Riches both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God! When we conſider, how, by the wilful Apoſtacy of our firſt Parents, we are all defiled with Sin, and thereby made liable to the Divine Wrath; how our bleſſed Saviour undertook to appeaſe this Wrath, by removing our Pollution and Defilement firſt, then our Guilt and Obnoxiouſneſs to Puniſhment, and ſo putting us in a State of Salvation and Happineſs; how, to effect this, though being the eternal Son of God, he vouchſafed to cloath himſelf with Fleſh, and to aſſume our human Nature; to live a poor obſcure Life, and ſuffer a painful and ignominious Death for our Sake, and in our Stead; how, by his infinite and irreſiſtible Power, he roſe from the Dead in a ſhort Time, after that, aſcended into Heaven, and thence ſent down his holy Spirit, to furniſh his Church with all Gifts and Graces; and, laſtly, how the Aſſiſtance of this Spirit, the Acceptance of our Prayers, the Favour of God, our Adoption, our Juſtification, and eternal Glory in the Manſions above, are all the bleſſed Fruits of this Redemption. Theſe are the great and aſtoniſhing Things, which even the glorious Angels deſire to look into; and much more then is it our Buſineſs and Employment to be thoroughly acquainted with them. And to this Purpoſe another Object of our Meditation is the Word, as well as the Works of God; for there we are entertained with thoſe ſublime Doctrines, thoſe divine and heavenly Truths, which are not to be found in the Volumes of other Authors. There is Hiſtory, the moſt ancient in the World, and on whoſe Authority we may entirely depend: There are Precepts, and Commands, and Rules of Life, ſuch as none of the Maſters of Ethicks could ever preſcribe: There are Promiſes, to ſolace and refreſh our Minds; there are Menaces, to curb our Appetites, and alarm our Fears;

The Word of God.

[k] This, as Antoninus tells us, (Lib. XI.) was the Advice of the Pythagoreans, [l] Jer. viii. 7. [m] Rom. i. 20. [n] Pſal. cxlv. 15. [o] Acts xiv. 17.

Fears; and there, in short, is every Thing, that deserves our Care and Contemplation.

THUS we have chalked out a Path for our religious Meditation, and come now to consider the great Excellency and Usefulness of this Exercise; 1. As it is a Preservative against Evil; and, 2. An Incitement to all Manner of Good.

II. IT is a severe Reflection upon human Nature, that, which the Prophet delivers from the Mouth of God, [p] the Ox knoweth his Owner, and the Ass his Master's Crib, but Israel does not know me; does not take Notice of God, does not observe his Laws, does not obey his Precepts: All his boasted Knowledge and Prerogative of Reason does him no Good; does not make him so observant of his heavenly Master, as the Ox or the Ass are of their Feeders; and the Reason of all follows, my People will not consider: [q] For it is the Want of Consideration, more than Want of Knowledge, that is the great Spring of Men's Disorders. Few are so ignorant, as not to know, that Excess and Drunkenness are great and enormous Crimes, and yet they customarily run into these, because they will not entertain any deliberate Thoughts about the Matter. The common Swearer cannot but have heard, that God will not hold that Person guiltless, who taketh his Name in vain; and yet what he has heard proves of no Use, for Want of a serious Consideration. The unclean Person has frequently been told, that Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge; and yet he continues in his Lewdness, because he gives himself no Time to ponder his Actions: Whereas, did but these several Sinners consider seriously, that [r] at the Revelation of the righteous Judgment of God, he will pour out Indignation and Wrath, Tribulation and Anguish, upon every Soul of Man, that doth Evil; they durst no more stop a Thunderbolt, as it comes roaring from the Clouds, than run into these Perpetrations deliberately, and in cold Blood.

The Excellency of Meditation.

To preserve us against Sin.

[s] THE Reasons of Sin are not so strong, as to carry us to the Commission of it, with a free and voluntary Consent; but the Temptations to it are usually so sudden, that they hurry away our Passions, before Understanding can bethink herself to lay hold on her Reins, and interpose her Authority. Our Souls, in this Case, are like a Ship blown away by a sudden Gust of Wind, while she lies loose from her Anchor; whereas, had her Anchor been cast, she could have stood the Wind, and continued safe in the Harbour. Now Meditation is likewise casting the Anchor: It composes the Passions, and keeps the Soul steady, while she debates the Nature of the Action, that is before her, and, accordingly, as she perceives its Quality is, takes the Resolution either of pursuing, or declining it.

BUT besides the Precipitancy of our Passions, the Devil, we are told, is a great Instrument in prompting us to Wickedness: He is represented in the Parable, as [t] the Enemy, that sows Tares, the Seeds of Evil in our Minds; but then his Seed-Time, we may observe, is, while Men sleep, i. e. while they neglect the Cultivation of their Souls, and are thoughtless: For let Men once enter into sober Thoughts, and take the Shield of Faith, which is no more than the Contemplation of God's Threats and Promises in Hand, and then they have wherewithal to quench the fiery Darts of the Devil. He that thinks ill, prevents the Tempter, and does the Devil's Business for him; he that thinks nothing, tempts the Tempter, and offers him the Possession of an empty Room; but he that thinks religiously, defeats the Tempter, and is proof and secure against all his Assaults.

THE Eagerness of Passion, heightened by the Instigations of Satan, (as we find in the Case of David) will sometimes betray a Man, that, for the main, lives under this Guard, into the Commission of very heinous Offences; but then, his After-Reflections, and looking back seriously on what he has done, with the Help of divine Grace, will as certainly recover him: For to this the Royal Penitent imputes his Restoration; [u] I thought on my Ways, I turned my Feet into thy Testimonies; * I considered well what I had done, and how I had behaved: I made a strict Enquiry into my past Life, and then I began to chide myself for my Folly, and to bewail my Forgetfulness of God and Heaven; and thus I immediately abandoned my former Sins, and, as fast as I could, betook myself to an holy and religious Life; I made Haste, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. And indeed, considering that Religion

To recover us from it.

[p] Isa. i. 3. [q] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. III. [r] Rom. ii. 5, 8, 9. [s] Young's Sermons, Vol. II. [t] Matth. xiii. 25. [u] Psal. cxix. 59. * Edwards, ibid.

Religion has Pleaſantneſs in its Ways, as well as Glory in its End, whereas the Paths of the Wicked, beſet with Briars and Thorns as they are, lead certainly at laſt to the Pit of Deſtruction: It can hardly be preſumed, that Men of any competent Underſtanding ſhould fly from the one, and purſue the other with the Vehemence we find they do, would they but now and then ſtop a little in their Career, breathe a while, and take Time to reflect on their Conduct, and what will be the End thereof.

As therefore we deſire to ſtop up the Sources and Fountains of Sin, to reſtrain our immoderate Paſſions, and defeat the Temptations of our Enemy; to prevent the Acceſſion and Allurements of Vice, or to recover ourſelves to a State of Godlineſs, after we have unhappily fallen from it; we muſt learn the great Act of communing with ourſelves; and, retiring from the Hurry and Buſineſs of the World, be every now and then putting ſuch Queſtions as theſe to our Souls. Dic anima, quo tendis, & in quod dirigis arcum? "Tell me, Soul, what art thou doing? At "what Rate liveſt thou? And whither tends the Level of thy Actions? Haſt "thou the Glory of God, and thy own Salvation in Proſpect? Or elſe ſhooteſt "thou at Rovers, and only beateſt the Air? Life and Death are ſet before thee, "which then of the two deſigneſt thou to chuſe? Wilt thou purſue thy Sins any "longer, or wilt thou betake thyſelf to a Courſe of Religion? On the Side of Religion, there are Troubles indeed, that muſt be undergone; every complexional "Sin, as dear as a Right-Hand or a Right-Eye, muſt be parted with, and ſome Rules "of uneaſy Preſcription muſt be ſubmitted to: But then, in Balance of theſe, "there is the Favour of God, the Joy of the Holy Ghoſt, Peace of Conſcience, "Satisfaction of Mind here, and an exceeding great Reward in Heaven, for all "thy Labour. On the Side of Vice, there are Pleaſures indeed, that the World "much admires and runs into; but then they are attended with the Anger of God, "the Senſe of Guilt, Uneaſineſs of Conſcience here, and terminate at laſt in a "Puniſhment, not to be thought on without Horror. Here is the Option that is "ſet before thee; and therefore, if thou haſt any Reflection left, any Deſire of "Happineſs, any Averſion to Damnation, think on thy Ways, and turn thy Feet unto "God's Teſtimonies."

To excite us to Virtue and Piety.

2. THE other Commendation of religious Meditation is, its great Tendency to the Promotion of good Actions, ſuch as relate to the Practice of Virtue, as well as the Offices of Devotion. Virtue, we are ſure, wants not its Beauty and Attractions, [x] but then its Amiableneſs is not Matter of Senſe: Its chief Benefits are diſtant and future, and the Advantages, whereby it endeavours to engage us, are ſuch, as exiſt only in Contemplation. If therefore we neglect to bring Things diſtant home to us by Thinking; if we neglect to confirm our Minds by the frequent Proſpect of Eternity, and to ſweeten the Uneaſineſs of preſent Things with the Expectation of thoſe that are to ſucceed; it is impoſſible but that Virtue ſhould loſe its Power and Attraction over us, and our Souls run looſe to the Entertainment of any Pleaſures, that more nearly beſet us: It is impoſſible but that either Deſign, or Glory, or Unwillingneſs, or Uneaſineſs, or Regret ſhould creep in, and ſully the very Offices of our Devotion. Offices of this Kind, we know, are not acceptable to God for the outward Work, but only for the Spirit and Affection, with which they are performed; for that warm Love and ardent Deſire, whereof the Fire, that was never to go out upon the Altar of Burnt-Sacrifice, in the Jewiſh Temple, was a very ſignificant Emblem. But now, where ſhall we get this Fire, or from whence ſhall we maintain it? There is ſurely no ſuch Principle to be found in our natural Temper, and it is Folly to expect it from mere Infuſion: The freeſt Irradiations of Divine Grace will never kindle it in us, without the Uſe of proper Means, and theſe Means conſiſt in entertaining good Thoughts and holy Meditations. While I was muſing, ſays the Pſalmiſt, the Fire kindled; for it is Muſing, Thinking, Meditation, that, like a Burning-Glaſs, will gather together, and amaſs the ſcattered Beams of Divine Bounty, which are always round about us, and, darting them into our Soul, will warm our Affections, and kindle the Fire there; which Beams, ſo long as they only lie ſcattered about us, as they always do to the Unthinking, loſe their Influence, and can never adminiſter ſo much Heat, as will make our Altar burn, or our Sacrifice ſend forth a Savour of Acceptance.

THE

[x] Young's Sermons, Vol. II. 3

THE Uſe and Deſign of what has been ſaid on this Subject, is to recommend the Duty of holy Contemplation, and to engage us to allow ſtated Seaſons to meditate on ſacred and religious Matters; to enter into ſerious Conſiderations concerning our future State, and the great and momentous Events of Eternity; often to aſk ourſelves, whether we are in the right Way to Heaven, or purſuing the Paths that lead to Perdition; often to demand of ourſelves, to what Purpoſe we live in the World, what we were deſigned for, why we were made; and then ſee whether we have anſwered theſe Ends in our Lives, whether we have behaved according to the excellent Rules of the Goſpel, and the holy Pattern, which the Author and Finiſher of our Faith hath ſet us. This ſhould be ſome Portion of our religious Exerciſe every Day: And to excite the Performance of it, let it be remembered, that, unleſs we betake ourſelves to ſerious Meditation now, that which at preſent would be a great Bleſſing to us, will hereafter be our Plague and Torment; when Conſcience ſhall awake out of the Sleep, in which we now detain it, and force upon us, whether we will or no, the Conſideration of what we now induſtriouſly labour to forget, our Conduct, and Proceedings in this State of Trial: When the horrid Scene of our ſad Impieties ſhall ſtart up before us at once; [y] when, being ſcourged with the Remembrance of paſt Enjoyments, and terrified with our preſent Paſſions, and groaning under the Conviction of Folly, we ſhall have our Shame and Anguiſh conſummated by Deſpair. [z] Whoſo is wiſe will ponder theſe Things, that, inſtead of knowing the Terrors, they may underſtand the Loving-kindneſs of the Lord. Motives to it.

Of Humility.

UNDER the Government of our Thoughts, may very properly be comprized that Humility of Mind, which conſiſts in a modeſt and lowly Opinion of ourſelves, our Endowments, and Acquiſitions; or in not valuing ourſelves beyond what is due and juſt, upon the Account of any Good we are poſſeſſed of, whether it be internal or external; but, contrariwiſe, in being content, that any one ſhould think meanly and diſparagingly of us; ready to ſubmit our Judgment to the Judgment of others; careful to decline all Fame and Popularity; and ſtudious to conceal our own Praiſes and Excellencies, except when either the Glory of God, or Good of our Brother, are concerned in the Publication. Humility, what.

UNDER this Conſideration the Grace of Humility is oppoſed to Pride and Vainglory; which, however indulged in the Heathen Morals, and accounted a Principle fitted for great Undertakings, in the Revelation of the Divine Will, is utterly exploded, and repreſented as a deteſtable Thing, both in the Sight of God and Man. [a] Every one that is proud in Heart, ſays Solomon, is an Abomination to the Lord; and therefore it might well follow, that though Hand join in Hand, he ſhall not be unpuniſhed: Whereas, [b] to this Man will I look, ſaith the Lord, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite Spirit, and trembleth at my Word. Well therefore might our bleſſed Saviour, who came to correct the wrong Notions of Heathen Moraliſts, as well as fulfil and improve what was contained in the Law and the Prophets, lay the Foundation of his Religion in Humility, and place, in the very Front of his Beatitudes, [c] Bleſſed are the poor in Spirit: Well might he require of his Followers, [d] to walk in Lowlineſs and Meekneſs; [e] to be cloathed with Humility; and [f] in Lowlineſs of Mind, to eſteem others better than themſelves; when though he was a perfect Example of all moral and divine Perfections, yet he commends himſelf chiefly to their Imitation, upon the Account of this excellent Grace of Humility: [g] Learn of me; for I am meek, and lowly of Heart, and ye ſhall find Reſt unto your Souls. A Chriſtian Duty.

AND indeed, [h] whether we conſider him in the Myſtery of his Incarnation, in the mean Circumſtances of his Birth, or in the obſcure Method of his Life; whether we conſider him as emptying himſelf of his eternal Glories, and drawing, as it were, a Cloud over his inherent Brightneſs; as forbidding the Devils, to publiſh his Divinity; Men, to declare his Miracles; and his Diſciples, to ſpeak of his Tranſfiguration; or as waſhing his Diſciples Feet, converſing among Sinners, and, at laſt, chuſing to die between Thieves: Theſe, and many other Inſtances of Condeſcenſion, [y] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [z] Pſal. cvii. 43. [a] Prov. xvi. 5. [b] Iſa. lxvi. 2. [c] Matth. v. 3. [d] Eph. iv. 1, 2. [e] 1 Pet. v. 5. [f] Phil. ii. 3. [g] Matth. xi. 29. [h] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I.

argue the moſt profound Humility, that can be imagined, and ſhew us withal the great Care, our Lord took to exemplify it upon all Occaſions. For though, of all the Virtues and Excellencies in the World, this of Humility, one would think, was leaſt capable of being practiſed by the Son of God; yet we may here diſcern, what rare Arts and Myſteries God has found out, to teach us this Leſſon; and may thence be led to conclude how much it concerns us to know, 1. The Reaſonableneſs and Benefits, as well as, 2. The Means of attaining a Duty, that the Divine Wiſdom has been ſo particularly ſollicitous to teach.

The Reaſonableneſs of it.

I. We uſually think it a very humbling Conſideration, to remind a Perſon of the Meanneſs of his Original: but what Original can be ſo mean, as to be ſprung from nothing? It is enough to take down the Spirit of the brighteſt Intelligence to conſider, that nothing was his Original, a State more vile and diſhonourable, than the Chaos itſelf. Now this is the Condition of Man: He had his Riſe from nothing, and derives his Pedigree, by his Mother's Side, from Darkneſs and Emptineſs; and though, by Omnipotence, he is now become ſomething, yet ſtill he holds his Being as precariouſly, as he firſt received it, and depends as much upon the Will of his Creator for his Exiſtence, as Light does upon the Sun, or the Image in the Glaſs upon the Preſence of the Body: For, if God does but turn his Face from him, and ceaſe to behold him, he immediately, and without any other Influx, relapſes into nothing. And ſhall that Being then be proud, which was once nothing, and has ſtill ſuch a natural Propenſity towards Annihilation, as to need only a bare negative, to make him nothing again? He certainly muſt forget his firſt Extraction, that can give the leaſt Admittance to Pride; and, together with that, muſt forget likewiſe the Method of his Preſervation, if he has not a moſt feeling Senſe of his Dependence and Inſignificancy.

The Folly and Unreaſonableneſs of Pride,

It is a ſtrong Sarcaſm upon human Pride, [k] That which we meet with in the Royal Preacher, where it is ſaid, 'that Pride was not made for Man, nor furious Anger for them, that are born of a Woman; for fancy Pride where we will, it is no where ſo improper, no where ſo incongruouſly placed, as in Man: Not becauſe his Make is only of the common Clay, neither tempered, nor figured, nor tinged more elegantly, than that of other Creatures; as infirm, and putrid, and contemptible, as any of theirs; for this is the leaſt Part of his Abaſement: It is a ſmaller Diſgrace to his Pedigree, that [l] Corruption is his Father, and the Worm his Mother and Siſter, than that Sin is his Off-ſpring. His Make is but common, but his Depravation wholly ſingular: And therefore let the Sea be proud, whoſe Waves know their Bounds; let the Beaſts be proud, who live agreeable to the Laws of their Nature; the Locuſts and Caterpillars, who are God's Armies; the Wind and Storm, that fulfil his Word; but let not Man, the only Rebel in Nature, that ſtands diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the Creation, not ſo much by his Reaſon, as by his Guilt, the only Heir of Wrath, and Shame, and Miſery, let him not be proud; Pride was not made for him.

even on Account of our greateſt Accompliſhments.

"But though this Proſpect of Man be thus abaſing, yet is there not another Light "to conſider him in? Are not the Accompliſhments of Art, and Aids of Fortune, "and much more the Endowments of Wiſdom and Virtue, valuable Things, and "Matters of our juſt Eſteem? And may not the Itch of our Imagination pleaſe "and delight itſelf with theſe?" Theſe Things we allow, indeed, are juſtly eſtimable, but then we aſſert farther, that no Man ought to value himſelf for them; and the Reaſon is, becauſe they are not his, but God's, intruſted only to him, and for which he ſtands accountable; Treaſures and Talents they are, committed to the earthen Veſſel, but yet the Veſſel itſelf is no more than earthen ſtill. It is from a Prejudice of vulgar Miſtake then, that we call any Advantages, ſupervenient to our Nature, by the Name of Acquiſitions, as if the getting of them were imputable to the Glory of our own Counſels and Endeavours. St Paul plainly confutes this Notion, when he directs this Queſtion to the Boaſter; [m] what haſt thou, that thou haſt not received? It is God, that, to the Attainment of all outward good Things, gives both the Means, the Uſe, and the Iſſue; that, to the Attainment of all inward Accompliſhments, gives both the Capacity, the Application, and the Succeſs; that, to the Attainment of all moral Perfections, gives both the Power, the Will, and the [i] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I. [k] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [l] Eccluſ. x. 18. [m] Job xvii. 14. [n] 1 Cor. iv. 7.

the Deed. Nothing is more frequently taught us in Scripture, than that every good and every perfect Gift cometh from above; that of ourselves we can do nothing; that all our Sufficiency is from God. Passages to this Purpose are very numerous, as if the Holy Spirit were more than ordinary jealous of our Incredulity in this Point. But now, if it be asked, why God chuses to dispense good Things to us, rather than suffer us to acquire them; why all our Perfections are Gifts, and why we are so often, and so instantly put in Mind that they are so? The Reason is given in the foregoing Place of the Apostle, Why than dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received? To receive, and to glory, to be obliged, and yet to be proud, is pure Absurdity; as absurd as it were for a Man to think himself rich, merely because he has borrowed a large Sum.

THUS, whether we consider the Original, or Corruption, the Defects, or Accomplishments of our Nature, the greatest possible Humility and Self-annihilation become our reasonable Duty; but this is not all: Our blessed Saviour, who laid the Foundation of his Religion in this spiritual Grace, has told us expressly, that [o] except we be converted, and become as little Children, we shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; but that he, who shall humble himself as a little Child, the same shall be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. By the Kingdom of Heaven, in this Place, may be intended, both the Kingdom of Grace, and the Kingdom of Glory. [p] The Kingdom of Grace is that sweet and gentle Government, which Christ, the Son of God, and King of Saints, does, by his Spirit, exercise over his Followers, and such as have given themselves up to his Conduct: The Kingdom of Glory is the future Reward and Recompence, which God intends to bestow in the celestial Mansions of Bliss, upon all those, that have persevered in their Obedience to his Commands: And so the Words import, that Humility of Mind is highly conducive to make us both truly religious here, and eternally happy hereafter. The Benefits of Humility.

THE Declaration, which God makes by the Mouth of his holy Prophet, is this, —— [q] Thus saith the high and mighty One, that inhabiteth Eternity, whose Name is holy, I dwell in the high and holy Place, and with him also, that is of a contrite Spirit: And, if we would enquire for the Reason, why the Majesty of Heaven vouchsafes this Honour to Spirits of this Complexion, we shall find, that Humility indeed is the true Foundation of Union and Commerce between God and the Soul. [r] For as it implies in its Notion a due Sense of our Want and Insufficiency; so it carries in it the whole Reason of Prayer, and Application, and Dependence upon God: As it implies in it a just Sense of the Divine Bounty, from whence come all our Supplies; so it carries in it the Reason of Praise and Thanksgiving: As it implies a Sense of our own Unworthiness, it is in Effect the same with the Fear of God; a Sense of our Distance, the same with the Honour of God; and a Sense of our Obligation, the same with our Love of God: Of so large an Extent is the Power and Influence of this single Virtue, that, let a Man but take Care to encourage and cultivate it, it will naturally and easily lead him through all the Offices of a religious Life. Nor will it only lead him through these, but fit him likewise for Heaven, and prepare him for the Mansions of the Blessed, where his Poverty of Spirit shall be recompensed with a Kingdom, and his Humility with a Crown; with a Crown incorruptible, that fadeth not away, and whose Glory and Lustre will be equal to the Measure of his Humility and Self-abasement: [s] Humble yourselves therefore, says the Apostle, under the mighty Hand of God, that he may exalt you in due Time; for [t] whosoever shall humble himself, as a little Child, the same shall be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. And therefore,

II. TO come to the Means of attaining this heavenly Grace, let us frequently call to Remembrance the Words of our gracious Lord and Saviour; Blessed are the poor in Spirit: Blessed are they in themselves, as being free from Ambition and Envy, from Anger and Revenge, and all such boisterous and troublesome Passions, as make the arrogant and self-conceited Mind uneasy, and unhappy in the midst of all the good Things that this World can afford: Blessed are they in the Sight of God, who sees their Heart, and sees there the lovely, the amiable, the charming Virtue, he is most enamoured with; a Virtue very resemblant and agreeable to his Divine Nature, who dwelleth on high, and yet humbleth himself to behold the Things in Heaven and Means of attaining it. To consider its Blessedness.

[o] Matth. xviii. 4. [p] Hornick's Sermons, Vol. I. [q] Isa. lvij. 15. [r] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [s] 1 Pet. v. 6. [t] Matth. xviii. 4.

and Earth; and, ſeeing his own Image there, he cannot but [u] have Reſpect unto the Lowly: Bleſſed in the Eyes of Men, who naturally reverence thoſe, that have mean Opinions of themſelves; and therefore the Apoſtle calls this Virtue the Ornament of a meek and quiet Spirit, which not only in the Sight of God is of great Price, but, through its own inward Excellency, commands likewiſe the Love and Reſpect of all, that behold it: Bleſſed amidſt all the Changes and Chances of Life; for while this Grace reigns in his Soul, however deſpiſed or abuſed by wicked Men, God's Spirit hovers over him, Angels viſit and attend him, his own Conſcience juſtifies him, and the Lord Jeſus, that Pattern of all Humility, loves him: But much more bleſſed in the Concluſion of it, when being tranſlated to the City of the living God, the heavenly Jeruſalem, he ſhall enter upon his glorious Inheritance, and there, together [x] with an innumerable Company of Angels, with the general Aſſembly and Church of the Firſt-born, which are written in Heaven, with God, the Judge of all, and with Jeſus, the Mediator of the new Covenant, live in chaſte and pure Delights for ever.

The Miſchiefs of Pride.

2. * To the ſame Purpoſe, let us frequently conſider the ſad and miſchievous Effects of Pride; that this Vice firſt brought Rebellion and Strife into Heaven, and caſt down the Apoſtate Angels thence; that every proud Man robs God of the Honour due to his Providence, erects new Altars to ſtrange Deities, and, by the wildeſt of all Idolatry, burns Incenſe to himſelf; that Pride makes Men haughty and aſſuming in their Carriage, peeviſh and perverſe in their Humour, troubleſome and contentious in Buſineſs, cavilling and captious in Converſation; and is therefore far from gaining the Love and Eſteem of others: But above all, that this is a Vice deſtructive to our Souls, as it covers our lurking Faults, and draws a Veil before our Weakneſſes and Wants; as it prevents all Repentance, and proves a certain Bar to all Improvements: For it ſhuts the Door againſt Admonition and Reproof, forbids the Advice of Friends, and ſilences the Checks of Conſcience. The moſt ſlender Appearances of Virtue it brings near and magnifies, the moſt deformed Blemiſhes it throws off, and leſſens to the Eye, ſo that Deluſion only reigns, and Truth is never received, till ſome awakening Diſpenſation does at laſt, perhaps too late, diſcover the Man to himſelf.

The Humility of others.

3. To the ſame Purpoſe, let us frequently meditate on the Saints of God, thoſe great Exemplars of Humility, that are recorded in the Holy Scriptures: How Abraham, who had the Honour to be ſtiled God's Friend, made no Difficulty to humble himſelf with the Name of [y] Duſt and Aſhes; how Jacob confeſſes himſelf leſs, than the leaſt of God's Mercies; how David acknowledges himſelf [z] a Worm, and no Man; how [a] the great Teacher of the Gentiles, who was taken up into the third Heaven, and had Revelations imparted to him, too glorious for human Tongue to utter, deſcends ſo low as to term himſelf [b] the leaſt of the Apoſtles, not meet to be called an Apoſtle, and what is more, not only leſs than the leaſt of all Saints, but even the chief of Sinners. But above all, let us ſet before us the meek and lowly Jeſus, who, [c] though he was in the Form of God, and thought it no Robbery to be equal with God, yet humbled himſelf to the Form of a Servant, and became obedient unto Death, even the Death of the Croſs. And ſhall not we, for whoſe Sakes all this was done and ſuffered, give Proof of an humble and ſubmiſſive Spirit? Shall not the ſame Mind be in us, which was in our gracious Saviour? Yes, this is our Duty, this our Intereſt; and therefore we will ſet this Pattern always before our Eyes, and, in the conſtant Courſe of our Actions, bear it always in Mind, that Pride in him, who calls himſelf a Chriſtian, is perfectly abſurd, and more intolerable, than in any other Sort of Men, becauſe the Author of the Chriſtian Religion was ſo humble.

Of Chriſt himſelf.

[u] Pſal. cxxxviii. 6. [x] Heb. xii. 23, 24. * Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.
[y] Gen. xviii. 27. [z] Pſal. xxii. 6. [a] 1 Cor. xv. 9. [b] Phil. ii. 6.

SECT.

SECT. I.

Of the Government of our Passions and Affections.

BY the Word [c] Passion we understand, either a strong Tendency of our Souls towards something, that we look upon as very good, and conducive to our Happiness; or a strong Aversion, and Resolution to fly from what we apprehend to be evil and pernicious to us: And this, on both Sides, attended with such a sensible Commotion of the Blood and Spirits, as keeps the Mind much employed upon the present Affair, to the Exclusion of every Thing else, and the Prevention, many Times, of all deliberate Reasoning concerning our Conduct. Passion, what.

IN this Respect therefore it differs from Affection, properly so called; for Affection is the Desire or Aversion we have to any Object, that we conceive to be good or evil, but without any bodily Disorder, and is therefore a simple Modification of the Mind: Whereas Passion is always attended with a violent Motion, in which we feel a Kind of Pain and Uneasiness, whether the Object, that causes it, be good or bad. For we find by Experience, that, in this imperfect State of our Nature, the most agreeable Passion, even that of Joy, has something in it, that overcomes and presses us too close; that causes an Uneasiness in the Midst of Delight, and is sometimes so violent, as to sink us under the Weight of more Happiness, than we can bear. How it differs from Affection.

FOR this Reason I presume it is, that the Stoicks of old looked upon all Passions and Affections (for we take them in a promiscuous Sense) as sinful Perturbations, destructive to the Mind's Tranquillity, and incompatible with the Character of their wise Man. Whereas it is plain, that the God of Nature has given us these Impressions to our great Benefit and Advantage. They are like so many Wings, whereby we are enabled to pursue, and overtake what is our Good, and conducive to our Happiness; and to fly from, and escape what is hurtful, and would tend to our Uneasiness; and are then only culpable, when they are either misplaced upon unworthy Objects, or excessive in Degree, when placed right. Passions not sinful.

THAT Health of Body, Competence of Fortune, the Succour of Relations, Friendships, and the like, are necessary Conveniencies of Life, cannot be denied; and therefore so much Desire of these Things is consistent with Reason and Religion, as is necessary to procure them; so much Joy in the Possession of them, as is necessary to retain them by all honest Methods; so much Anger at those, that invade them, as is necessary to guard them; and so much Sorrow at the Loss of them, as will put us upon all fit Endeavours to recover them: For, without being moved and affected with these Accommodations of Life, it is plain enough, that we should take no Manner of Care of them. Reason indeed is the proper Arbitrator of what is good and evil, but, when Reason has once given its Determination, the Passions are ready to lend us their Assistance. They fix all the natural Spirits, and Thoughts of the Mind strongly upon those Objects, which they excite; and, with a sudden Call, awaken all the Powers of Nature to act agreeably to their Propensions. [d] If the Object be uncommon, and has any Thing in it rare and wonderful, the Passion of Admiration fixes the Mind to consider it with strong Attention; if the Object appears to be good, the Passion of Love determines the Mind to pursue it with Vigour; if it be represented as evil, the Passion of Hatred excites us to use our utmost Skill and Force to avoid it: Amidst the Number of Dangers that do surround us, Fear is a very necessary Principle to keep us always upon our Guard: In a malicious and ill-natured World, Anger is of great Use to protect us from Injury, and make Oppressors fearful to assault us: And, while we are so apt to expose ourselves to many Grievances and Distresses, by our own Folly, it was wisely done in God, to ordain Sorrow to attend all these Distresses, and Shame, some of them, that thereby we might be awakened to renounce our Follies, from the shameful and painful Sense of them. And, in like Manner, the more pleasing Affections of Nature, such as Hope, and Love, and Joy, make Life more comfortable, and the Troubles of it more tolerable, Useful.

[c] Bragge, on the Passions. [d] Clagget's Sermons, Vol. II. [e] Watts, on the Passions.

as well as give a grateful Reliſh and Delight to all the difficult Duties of Virtue and Godlineſs, by their being mixed up in our Conſtitution.

Were inherent in Chriſt,

OF ſuch ſingular Uſe to the Purpoſes of Life are the Paſſions and Affections, both pleaſant and painful, which God has implanted in our Nature; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find our bleſſed Saviour, in whom the Perfection of it was conſpicuous, expreſſing, upon all Occaſions, the ſame Love and Deſire, the ſame Anger and Averſion, the ſame Fear and Hope, and the ſame Sorrow and Joy, which we find in ourſelves; with this only Difference, that what in us is ſo often exorbitant, in him was always free from any irregular Perturbation: For [f] it behoved him, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, to be made in all Things, like unto his Brethren; [g] to be touched with the Feeling of our Infirmities, and, in all Points, to be tempted like as we are, yet without Sin, that he might be a merciful, as well as a faithful High-Prieſt, in Things pertaining to God.

and ſhall abide with us in our glorified State.

IT is vain and abſurd Advice therefore, which ſome Sages have given us, to endeavour to ſuppreſs our Paſſions, by ſetting one to depoſe and deſtroy another: For, beſides the perpetual Tumults, that this Method would occaſion, our Paſſions cannot be deſtroyed: They are inherent in our Nature; they are indelible and inſeparable from it; inſomuch [h], that even in the World of Spirits, when our Souls ſhall be in a State of Separation, (much more, when our Bodies ſhall be re-united to them at the Reſurrection) we ſhall have ſuch joyous or dolorous Perceptions, as are ſuitable to the State and Condition we are in, whether happy or miſerable; and theſe Perceptions will be continually increaſing to all Eternity, as the Cauſes and Objects of them make new and ſtronger Impreſſions. In one reſpect indeed, theſe Impreſſions cannot ſtrictly be called Paſſions, becauſe there can be no extraordinary Commotion of the Blood and Spirits, in a State, wherein even our Bodies ſhall be ſpiritualized; yet there is no Doubt, but that we ſhall be infinitely more affected with the Objects of the other World, whether good or evil, and thereby feel either ſuch Confuſion and Diſorder, or ſuch Joy and Delight in our Souls, as will make us, beyond Compariſon, more happy, or more miſerable, than it is poſſible for us to be in this. It is not our Paſſions then that we are to deſtroy; for that we cannot: They will laſt, the chief of them at leaſt, will laſt as long as we have our Being, and be inſtrumental to our future, as well as preſent, happy or unhappy Condition; but it is the Extravagancy of them, that we are to reduce to good Order, and bring under the Government of Reaſon and Religion: And to this Purpoſe we ſhall obſerve, 1. What it is to regulate our Paſſions and Affections; 2. The great Benefits and Advantages of doing this; and 3. What Rules and Conſiderations may be conducive hereunto.

To regulate our Paſſions is to place them upon proper Objects.

I. THOUGH our Paſſions and Affections, eſpecially in the Riſe and firſt Workings of them, are very little ſubject to the Command of our Will; yet they depend, in ſome Meaſure, upon the Perceptions of our Minds. [i] We are ſo conſtituted by Nature, that, as ſoon as we form the Idea of certain Objects or Events, our Deſire or Averſion will immediately take the Alarm; and, conſequently, our Affections muſt very much depend upon the Opinions we form concerning any Thing that occurs to our Minds, its Qualities, Tendencies, and Effects. Thus Love is occaſioned by the Conception of good Qualities, Hatred by the Apprehenſion of the contrary in any Object; Fear ariſes from the Opinion of Power and Inclination to hurt us; Pity, from the Senſe of another's undeſerved Miſery; and Shame, from the Suppoſition of another's Contempt of us. A great Part therefore of the Government of our Paſſions will conſiſt, in forming right Notions of what we call Good and Evil: For, if we are miſtaken herein, and look upon that as a great Good, which is in Reality a deſtructive Evil, or that as a formidable Evil, which is, in Truth, a very valuable Good; it is plain, that our Paſſions will be moſt wretchedly miſplaced, and as we ſhall love, and deſire what we ſhould by all Means avoid, ſo ſhall we hate, and fly from what deſerves our Love and Purſuit; and, in Conſequence of this, we ſhall inevitably and ſpeedily bring Ruin upon ourſelves, by thoſe very Methods, which we thought would have made us happy.

To reſtrain them from being exceſſive.

THE only Way then to prevent all this Miſchief is, to begin upon a new Bottom, to go upon new Principles of Action; to rectify our Notions of Good and Evil, to engage our Affections upon their proper Objects, and, even where they are laudably placed, there to reſtrain them from being exceſſive. To this Purpoſe, we muſt not rejoice at Paſſages, [f] Heb. ii. 17. [g] Ibid. iv. 15. [h] Bragge, on the Paſſions. [i] An Eſſay, on the Nature and Conduct of the Paſſions and Affections.

Passages, that should be resented with Grief; nor delight in Things, which we are bound to detest; nor be angry at Things, wherewith we should be pleased; nor be too eager and hot in the Pursuit of any worldly Advantage, too much transported, when we have attained it, or too much concerned, when we are disappointed of it. The Kingdom of God and his Righteousness are what we must first of all seek; God we must above all Things love; publick we must prefer before private Good; never be angry without a just Cause; never resent an Affliction beyond its Weight: In Matters of worldly Joy, never be greatly transported; and, on Occasions of worldly Grief, never be dejected beyond Measure.

To govern them all.

THUS to place our Affections upon proper and deserving Objects, and to make them commensurate to the Value of the Objects, upon which they are engaged, is a great Step towards our Regulation of them: [l] But then we must remember, that all our Affections, the merry and chearful, as well as the painful and angry ones, are to be kept under this Controul, that the Mind may not be too much depressed with the latter, nor foolishly elated and transported with the former. For he only is the Man, that may be truly said to rule his own Spirit, who neither sinks under Affliction, nor is puffed up with Prosperity; who is not only secure from being fretted with grievous Anger, and torn with Revenge and Envy; but is moreover not enslaved with Lust, nor lifted up with Pride, nor estranged from God by the Idolatry of Covetousness, and the bewitching Love of the sensual Pleasures: Who, in short, has all his Passions under an habitual Governance, being at all Times provided against desiring insatiably, and grieving immoderately, and being angry unreasonably; at all Times prepared against all Accidents, and armed against all Temptations, by long Consideration, much Resolution, and great Experience of himself. And so we proceed,

The Mischiefs of not ruling our Passions, &c.

II. To consider some of the Benefits and Advantages of ruling our Passions in this Manner. The wise Man has a very remarkable Proverb; [m] He that has no Rule over his own Spirit, is like a City that is broken down, and without Walls; a City in this Condition will be liable, at all Times, to be entered by any Army, that beleaguers it; and what Havock an Enemy, with this Advantage, may be enabled to make, is no great Difficulty to imagine: And, [n] in like Manner, as long as we live in this World, there will be Provocations, Temptations to Lust, and Revenge, and Envy; there will be Crosses and Disappointments; there will be doubtful and suspected Sayings; there will be Fewel for our Passions administered in great Abundance, wherever we converse, or have any Business to transact: And therefore for a Man to have no Rule over his Spirit, is to be exposed to the perpetual Torment either of furious Wrath, or gnawing Envy, or bitter Sorrow, or miserable Fear, or impatient Desire, &c. which, besides the Uneasiness, they give to the Mind, do seldom fail to shake the Constitution of the Body; to waste the Flesh, and sour the Blood, and poison the Spirits; and by that Means impair the Health, bring on Diseases, and shorten the Compass of Man's Life. But well were it for us, if the Consequence of unruly Passions were only felt in this Life: The sad Consideration of all is, that, by the Influence of these, we contract a vast Heap of Guilt, and are liable to the angry Justice of God, whose Authority we all the while contemn, and whose just and holy Precepts we break: For every Excess of Passion, and every wrong Use of our Affections are so many Violations of the Laws of God, which, without a sincere and timely Repentance, will make all, that are guilty of them, endlessly miserable in the World to come.

The Benefits of doing it, as to Peace of Mind.

ON the contrary, he, who has got the Rule and Dominion over his Passions and Affections, is like a City, whose Walls are compleat, and so regularly fortified, that they despise the rudest Assaults of the most desperate and enraged Enemy; or rather is like the Steddiness of a Rock, which holds its Place, and is immoveable, though never so violent and boisterous Waves beat furiously against it. The Blandishments of Sense are no Allurements to him, because he has learnt [o] that external Pleasures are short and transitory, leave no agreeable Reflection, and are no Manner of Advantage to us, when they are past. The Disappointments of Life make no uneasy Impression upon him, because he remembers, that all Things of this Nature are under the Appointment of wise Providence, which in other Respects has been abundantly bountiful to him, and [p] shall we receive Good at the Hand of God, and not

[l] Clagget's Sermons, Vol. II. Nature and Conduct of the Passions.
[m] Prov. xxv. 28.
[n] Clagget, ibid.
[o] An Essay, on the
[p] Job ii. 10.

not receive Evil? The Apprehenſion of Pains ſits light upon him, becauſe he conſiders, that, if they be violent, they will probably be ſhort; if not, they are mixed with long Intervals of Eaſe, and that, when they are quite paſt, they leave no unpleaſant Reflection: Nay, the very Proſpect of Death, of a violent and unnatural Death, for the Sake of Righteouſneſs, loſes its Terror, upon Thoughts of the Honour and Approbation to be expected from God, and good Men, as well as their own Conſciences, if they continue firm; and, on the contrary, the Remorſe, Shame, and Fear of future Puniſhment, if their Hearts ſhould fail them, when they come to the Conflict, and have not Courage enough to reſiſt unto Blood.

And the Offices of Religion.

THUS is the Man, who, by Reaſon and Reflection, has taught himſelf the Art of ruling his Paſſions, to all the Temptations, both of Pleaſure or Pain, that do everywhere ſurround him, inacceſſible. And, if we proceed to the more immediate Offices of Religion, we ſhall find that the Thing, which occaſions the Practice of Virtue and Piety, to be ſo uneaſy and irkſome to us, is not ſo much their Contrariety to the Temper of our Minds, as the ill Uſe we have made of our natural Powers, and their Pre-engagment to Vice: Becauſe, when we are once come to ourſelves, and have reduced our Affections to their natural Order, Religion then will become agreeable to us, and the Service of God our perfect Freedom. For [q] how plain and ſmooth will our Way then lie before us, and what inconceivable Delight ſhall we take in walking in it, when, by the Grace of God, and the Aſſiſtance of his good Spirit, we are come to that happy Paſs, as to have no Errors or Extravagancies in our Paſſions and Affections, but find all their Motions regular and right: When we ſhall admire and love, deſire and hope for nothing with great Earneſtneſs, but to be like God, and his Divine Son, our bleſſed Redeemer, in Purity and Holineſs here, that ſo we may become capable of the bliſsful Enjoyment of them hereafter: And, in the mean Time, rejoice in nothing ſo much, as in the Teſtimony of a good Conſcience; hate nothing ſo much as Sin, which indeed is the greateſt and moſt deſtructive Evil; dread nothing ſo much, as to be ſurprized and overcome by it in any Inſtance; and find ourſelves never ſo deeply affected with Sorrow and Compunction of Spirit, as when we have been ſo unhappy, as to be betrayed into it; When our Paſſions, I ſay, are brought into this Courſe and Channel, they will flow ſilently and ſmoothly on, and ſerve, like Oars and Sails, to bring us to the Enjoyment of our ſupreme Good; which we ſhall then purſue with Vigour, but without Perturbation; and with a ſwift and even Motion, without the extravagant Excurſions, and violent Agitations and Dangers, that attend Hurricanes and Storms. And therefore,

Rules to this Purpoſe.

III. To lay down ſome Rules for the Acquiſition of this good Government of our Paſſions, one of our principal Cares muſt be, to reſiſt them in the Beginning, before they become inordinate; to check and rebuke all malicious and revengeful, all unclean and laſcivious, all covetous and repining Thoughts, at their firſt ſtarting up in our Minds; becauſe there is no dallying with corrupt and impure Imaginations, nor any knowing how great a Fire, a ſmall Spark of this Nature, when let alone, may be able to kindle. To the ſame Purpoſe, it may be adviſeable, [r] to inure ourſelves to croſs our Paſſions, when there is no Danger, and to reſtrain our Appetites ſometimes from ordinary and lawful Enjoyments, that we may do it with more Eaſe, when dangerous Temptations ſhall aſſault us: And withal it will be neceſſary to fly all Occaſions, that may incenſe the Paſſion, whereunto we are naturally inclined: For can a Man take Fire in his Boſom, and his Cloaths not be burnt? Or, if he willingly goes into the Company of infected Perſons, can he blame any but himſelf, if he falls into their Diſeaſes? Our more particular Vigilance muſt therefore be employed againſt that Sin, which does ſo eaſily beſet us; againſt that Paſſion, which we muſt have leaſt in our Power, becauſe it ariſes moſt from our Complexion; always remembering to make it our ardent Supplication to God, that he, who giveth Wiſdom liberally, and upbraideth not, would teach us the Wiſdom of governing our Paſſions, and, by the Strength and Aſſiſtance of his bleſſed Spirit, give us the Victory over them; that, paſſing our Lives in all Peace and Quietneſs, we may, in the Concluſion of them, be found * meet to be Partakers of the Inheritance of the Saints in Light, and to be conducted into that happy Place, where the [q] Bragge, on the Paſſions. [r] Medi's Works, Book I. * Col. i. 12.

the War between the Law in our Minds, and the Law in our Members, between the Dictates of our Reaſon, and the Propenſities of our Paſſions, will expire in an everlaſting Peace.

Of Meekneſs.

OF all the Paſſions that God has implanted in our Nature, that, which occaſions the greateſt Perturbation, and is therefore more peculiarly called Paſſion, is Anger. Anger however, as [t] we had Occaſion to obſerve before, is not always culpable: It is only ſo indeed, when it either ariſes from an unwarrantable Cauſe, or proceeds to an exceſſive Degree; and this the Evangelical Grace of Meekneſs is deſigned to reſtrain: For Meekneſs is that Temper or Diſpoſition of Mind, whereby a Man ſo moderates and commands the Paſſion of Anger, as not to be carried to any ſuch Exceſs of it, as may either diſcompoſe himſelf, or injure his Neighbour. After therefore we have, 1. Shewn the Nature and Unreaſonableneſs of this Duty; we ſhall, 2. Suggeſt ſome Conſiderations, that may be of Uſe to enforce the Practice of it. Meekneſs, what.

I. [t] AMONG all our natural Paſſions, there is none, wherein both our own and our Neighbour's Happineſs is ſo often, and ſo much concerned, as in That of Anger; So often, becauſe it is a Thing of daily Incurſion; and ſo much, becauſe it endangers the Strength and Stability both of private and publick Peace, and, conſequently, ſuch a due Moderation of this Paſſion, as may ſecure both, is a very conſiderable Inſtance of that Charity, which the Apoſtle tells us is the fulfilling of the Law. The Jewiſh Law indeed, which admitted of a Retaliation of Injuries, made little or no Proviſion for this Virtue, which was equally excluded from the Syſtem of Heathen Morals; but our bleſſed Saviour, who came to advance human Nature to its utmoſt Perfection, makes Humility and Meekneſs the two great Fundamentals of his Religion. Come unto me, ſays he, and learn of me; but what are we to learn? Not to make Worlds, not to cure the Sick, not to reſtore Sight to the Blind, or Life to the Dead; but learn of me; for I am meek, and lowly in Heart. But why did our Lord propoſe theſe Virtues only to our Imitation? Was it becauſe he had no other, or becauſe he excelled in theſe above the reſt? In him dwelt the Fulneſs of the Godhead, which is not conſiſtent with the Abſence of any one Virtue; and though, as to the outward Exerciſe, he might be more remarkable for one, than another, according as Opportunities or Circumſtances might require; yet, as to the inward Habits and Diſpoſitions themſelves, he was equally perfect in them all; and therefore the Reaſon, why he recommends only theſe two to his Followers, muſt be partly becauſe he was the only Maſter, that could teach them, and partly becauſe there was ſome ſpecial Excellency in the Virtues themſelves, above any other of the Chriſtian Law; and therefore we find him comprizing the whole under theſe two Articles, [u] Take my Yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek, and lowly in Heart. A Chriſtian Virtue.

AND indeed, if we attend a little to the Story and Proceſs of his Life, we ſhall ſoon ſee, that never was any Man's Meekneſs ſo tried, as was his. For as the real Excellence and Dignity of his Perſon heightened every Affront, and rude Treatment of him, to an incomparable Degree; ſo did the outward Lowneſs and Meanneſs of his Condition expoſe him to an infinite Number of them, and yet, notwithſtanding the Number and Heinouſneſs of his Provocations, we do not find, that he was ever in the leaſt diſcompoſed, or put into a Paſſion by them. Moſes indeed was a Man ſo very eminent for this Virtue, that the Scripture gives us this Character of him, [*] that he was very meek, above all the Men, which were upon the Face of the Earth; and yet we find, that, with all his Meekneſs, he could not bear with the Perverſeneſs of that untractable People, the Jews, who, as the Pſalmiſt's Obſervation is, [x] ſo provoked his Spirit, that he ſpake unadviſedly with his Lips. Now our bleſſed Lord had to deal with the ſame Generation of Men, but under infinitely greater Prejudices and Diſaffections: From them he ſuffered more Indignities, than ever could be offered to Moſes; and yet none of their ill Uſage raiſed any angry Re- The Example of Chriſt herein.

 ſentment

[t] See Page 422. [u] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. I. [u] Matth. xi. 29. [*] Numb. xii. 3. [x] Pſalm cvi. 33.

ſentment in him, though they did it in thoſe, that ſtood by, and beheld his Abuſes. Thus the Unkindneſs of the rude Samaritans could not ſo much as ſtrike a Spark into his Divine Breaſt, when, at the ſame Time, it made his two zealous Diſciples, James and John, kindle to that Degree, as to deſire [y] Fire from Heaven, to conſume them: And, in like Manner, the rough Seizure of his ſacred Perſon by the Soldiers could not extort from him ſo much as an angry Look, when yet the very Sight of it [z] made his warm Diſciple draw his Sword. If I have ſpoken Evil, bear Witneſs of the Evil; but if well, why ſmiteſt thou me? is all the Anſwer, that he returned to the inſulting Officer, who ſtruck him. What could be ſaid more mild or diſpaſſionate? What could argue a more ſedate and well-governed Spirit? His greateſt Apoſtle, when under a leſs Provocation, had not this Command over himſelf; for, being not actually ſmitten, but only ordered by the High-Prieſt to be ſo treated, he returns him this ſharp and ſevere Anſwer, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited Wall; for ſitteſt thou to judge me after the Law, and commandeſt me to be ſmiten contrary to the Law? There is not indeed any Thing in this Anſwer, but what may be juſtified by the Oddneſs of the Provocation; but yet we cannot but perceive a great Difference between the Behaviour of the Maſter and the Diſciple, though this is far from being the higheſt Inſtance of his Meekneſs. To have a due Eſtimate of that, we muſt look upon him under the Shame, and Diſhonour, and Torments of the Croſs, encountering at once with the Pains and Agonies of Death, the Contradictions of Sinners, and the Vengeance of Almighty God, and all this, without any the leaſt Shew of Impatience or Diſcompoſure; and then we ſhall find the Prediction of the Prophet verified to the full; [a] He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his Mouth; he was brought as a Lamb to the Slaughter, and as a Sheep before her Shearers is dumb, ſo he opened not his Mouth.

The Excellency of this Virtue.

AND it was fit indeed that our bleſſed Saviour, both by his Precept and Example, ſhould recommend a Virtue to us, which proceeds from a Greatneſs and Generoſity of Mind, and is itſelf a noble Atchievement; for [b] he that is ſlow to Anger, is better than he that is mighty, and he that ruleth his Spirit, than he that taketh a City: A Virtue, [c] which is an Enemy to Pride and Arrogance, to Contention and Turbulency, to Moroſity and Peeviſhneſs, to Reviling and Cenſuring, and whatever is the Product of a bitter and cholerick Spirit: A Virtue, which is fitted to all the Purpoſes of our Lives, and requiſite in all Degrees and Conditions of Men; in Superiors, that they may rule with Affection; in Inferiors, that they may behave with Submiſſion; in Parents, that they provoke not their Children to Wrath; and in Children, that they obey their Parents in all Things; in the Rich, that they be not puffed up with Pride; in the Poor, that they do not ſwell with Envy; in thoſe of mature Age, that they be not moroſe and froward; in thoſe that are young, that they ſhew Reverence to their Elders; and, in ſhort, in all, that they bring Honour to their Religion and Holy Profeſſion. This is a Virtue, which, in the Sight of God, is an Ornament of great Price; which gains us the Good-will and Favour of Men; which conquers the Malice and Prejudice of Enemies; which allays all Storms and Tempeſts in our Breaſts; which gives us the quiet Enjoyment of ourſelves, and a true Reliſh of what we poſſeſs; and in this Senſe we may properly enough underſtand the Words of our Saviour, [d] Bleſſed are the Meek, for they ſhall inherit the Earth.

THE Meek indeed, we may generally obſerve, are far from having the largeſt Share of this World's Plenty: It is to the bold and daring, the furious and boiſterous, that Things of this Nature are uſually allotted: Theſe are they, that proſper in the World, and have Riches in Poſſeſſion; nor can it be imagined, that our bleſſed Lord, who himſelf made Choice of a State of Poverty, who recommends ſo earneſtly a Contempt of the World, warns us of the Danger of Riches, and diſſuades us from laying up Treaſures on Earth, ſhould ever pronounce a meek Man bleſſed, merely for having Abundance of Wealth. The Senſe of the Words therefore muſt relate to the Manner of poſſeſſing, rather than the Greatneſs of the Poſſeſſions, and ſo muſt import,——that the meek Man ſhall enjoy what he has, be it little, or be it much, with Comfort and Satisfaction of Mind, being prepared to acquieſce in every Diſpenſation of Providence, and to confine his Wants and Deſires to his preſent Circumſtances; whereas thoſe of a contrary Diſpoſition, though they may poſſeſs a great deal, may yet yet be truly said to enjoy little or nothing: And this seems to be the Sense of the Psalmist, when, in Words directly parallel to these of our Lord, he tells us, that [e] the Meek-spirited shall possess the Earth, and be refreshed in the Multitude of Peace, i. e. they have Pleasure and Content in whatever they have; for, as he immediately subjoins, a small Thing, that the Righteous has, is better than great Riches of the Ungodly. Which leads us to observe,

[y] Luke ix. 54. [z] Matth. xxvi. 51. [a] Iſa. liii. 7. [b] Prov. xvi. 32, [c] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. III. [d] Matth. v. 5.

II. WHAT may be of Use to engage the Practice of this Duty. And to this Purpose, it will be requisite for us frequently to consider, where we are, whom we converse with, and what is our main Concern. We live in a troublesome and tempestuous World; we converse with Men of corrupt Natures, and evil Dispositions; our main Business and Concern lies in a distant and heavenly Country; and therefore we must not affect Ease and Tranquillity here, we must not expect to gather Grapes from Thorns, or Figs from Thistles. It is impossible but that Offences should come; but then, when they come, we have wherewith to rebate their Sting, by considering, that this is the common Fate of human Life; that every Thing is sent upon us by the Providence of God; and that by his wise Appointment it is, that thro' many Trials and Tribulations we must enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Means of attaining it.

To the same Purpose, it may be proper frequently to reflect on the horrid Deformity, and mischievous Consequences of immoderate Anger; [f] what Agonies of Mind, what Disorder of Spirits, what desperate Absurdities of Behaviour, what Fury and Phrenzy it hurries Men into; what rash Oaths, what horrible Imprecations, what blasphemous, nay, what senseless Profanation of God's most holy Name; what Virulence of Expression, what base divulging of Secrets, what Injuries and Violations of intimate Confidences, which are sure to be contemned ever after, but, perhaps, can never be repaired again. These Things are so notorious, and so incident to the Passion of Anger, that I verily believe, no Man ever saw another violently transported with it, who did not either pity or despise him; and that none was ever so transported himself, who did not commit something, whereof he did not find sufficient Cause, upon second Reflection, both to repent and be ashamed of. But, on the other Hand, [g] how calm is the Mind, how serene the Countenance, how mild the Language, how engaging the Behaviour, how sweet the Sleep, how grateful the Repast, how prosperous the spiritual Estate, how happy and delightful the whole Life of him, that has brought his angry Passions under Subjection; that is at Peace with himself, and at Peace with the whole World; that is neither devising Mischief against others, nor suspecting any to be contrived against himself! So true is the Observation of the wise Man, that [h] he, who is slow to Anger, is of great Understanding, but he, that is hasty of Spirit, exalteth Folly.

BUT, above all, the Folly or Wisdom of these different Tempers will then appear, when this short Scene of Things shall be shifted; when we shall be removed into an immortal World of Spirits, and have, each of us, our Souls sorted into their proper Place and Company; when the Proud and Arrogant, the Peevish and Quarrelsome, shall be consigned to the sad Abode of Spirits of their own Complexion, there to wrangle out a long Eternity in perpetual Feuds and Contentions, in perpetual vexing and tormenting one another; while the Meek and Gentle, the Quiet and Peaceable, shall be received into the Society of heavenly Lovers, into the Regions of Peace and Tranquillity, and into the Bosom of that blessed Jesus, who, in our own Nature, set us the Example of this most excellent Virtue, that we might follow his Steps.

To this Purpose therefore let it finally be considered, that, how mean and despicable a Figure soever the Man of a meek and pacifick Temper may seem to make in this World of Tumult and Confusion; yet [i] the Time will come, when Persons, that have raised the greatest Noise and Bustle, those Sons of Thunder and restless Intrigue, that have laid the World waste, and turned it upside down, to gratify their boundless Ambition, and ungoverned Appetites, shall take up the Sentiment of the wise Son of Syrach, and say, This is he, whom we had sometimes in Derision, and for a Proverb of Reproach, i. e. looked upon him as an easy and good-natured Fool: We Fools, then it shall be, accounted his Life Madness, and his End to be without Honour; but how is he now numbered among the Children of God, and his Lot is among the Saints!

Of

[e] Psal. xxxvii. 11, 16. [f] Stanhope, on the Epistles and Gospels, Vol. III. [g] Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [h] Prov. xiv. 29. [i] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I.

Of Contentment.

Contentment, what.

UNDER the Regulation of our Paſſions and Affections, we may not improperly place the Art of Contentment, [k] which conſiſts in ſuch an Acquieſcence and good Pleaſure in that Condition of Life, wherein the Providence of God has placed us, as will not ſuffer the Deſire of Change to trouble our Spirit, and diſcompoſe our Duty; as will engage us to entertain all Occurrences of Life, and even the ſevereſt Diſpenſations of Heaven, not only with Patience and Submiſſion, which was a Point inſiſted on [l] before, not only with Calmneſs and Compoſedneſs, which may proceed ſometimes from a Stupidity of Temper, but with a real Complacency and Chearfulneſs of Mind; [m] counting it all Joy, as the Apoſtle terms it, when we fall into divers Temptations; becauſe we know the trying of our Faith worketh Patience, and, if Patience have her perfect Work, ſhe will make us perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

To diſcover the Reaſonableneſs then of being habitually well-pleaſed with our State and Condition, of what Kind ſoever it be, let us,

The Reaſonableneſs of it.

From the Conſideration of God's Bounty.

I. LOOK up to God, in whom we live, move, and have our Being; and in him conſider the ample Proviſion he has made for our Neceſſities. Our Neceſſities indeed, if we conſult Nature, are not many; [n] the chief Things for Life, as the Son of Syrach computes them, are Water, and Bread, and Cloathing, and an Houſe to cover Shame; and of theſe the Generality of Mankind are not deſtitute: [o] For tho' they may not have them poured into their Laps by Birth-right and Inheritance, yet they have them by their daily Induſtry and Acquiſition, which, perhaps, is as good a Tenure. The great Apoſtle St Paul, tho' he might have exacted a Maintenance of the Church, in Behalf of his Miniſtry, yet thought himſelf rich enough, while he was able to work for his Living. He rejoices, indeed, in the Love of the Philippians, who had been ſo kind, as to make a Contribution for him; but he takes Care to inform them, that he did not rejoice ſo much, becauſe they had made him rich, as becauſe they had done their Duty, and were rich in good Works: [p] Not that I ſpeak in Reſpect of Want, ſays he, for I have learned, in whatſoever State I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abaſed, and I know how to abound; every-where, and in all Things, I am inſtructed, both to be full, and to be hungry, both to abound, and to ſuffer Need: Nevertheleſs, ye have well done, in that ye did communicate with my Affliction.

THE moſt diſconſolate State is that of Sickneſs or Old-Age, in Conjunction with Poverty; [q] but even here God has made a competent Proviſion, by aſſigning all ſuch, as have this double Load upon them, to the Care and Relief of the Rich. Theſe he has made his Proxies and Repreſentatives upon ſuch Occaſions; and tho' many of them ſcandalouſly falſify their Truſt in this Regard, yet, in all Parts, there are ſome ſcattered here and there, like Cities of Refuge in the Land, whereunto thoſe, that are in Want and Diſtreſs, may ſeaſonably fly for Succour; inſomuch, that, what with the legal Proviſions that are made in this Caſe, and what with the voluntary Contributions of the Charitable, few, very few, I hope, want the Things that are abſolutely neceſſary; which [r] the Apoſtle comprizes in the ſmall Compaſs of Food and Raiment, and propoſes them as Materials ſufficient for Content: For as it is an eaſier Thing to ſatisfy the Cravings of an hungry, than to cure the Squeamiſhneſs of a ſurfeited Stomach; ſo certainly the Diſcontents of the Poor are much eaſier allayed, than thoſe of the Rich. The Indigence of the one has contracted his Deſires, and taught him to look no farther, than a little beyond bare Neceſſaries; ſo that a moderate Alms ſatisfies, and a liberal one tranſports him: But he, who, by perpetual Repletion, has his Deſires ſtretched and extended, is capable of no ſuch Satisfaction. In ſhort, [s] he, who can put an End to his Wiſhes, (as the contented Man always does) with the ſame Labour puts an End to his Uneaſineſs too; for Uneaſineſs is the natural Motive of Deſire, and, reciprocally, he, whoſe Deſires are ſatisfied, has all the Happineſs, that that is attainable in this Life. It is to be obſerved farther of the Bleſſings of God, that the greater and more ſubſtantial they are, the more they are in Number, and of common Uſe. The four Elements, of Fire, Water, Air, and Earth, are appointed to ſupply every Man's Occaſions and Needs. The whole Hoſt of Heaven, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, [t] are by God divided to all Nations. The Sun ſhines as bright on the the poor Cottage, as on the moſt magnificent Palace; and the Stars have their benign Aſpects, as well for him, that [u] is behind the Mill, as for him, that ſitteth on the Throne. All our Senſes, all the Members of our Bodies, all the Powers and Faculties of our Souls, which, by the Bleſſing of God, moſt of us enjoy perfect and entire, are not only more in Number, but of far greater Value, than what we fancy we want, in order to our Happineſs. [*] For, is not the Life more than Meat, ſays our Saviour, and the Body than Raiment? Take no Heed therefore for your Life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink; nor yet for your Body, what ye ſhall put on: [x] "Hath not God "beſtowed upon you that which is infinitely better than all thoſe Things, about "which you are wont to be ſo ſollicitous? And will he deny you the leſs, who has "granted you the greater Boon? Doth not your Heavenly Father know that ye have "Need of theſe Things? And would he have made you with theſe Needs of Meat, "Drink, and Raiment, had he not likewiſe taken Care to ſupply them? What is "Houſe or Cloathing, if you look upon the curious Fabrick of your Body, which "he hath reared? Or, what is Food, in Compariſon of that noble Life, which you "feel yourſelves inſpired with? Without all Controverſy, he will never ſuffer you to "want ſuch ſmall Things, who already has been ſo liberal in beſtowing greater Bene-"fits; eſpecially ſince theſe greater Benefits cannot be ſupported without the other. "Conſider, as he adds, the Fowls of the Air: Becauſe God has given them a Body, "therefore he gives them Food, though they neither ſow, nor reap, nor gather into "Barns, to lay up Proviſion for themſelves: Are ye not much better than they? De-"ſpair not then of his Providence: He will be ſo much the more careful of you, as "you are better than Birds, and other ſuch-like Creatures, who, without any Thought "of their own, find every Thing, that is needful for them, ready at hand."

[k] Patrick, on Contentment. [l] Vid. Page 868. [m] James i. 2. [n] Ecclus. xxix. 21. [o] Patrick, ibid. [p] Phil. iv. 11, &c. [q] The Art of Contentment, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. [r] 1 Tim. vi. 8. [s] Rogers's Sermons, Vol. III.

God's Providence.

LET us look up to God again as the Ruler, as well as Benefactor, the great Diſpoſer, as well as Provider, for Mankind, and, under this View, we ſhall perceive equal Reaſon to be eaſy and contented, in that our Affairs are lodged in the Hand of his Providence, which is much better and ſafer, than to have the Management of them in our own Power. [y] We are apt to imagine, that, if God would give us Leave to carve out our own Condition, we could make a moſt admirable Proviſion for ourſelves; that if we could gain ſuch a Point, and compaſs ſuch a Deſign, we ſhould be made for ever; when alas! we never conſider how many Inconveniencies would follow upon ſuch a Suppoſition. The fair Appearances of Things invite us, and we are hurried on by a blind and eager Deſire; but whether we are able to manage our Choice, we are wholly ignorant. We never conſider what Dangers and Difficulties we ſhall meet with, what Snares and Temptations lie in our Way; how our Humours and Paſſions are apt to vary with enlarged Circumſtances, and what a great deal of Circumſpection and Steadineſs is neceſſary to ſecure our Virtue. So that, next to the Providence of God, we often owe our Safety to our Impotence, and are only happy, becauſe wehave it not in our Power, by changing our Fortune, to make ourſelves miſerable. One Man fancies, that, if he could but raiſe his Fortune to ſuch a Pitch, no one could be happier than himſelf: But he does not ſeem to be aware, that many are Maſters of much more than he deſires, and yet are viſibly uneaſy and diſcontented. He never conſiders, that the Care of keeping, and the Deſire of increaſing Riches, does often ſo buſy and perplex Mens Minds, that they have no Leiſure to enjoy them. He never thinks how many falſe and fantaſtical Appetites they are apt to excite in us, and to create more Wants than they are able to ſatisfy; otherwiſe he would perceive, that the Happineſs of [z] a Man's Life conſiſteth not in the Abundance of the Things which he poſſeſſeth. Another imagines, that there is a ſtrange Felicity lodged in Authority, and is mightily troubled to ſee himſelf ſhut out. "If "he was once in Power, if he had a publick Stage to act upon, he would make an "illuſtrious Figure, and rectify many of thoſe Diſorders which diſturb Society: But "he is ſo unfortunate as to be confined to a private Station; he is buried in an ob-"ſcure Retreat; he has not room enough to diſplay his Parts and Sufficiency; not [t] Deut. iv. 19. [u] Exod. xi. 5. [*] Matth. vi. 25, &c. [x] Patrick, on Contentment.

[y] Collier's Sermons. [z] Luke xii. 15.

" Opportunities to ſhew the Greatneſs and Generoſity of his Mind." But were he ſenſible how dangerous a Thing it is to be great, how ſteep and ſlippery an elevated Station is, and how much it lies expoſed to Malice and Envy, he would rather dread the Precipice, than be eager to climb the Aſcent: [a] He would plainly perceive, that a Man had need have his Head very ſteady and well-poiſed, otherwiſe his Height will make him turn giddy; and when this happens, a falſe Step, or a malicious Puſh, is enough to ſet him going, and then it is an eaſy Thing to gueſs, what a Bruiſe he is like to get by the Fall, and how contemptibly he will look at the Bottom.

SINCE then the moſt tempting Conditions, that Men can propoſe to themſelves, are ſo likely to make them unfortunate, is it not more prudent, as well as more pious, to reſign up our Choice to the Providence of God; to acquieſce in his Diſpoſal, and to think thoſe Circumſtances moſt proper, which he has placed us in? For ſhould God yield to the Importunity of our Complaints, his Favours might undo us, and, as [b] the Heathen Poet obſerves, the Succeſs and Grant of our Requeſts would prove our Ruin. 'Tis a very diſcreet Form of Prayer therefore, which [c] one of the greateſt of the Heathen Sages teaches us; " That God would give us ſuch " Things as were convenient for us, tho' we did not aſk them; and deny us ſuch, " as were not, tho' we did." God has a perfect Knowledge of the Capacities and Inclinations of his Creatures, and what Effects every Condition will have upon them; he foreſees what Miſeries we ſhall be plunged into, if we are truſted to chuſe for ourſelves, what Rocks we ſhould run upon, if he allowed us to ſteer to our own Point; and therefore, in pure Mercy, reſtrains us from ſo dangerous a Freedom, denies us our fatal Wiſhes, and makes us happy againſt our Wills. Since then we are much more ſecure in God's Hands, than we are in our own, how unreaſonable, how ungrateful muſt it be, to murmur at his Allotment, and be diſſatisfied with the Reſults of his Wiſdom, merely by adhering to our own vain Imaginations! Nay, how vain and ridiculous is it, to oppoſe our Wiſhes to the Divine Counſels, and to fret and fume at That, which we can by no Means help; [d] For behold, God taketh away, ſays holy Job, and who can hinder him? Who will ſay unto him, what doſt thou? If he will not withdraw his Anger, the proud Helpers do ſtoop under him: How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, and chuſe out my Words to reaſon with him? Whom, tho' I were righteous, I would not anſwer, but would make my Supplication to my Judge. And this will lead us,

From the Conſideration of ourſelves.

II. To caſt our Eyes upon ourſelves, and to reflect a little on our own particular Condition, in order to eſtabliſh our Content. And, to this Purpoſe, let us, in the firſt Place, aſk ourſelves, what are we? [e] Creatures, that are naturally indigent and impotent, that have no juſt Claim to any Thing, nor any Poſſeſſion maintainable by our Power: All we have, or can have, comes from pure Courteſy and Bounty; and therefore, how little ſoever is allotted us, we have no Wrong done us, or any juſt Cauſe to complain. Nay, if we rightly ſurvey ourſelves, and take into our Account the Depravities of our Nature, as well as the Enormities of our Lives, we ſhall think any Thing good enough for us; and with all Humility confeſs, that [f] it is of the Lord's Mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe his Compaſſions fail not. For ſhall we, who are conſcious to ourſelves of ſo many great Sins againſt our God, who, by wilful Tranſgreſſions, and ſlothful Neglects, have ſo much abuſed and affronted him; ſhall we, I ſay, affect to live in Eaſe, and ſwim in Plenty, and flouriſh in a brave and ſplendid Condition, when it is a Favour granted us, that we are permitted to ſubſiſt? It is not, ſurely, for ſuch Perſons to be diſſatisfied with any Thing in this Life, but to bleſs God's exceeding Mercy, that they are ſtill on this Side of the bottomleſs Pit. [h] I will bear the Indignation of the Lord, (ſays the Church, by the Mouth of the Prophet) becauſe I have ſinned againſt him; and much more then ſhould we acknowledge the Righteouſneſs of God in all his Diſpenſations, and account our Condition, though much more deplorable than it is, ten thouſand times better [i] than our Iniquities deſerve.

FOR, indeed, what Condition can we figure to ourſelves ſo wretched and deplorable, as not to have ſome Comforts to alleviate its Griefs, ſome Advantages to place in the contrary Scale againſt its Inconveniencies. Poverty indeed may, at firſt Sight, ſeem a very ſore Evil; but, if we conſider it a little more attentively, what is it, [k] but the

[a] Collier's Sermons. [b] Juvenal, Sat. 10. [c] Socrates in Plat. Alcib. [d] Job ix. 12, 13.
[e] Barrow's Sermons, Vol. III. [f] Lam. iii. 22. [h] Micah vii. 9. [i] Ezra ix. 13.
[k] Barrow, ibid.

the Abſence of a few ſuperfluous Things, which if we did not affect, we ſhould not want; but, at the ſame Time, the Abſence likewiſe of many Cares and Diſtractions, many Dangers, many Temptations, many Diſtempers both of Body and Soul, to which a plentiful and large Fortune is known to be expoſed? 'Tis a State, which many have borne with great Chearfulneſs, which wiſe Men have voluntarily embraced, which the beſt Men have been known to endure, which God has expreſſed his Regard to, and which the Son of God has dignified by his Choice, and ſanctified by his Participation; and can ſuch a State countenance our Murmurings and Complaints? We have but a ſcanty Allowance perhaps of the Neceſſaries of Life, but then we eat the homely Morſel we have with a good Appetite, and ſleep, when we are weary, without Diſturbance; for [l] the Sleep of a labouring Man is ſweet, eat he little, or eat he much. Together with our Poverty we have Health; and [m] Health, and a good Eſtate of Body, ſays the wiſe Hebrew, is above all Gold; we have a quiet Mind, which all the Riches in the World are not to be compared with; a free Uſe of our Time, which the greateſt Miniſter of State would be glad to taſte of; and an unſullied Reputation, which is more than can be obtained by the moſt ſplendid Fortune. Add to this, that our Conſcience is eaſy, our Appetites within Rule, and our Faculties in their Vigour; that we have none of the Burthens, the Diſeaſes, the Vices of Sloth and Luxury, and, if our Condition be really calamitous, ſeldom fail of the Compaſſion of Men, which is certainly much better, than that Envy, Ill-will, and Obloquy, which uſually attend on Wealth and Proſperity.

THESE are ſome of the Things, that God has made the Bleſſings of a low Eſtate, and we do manifeſt Injuſtice to his Mercy and Goodneſs, when we overlook the comfortable Part, and fix our Attention upon nothing, but the Inconveniencies of it. For, ſuppoſe theſe Inconveniencies never ſo great, and ourſelves ſunk into the very Abyſs of Calamities; yet, as there is no neceſſary Connection between the preſent and the future, who can tell [n] what a Day may bring forth? The ſame God, [o] who maketh ſore, bindeth up, who [p] weakeneth the Strength of the Mighty, [q] raiſeth the Poor out of the Duſt, and liſteth the Needy out of the Dunghill, that he may ſet him with the Princes: And therefore ſince nothing happens without his Determination; ſince he knows our Calamity, and, as it were, ſympathizes with us; above all, ſince we have his Promiſe, that he will provide for us in Want, comfort us in Trouble, and ſuccour us in Diſtreſs, we have all imaginable Reaſon to hope for an Amendment of our Condition, when it is bad, rather than to fear a Continuance of it: For this is the wiſe Man's Remark upon the Matter, [r] the patient Man ſhall bear for a Time, and afterwards Joy ſhall ſpring up to him.

BUT ſuppoſe, that the Providence of God, for ſundry Reaſons, thinks proper to continue our Calamities upon us, as long as we live; yet there is one comfortable Reflection ſtill behind, viz. that Life itſelf cannot be long; 'tis but a Vapour that appeareth for a little Time, and then vaniſheth away; and, together with it, all our Sorrows and Complaints for ever: For Death (which may be very near, which cannot be far off) is a ſure Haven from all the Tempeſts of Life, a ſafe Refuge from all the Perſecutions of the World, and an infallible Cure for all the Diſeaſes of our preſent Condition. It will enlarge us from all Reſtraints; it will eaſe us of all our Toils; veil all our Diſgraces, ſtifle all our Cares, wipe all Tears from our Eyes, and baniſh all Sorrow from our Hearts. So that, it is but holding out a little while longer, and then all our Moleſtation will, of its own Accord, expire. In the mean Time, to allay the Uneaſineſs of our Minds, we ſhould do well to reflect on the many ineſtimable Bleſſings we have in our Hands, which are above the Power of Affliction to extort from us: That we have ſtill the Uſe of our Reaſon, which exceeds all the Treaſures of the World; ſtill the Comfort of a good Conſcience; ſtill Acceſs to the Throne of Grace; ſtill the Senſe of the Divine Favour here, and the Expectation of the Divine Preſence hereafter; and how can he be ſuppoſed to want any Thing, who, beſides his preſent Intereſt in all the needful Effects of God's bountiful Love, is an Heir of Heaven and everlaſting Bliſs? And [s] who ſhall ſeparate us from the Love of Chriſt, ſays the Apoſtle? Shall Tribulation, or Diſtreſs, or Perſecution, or Famine, or Nakedneſs, or Peril, or Sword? All theſe he deſpiſes, becauſe he was very well perſuaded, [t] That the Sufferings of this preſent Time are not worthy to be compared with the Glories, which ſhall be revealed to us.

III. ANO-

[l] Eccleſ. v. 12. [m] Ecclus. xxx. 15. [n] Prov. xxvii. 1. [o] Job v. 18. [p] Chap. xii. 21.
[q] Pſal. cxiii. 7, 8. [r] Ecclus. i. 23. [s] Rom. viii. 35. [t] Ver. 18.

From comparing ourſelves with others.

III. ANOTHER Expedient to ſettle in our Minds a Spirit of Contentment, is frequently to caſt our Eyes upon others, and compare our Condition with theirs. The Rule, which Seneca lays down for this Purpoſe, is a very good one. [u] When thou beholdeſt how many there are before thee, look back, ſays he, and ſee how many there are, that follow behind thee; but the Miſchief of Mens eager Appetites is, that they will never hearken to this Rule. They ſee a long Train perhaps of Perſons, that march before them, finely attired, ſtately mounted, and adorned with all the Bravery of Fortune, and theſe they gaze on: * They admire the Luſtre of their Condition; they ſigh to think, that they cannot come up with them; and pine away, in the Midſt of many Bleſſings, becauſe they are forced to follow at ſome Diſtance. [x] Whereas, if they would now and then caſt their Eyes behind them, they would behold ſo many conſuming their Lives in perpetual Toil and Drudgery, merely to obtain a ſhort hungry Meal, and a few Hours Sleep and Inſenſibility; ſo many oppreſſed with Slavery, harraſſed with Cruelty, pined with Want and Poverty, overwhelmed with Shame and Infamy, ſo many waſted with long Sickneſſes, out-worn with lingering Pains, conſumed with Sorrow and Anxiety of Soul; and, (what is worſt of all) ſo many ſtung with Remorſe, racked with Horror and Deſpair, and alarmed with perpetual Fears and diſmal Expectations; that they would ſoon think themſelves among the foremoſt Perſons: "For he that will enjoy Tranquillity of "Mind, muſt, in Proſperity, conſider how many there are, that enjoy leſs Good, "and, in Adverſity, how many there are, that ſuffer more Evil."

The meaneſt.

IN making Compariſons then between ourſelves and others, there are theſe Rules that muſt direct our Proceeding: 1. That we compare ourſelves with all Men, and not only with ſome few. 2. That we compare ourſelves with them in all Things, and not merely in ſome Particulars. And, 3. That we compare ourſelves with them at all Times, and not only at ſome certain Seaſons.

The greateſt.

UPON theſe Conditions, we may venture to look even into the Palaces of Princes, and make an Eſtimate between our Condition, and that of thoſe, whom we are apt ſo much to admire and envy. For what indeed is the State and Condition of the greateſt Perſons upon Earth, [y] but a State of pompous Trouble, and gay Servility; of living in continual Noiſe and Stir, ſurrounded with Crowds, and ſubjected to the Tediouſneſs of Ceremony; a State, that wants all the ſolid Comforts of Life, true Friendſhip, free Converſation, certain Leiſure, Privacy and Retirement, to enjoy ourſelves, our Time and Thoughts, when and how we pleaſe; and yet a State, encompaſſed with Snares and Temptations numberleſs, which, without extreme Caution and Conſtancy, Force of Reaſon, and Command of all Appetites and Paſſions, cannot be avoided? This, and no better, is the State of the Great; and therefore the Pſalmiſt has juſtly obſerved, that as Men of low Degree are Vanity; ſo Men of high Degree are a Lye: A Lye, becauſe their State cheateth us, by appearing ſo very ſpecious, which, when nearer inſpected, is found to be ſo beſet with Troubles and Dangers on every Side, that we have Reaſon to bleſs God for appointing us a private Station, and to pity thoſe Kings and ſovereign Princes, on whom he has laid the Burthen of a Crown.

Better Men, that have ſuffered more than we.

[z] BUT if we ſtretch the Compariſon beyond our Contemporaries, and look back to the Generations of old, we ſhall have ſtill farther Cauſe to acknowledge God's great Indulgence to us, conſidering what has commonly been the Lot of good Men in all Ages. What the ſeveral Forefathers of our Faith, before Chriſt's Incarnation, underwent, the Author to the Hebrews has given us a brief, but very full Compendium: [a] They had Trial of cruel Mockings and Scourgings; yea, moreover of Bonds and Impriſonments: They were ſtoned, were ſawn aſunder, were tempted, were ſlain with the Sword: They wandered about in Sheep-ſkins and Goat-ſkins, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented: They wandered in Deſerts, and in Mountains, and in Dens, and in Caves of the Earth. And, if we look on the primitive Chriſtians, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that their Privileges conſiſted not in any Immunities from Calamities; for their whole Lives were Scenes of Sufferings. St Paul has given us an Account of his own; [b] in Labours more abundant, in Stripes above Meaſure, in Priſons more frequent; in Deaths often. Of the Jews five Times received I forty Stripes, ſave one: Thrice was I beaten with Rods; once was I ſtoned; thrice I ſuffered Shipwreck;

[u] Sen. Epiſt. xv. * Patrick, on Contentment. [x] Scott's Serm. [y] Barrow's Serm. Vol. III. [z] The Art of Contentment, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. [a] Heb. xi. 36, &c. [b] 2 Cor. xi. 23, &c.

Shipwreck; a Night and a Day have I been in the Deep. In Journeyings often, &c. And, if his ſingle Hardſhips roſe thus high, what may we think the whole Sum of all his Fellow-labourers amounted to together, with that whole Army of Martyrs, that ſealed their Faith with their Blood, of whoſe Sufferings the Hiſtory of the Church gives us ſuch aſtoniſhing Relations.

The Inſtance of our Bleſſed Saviour, a great Encouragement.

AND now, [c] being compaſſed about with ſo great a Cloud of Witneſſes, the Apoſtle's Inference is irrefragable, let us run with Patience the Race that is ſet before us; but ſtill it is more ſo, if we proceed to the Conſideration which he adjoins; looking unto Jeſus, the Author and Finiſher of our Faith, who, for the Joy that was ſet before him, endured the Croſs, deſpiſing the Shame. And, indeed, if we contemplate him in the whole Courſe of his Life, we ſhall find him rightly ſtiled, by the Prophet, a Man of Sorrows, ſince there is ſcarce any Calamity incident to human Nature, that was not tried and exemplified in him. Does any complain of the Lowneſs and Poverty of his Condition? His whole Life was a State of Indigence; and, as he was forced to take up his Lodging with Beaſts at his Birth, ſo he afterwards aſſures us, that he [d] had not a Place wherein to lay his Head. Is any oppreſſed with Infamy and Reproach? He may find his Saviour accuſed as [e] a Glutton, a Wine-bibber, [f] a Blaſphemer, a [g] Sorcerer; and [h] a common Thief and Murtherer preferred before him. Is any one deſpiſed and deſerted by his Friends? He was contemned by his Countrymen, thought a Frantick by his Relations, betrayed by one of his Diſciples, and abandoned by all, unleſs by that one, who followed him the longeſt, to renounce him more ſhamefully, by a ſolemn Abjuration. And laſtly, does any Man groan under ſharp and acute Pains of Body? Let him attend his Saviour thro' all the Stages of his dreadful Paſſion, from his Agony in the Garden, to his Expiration on the Croſs, and ſo he will perceive the Demand of the mournful Prophet, in the Perſon of the crucified Jeſus, verified to the full; [i] Behold and ſee if there be any Sorrow like unto my Sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me, in the Day of his fierce Anger: And therefore [k] conſider him, as the Apoſtle adviſes, who endured ſuch Contradiction of Sinners againſt himſelf, leſt ye be weary and faint in your Minds. Set the Example of his Meekneſs and Equanimity before you, confront your petty Uneaſineſſes with his unſpeakable Sufferings, and then it will be impoſſible but that your Admiration will ſilence your Impatiences, and ſhame you for ever out of your Repinings.

The Sum of the whole Argument.

" FOR why ſhould I repine, or be diſcontented with my Condition, may every " conſiderate Chriſtian ſay, when I am under the Providence and Protection of a " gracious God? He hath placed me, indeed, in a low Station of Life; but then " he hath ſecured me from the Danger of falling, and bleſſed me with Repoſe and " Tranquillity of Mind, which Perſons of an high Degree and Eminence are not " acquainted with. He hath given me the Poſſeſſion of no Eſtate, tranſmitted from " my Anceſtors; but then he hath given me Strength of Body, that enables me to " maintain myſelf and Family, by my daily Labour, or ſuch Endowments of Mind, " as qualify me to do it in a more liberal Way. At preſent, indeed, I labour under a " diſtreſſed Fortune, but then I have good Reaſon to hope, that ſome lucky Turn will " happen to my Affairs; that, by the Intervention of good Friends, or the Succeſs of " my honeſt Endeavours, God, [l] who lifteth the Simple out of the Duſt, and the Poor " out of the Mire, will extricate me from theſe Difficulties. But, if this ſhould not " be, in all Probability, theſe Difficulties cannot laſt long, becauſe Life itſelf is not " long, and, together with Life, all the Miſeries and Calamities of it are at an End; " and then I ſhall be as though I had never ſuffered any Thing, only that I ſhall reap " the Benefit of my Sufferings, when Time ſhall be no more. In the mean Seaſon, I " have many ineſtimable Benefits, which the Great and Opulent want, ſound Con- " ſtitution, ſound Sleep, and no Want of Appetite to reliſh my homely Morſel. For " tho' my Allowance be both mean and ſmall, yet Nature, I find, is ſatisfied with a " little, and that little (when I look upon myſelf as a Creature, that have a Title to no- " thing, and as a Sinner, that have a Title to Deſtruction only) is certainly much more " than I can any Way pretend to deſerve. Nay, if I look upon others, how tolerable " is my Condition, in Compariſon of many of my Contemporaries, who are below me " conſiderably, in Fortune, in Parts, in Health, in Happineſs of moſt Kinds, and yet " may have better Pretenſions to the Divine Favour, than I; in Compariſon of many " faithful Servants of God, who have been as remarkable for their Sufferings, as they [c] Heb. xii. 1, &c. [d] Luke ix. 58. [e] Ibid. vii. 34. [f] John x. 33. [g] Matth. xii. 24. [h] John xviii. 40. [i] Lam. i. 12. [k] Heb. xii. 3. [l] Pſal. cxiii. 7.

" have been for their Piety; the Patriarchs and Prophets, the Apoſtles and firſt Chri-
" ſtians, eſpecially the Son of God himſelf, when he came into the World to re-
" deem me: And ſhall I repine at any Thing, when my gracious Saviour under" went worſe? Or murmur againſt Providence, for placing me in the Condition,
" which he, by his voluntary Aſſumption, and patient Continuance in, has both
" recommended and ſanctified? 'Twill be the Height of Folly, as well as Confi" dence, to expect to fare better in this Valley of Tears, than did the Son of God,
" when he was pleaſed to ſojourn in it: Eſpecially conſidering, that my Diſcon-
" tentedneſs will avail me nothing, my loudeſt Complaints will never prevail with " Heaven to alter one Decree; [m] whereas my bearing my Calamities willingly and " well, will be a Spectacle grateful to God, and, beſides rebating the Sting of what
" I ſuffer, will probably prevail with him to releaſe me from it: And, therefore,
" being ſenſible in whom I have put my Confidence, [n] even in him, who is able to
" do abundantly above all that I can aſk or think; I will [o] be careful for nothing,
" but in every Thing, by Prayer and Supplication, with Thankſgiving, let my Re-
" queſts be made known unto God."

SECT. II.

Of the Government of the Tongue.

The Difficulty of governing the Tongue, and why.

ST James, treating on this very Subject, with great Variety of Arguments endeavours to ſhew, how difficult a Province it is for any Man to govern his Tongue. [p] Every Kind of Beaſt, ſays he, and of Birds, and of Serpents, and Things in the Sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of Mankind; but the Tongue can no Man tame: It is an unruly Evil, full of deadly Poiſon. Therewith bleſs we God, even the Father, and therewith curſe we Men, which are made after the Similitude of God; out of the ſame Mouth proceedeth Bleſſing and Curſing; my Brethren, theſe Things ought not to be ſo. For, doth a Fountain ſend forth, at the ſame Place, ſweet Water and bitter? The Untameableneſs of the Tongue muſt be underſtood in a limited Senſe, to denote the great Difficulty of it; that the Thing is poſſible, the ſame Apoſtle ſeems to intimate, when, in the Beginning of his Diſcourſe, he tells us, that [q] if any Man offend not in Word, the ſame is a perfect Man, i. e. one of a ſingular Worth and Integrity: And ſuch an one, he preſumes, has as much Command over his Tongue, as [r] he, that manages the Bit, has over the Horſe he rides; or he, that holds the Helm, has over the Ship he ſteers; and how far an hearty Purpoſe and Reſolution may carry us in the Execution of this great Taſk, the Example of the Royal Pſalmiſt ſeems to inſtruct us: [s] I ſaid, I will take Heed to my Ways, that I offend not with my Tongue; I will keep my Mouth, as it were, with a Bridle, while the Ungodly is in my Sight: For, [t] I am utterly purpoſed, that my Mouth ſhall not offend.

WHAT makes the Difficulty of this Regimen then is, in ſome Part, imputable to the Member itſelf. [u] The Tongue is ſo ſlippery, that it eaſily deceives an heedleſs Guard; for Nature ſeems to have given it ſome unhappy Advantages that Way. 'Tis, in its Make, the moſt ready for Motion of any Member; it needs not ſo much as the Flexure of a Joint to make it go, and, by Acceſs of Humours, acquires a certain Glibneſs, the more to facilitate its moving, by which Means it comes to paſs, that it often goes without giving us Warning. And as Children, when they happen upon a rolling Engine, can ſet it in ſuch a Career, as wiſer People cannot on a ſudden ſtop; ſo the childiſh Parts of us, our Paſſions, our Fancies, and other our animal Faculties, can put our Tongues into ſuch Diſorders, as the Aids of our Reaſon cannot eaſily rectify: * Since the Tongue then is ſo very looſe and verſatile a Member, that the leaſt Breath of Thought can ſtir it, and ſet it on going any Way, it cannot but need much Attention of Mind, either to keep it in a ſteady Reſt, or in a right Motion; and ſince numberleſs Swarms of Things are continually roving in the Fancy, and thence inceſſantly obtruding themſelves upon the Tongue, great Judgment and Circumſpection is certainly requiſite to remark their Quality, as they call upon us to utter them, and out of of the promiſcuous Crowd that came, to ſelect the few only, that our Reaſon and Religion pronounce to be good, and proper to be ſpoken; which may be reduced to theſe three Heads: 1. Such as are holy and religious, with relation to God. 2. Sincere and inoffenſive, with regard to our Neighbour. And, 3. Modeſt and decent, with reſpect to ourſelves.

[m] Spectaculum Deo dignum, vir bonus cum malâ fortunâ compoſitus. Sen. de Provid. [n] Eph. iii. 20. [o] Phil. iv. 6. [p] James iii. 7, 8, &c. [q] Ibid. ver. 2. [r] Ibid. ver. 3, 4. [s] Pſal. xxxix. 1. [t] Pſal. xvii. 3. [u] The Government of the Tongue, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. * Barrow's Works, Vol. I.

1. THE Duty, the Reaſonableneſs, and Excellency of religious Diſcourſe in common Converſation, is what we took Occaſion to conſider elſewhere; and therefore on this Head ſhall need only to enquire a little into the Folly and Wickedneſs of that Blaſphemy and Profaneneſs, ſo popular in this Age, which [y] ſets its Mouth againſt the Heavens, and manifeſtly oppoſes the Caution and ſtrict [z] Holineſs, which the Apoſtle preſcribes us in all Manner of Converſation.

The great Boldneſs of atheiſtical Diſcourſe.

How tranſient ſoever we may ſuppoſe our Words to be, yet, if there be a ſupreme Being, which we call God, there is ſufficient Reaſon to believe, that he, as well as Man, is provoked as much, nay more, by our Words, than by our Deeds. [a] Our ill Deeds may be done upon the vehement Impulſe of ſome Temptation: Some Profit or Pleaſure may tranſport and hurry us on to the Commiſſion; at leaſt, they may have this Alleviation, that we did them to pleaſe, or advantage ourſelves, and not to ſpite God: But profane and atheiſtical Diſcourſe cannot be ſo palliated. It is an Arrow ſhot directly againſt Heaven, and out of no other Quiver, but that of Malice: And if Malice among Men be an Aggravation of Injuries, how much more ſo muſt it be, in the Eſteem of God, whoſe principal Demand is, that we ſhould give him our Heart. 'Till therefore we can prove (againſt the Voice of Nature, and Faith of Hiſtory; againſt the ſettled Judgment of wiſe and ſober Perſons, who have ſtudied and conſidered the Point; and againſt the current Tradition of all Ages, and general Conſent of Mankind, which is a difficult Taſk to do) that there is no God; 'twill be too bold an Advance for us, in this Manner, to dare and defy him, leſt we find him at laſt aſſerting his Being in our utter Deſtruction and Confuſion. In the mean Time, it would much better become us, ſoberly to balance with ourſelves the Gains we may expect, and the Hazards we too probably run, by indulging this profane Liberty of Speech.

The Folly of it.

WE cannot pretend to give Pleaſure to our Hearers, for our Hearers are generally of a different Opinion: [b] They are convinced of the Exiſtence of a God, and therefore think themſelves affronted; look upon it as an injurious Reflection upon their Judgment and Choice, and reſent the Indignity with Deteſtation, when they hear their beſt Friend and only Benefactor, the Author of their Beings, and the Founder of their Hopes, traduced and vilified. We cannot pretend to advantage the Publick, becauſe the Publick is fully ſatisfied, that the Belief of a God and a future State is the beſt Security of civil Society, and, conſequently, cannot but ſuppoſe, that whoever goes about to diſpoſſeſs the World of this Perſuaſion, deſerves to be reputed an Enemy to Mankind, and an injurious Diſturber of their Tranquillity. All that we can then promiſe ourſelves from this hazardous Enterprize, is, to be remarked (as other Monſters are) for our Singularity; or, [c] at moſt, but to obtain a vain Applauſe of Wit, as an impious Jeſter; or of Reaſon, as a Free Thinker; and yet, even for this, we muſt incroach upon the Devil's Right too, who, in all Eſſays of this Nature, is uſually the chief Prompter; and therefore, if there be any Credit in the Thing, may juſtly challenge no inconſiderable Share of it to himſelf.

AND now, what a deſperate Madneſs is this, merely for the Sake of daring to do, what every ſober Man would tremble to attempt, to make Shipwreck of our immortal Souls; to expoſe ourſelves to endleſs Wailings and Woe, only to raiſe a Fit of preſent Laughter, and, in order to be reckoned Wits, to prove ourſelves ſtark wild. For of ſuch [d] Laughter, we may very well ſay with the wiſe Man, that it is Madneſs, and of ſuch Mirth, what does it do? What does it do indeed, but only provoke God, in his Turn, [e] to laugh at our Calamity, and to mock when our Fear cometh; when our Fear cometh as Deſolation, and our Deſtruction cometh as a Whirlwind?

ANOTHER

[y] Pſal. lxxiii. 9. [z] 1 Pet. i. 15. [a] The Government of the Tongue, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. [b] Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [c] The Government of the Tongue, &c. [d] Eccleſ. ii. 2. [e] Prov. i. 26, 27.

The Sin of drolling upon Scripture.

ANOTHER Thing oppoſite to religious and holy Converſation (for the impious Cuſtom of taking God's Name in vain we have already conſidered, in the Expoſition of the third Commandment) is making his Word the Subject of our profane Mirth and Drollery. For it is no uncommon Thing to hear Perſons, almoſt in all Company, uſing the Scripture, as they do odd Ends of Plays, to furniſhing out their Jeſts; cloathing all their little Conceits in its Language, and debaſing it by the Mixture of ſuch miſerable Trifles, as themſelves would be aſhamed of, were they not heightened and inſpirited by that Profaneneſs. But, to diſcern how God will reſent ſuch Uſage of his moſt ſacred Word, let but any of us put the Caſe in our own Perſons. [f] Suppoſe we had written to a Friend, to advertiſe him of Things of the greateſt Importance to himſelf; had given him ample and exact Inſtructions, backed with the moſt earneſt Exhortations, and enforced with the moſt moving Expreſſions of Kindneſs and Tenderneſs to him; and the next News, we ſhould hear of that Letter, were, to have it put in doggrel Rhime, to be made Sport for the Rabble, or, at the beſt, to have the moſt eminent Phraſes of it picked out to be made a common By-word; I would fain know how any of us would reſent ſuch a Mixture of Ingratitude and Contumely. There needs no minute Application I think. The whole Deſign of the Bible does ſufficiently anſwer, nay, infinitely ſurpaſs the former Part of the Parallel; and God knows our vile Uſage of it does too much, I fear too literally, adopt the latter. And, if we think the Affront too baſe for one of us, can we believe God will take it in good Part? The Words of the Apoſtle (and terrible Words they are) denote the very contrary: [g] If the Word ſpoken by Angels, ſays he, was ſtedfaſt, and every Tranſgreſſion and Diſobedience received a juſt Recompence; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect, if we burleſque, and make a mere Jeſt of, ſo great Salvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken to us by the Lord?

The Government of the Tongue, with Regard to our Neighbour.

II. WITH Regard to our Neighbour, the Duty of governing our Tongue, will conſiſt in the Sincerity and Inoffenſiveneſs of our Words and Expreſſions. St Paul, after the uſual Introduction to moſt of his Epiſtles, begins That to the Philippians with a ſolemn Prayer to God, [h] that they might approve Things, that were excellent, and be ſincere, and without Offence, till the Day of Chriſt; and in That to the Epheſians, he gives them ſtrict Charge, that, [i] putting away Lying, that they ſhould ſpeak every Man Truth with his Neighbour; which he enforces with this Reaſon; for we are Members one of another, i. e. as we are Members of one common Society, we are ſeverally, in our different Capacities, obliged to promote the common Good and Happineſs of it: But now, Speech being the proper Inſtrument of our conſulting and providing for theſe great Ends, all Inſincerity and equivocal Abuſe of Words at once tend to deſtroy the natural Order, and fundamental Rights of Society, and are directly contrary to the true Uſe of Speech in its original Inſtitution.

Sincerity.

[k] FEW Perſons indeed have the Effrontery to affirm what is directly falſe, what they know to be ſo, and may eaſily be detected in: The worſt of Men deſire to preſerve ſome Kind of Reputation in the World, and they obſerve, that there is no Character more infamous, than That of a Lyar. They are cautious therefore how they aſſert Things, which have no real or probable Foundation, not out of Regard to Truth, conſidered as a moral Virtue, but as an Ornament of civil Life: Yet there are ſo many Ways of miſrepreſenting Facts really true in themſelves, of amplifying or ſuppreſſing the Circumſtances wherewith they are attended, and of ſuppoſing this and That, in order to ſet them off in different Colours; that Men of a fertile Invention may eaſily find Means, on certain Occaſions, of impoſing upon the Credulity of others, without any ſcandalous Conſequences in Prejudice of their Reputation; and all this may be thought neceſſary to ſuch, as propoſe to live in the World, eſpecially if they would raiſe themſelves to any public or eminent Station. It ſhews however, that the Maxims, whereby Men govern themſelves, who reſolve to make a Fortune at any Rate, are ſometimes oppoſite to thoſe of Religion; and, for that very Reaſon, Perſons, that make Profeſſion of Religion, cannot, without evidently oppoſing it, pretend to juſtify ſuch Maxims, or to act upon them.

THE like may be ſaid of Profeſſions of Kindneſs, that are not real, as well as Commendations and Praiſes, that are not due: Though both theſe may, in ſome Meaſure, be apologized for; the one, as neceſſary to keep up the Dependencies of great Men [f] The Government of the Tongue, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man. [g] Heb. ii. 2, 3. [h] Phil. i. 10. [i] Eph. iv. 25. [k] Fiddes's Sermons.

Men, and to give them an higher Air of Dignity and Power; the other, to preſerve the Favour of the Proud, and to make us as well thought on, where we are dependent; yet they are far from being an Imitation of the true Diſciples of Chriſt, who made it their great Joy and Triumph, not how artfully they had conducted themſelves; not what exquiſite Maſters of Diſguiſe and Diſſimulation they had been; but [l] that, with Simplicity, and godly Sincerity, not with fleſhly Wiſdom, but by the Grace of God, they had their Converſation in the World. This however is not ſo to be underſtood, as if a Courteſy to our Benefactors, or all Reſerve to ſuch, as are our Enemies, were to be ſuperſeded: [m] There is a wide Difference between Civility and Flattery, between Caution and Diſſimulation; and our bleſſed Saviour, by qualifying the Simplicity of the Dove with the Wiſdom of the Serpent, has plainly inſtructed us, that Candour is not only very reconcileable with Prudence, but ought indeed never to be ſeparated from it.

2. Inoffenſiveneſs.

WITH Regard to our Neighbour, another Duty, in the Government of the Tongue, is to have our Converſation innocent and inoffenſive, free from that Calumny and Defamation, whereby we injure his good Name, (which is an Argument we have ſpoken to [n] before) as well as that Cenſoriouſneſs and Contumely, which we now come to conſider.

Againſt cenſuring.

WONDERFUL is the Care, which the Chriſtian Religion has taken, to correct the Vice of cenſuring and judging others, as knowing it to be one of the moſt miſchievous, and withal the moſt predominant Vices in the World. [o] Sometimes we find it repreſented, as a bold and unjuſt Uſurpation of an Authority, that by no Means belongs to us: [p] Speak not evil one of another, ſays St James; he that ſpeaketh Evil of his Brother, and judgeth his Brother, ſpeaketh Evil of the Law, and judgeth the Law: There is one Law-giver, who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy; who art thou that judgeſt another? Sometimes we find it repreſented, as an inſufferable Incroachment upon the independent Freedom of our Brethren: [q] For why is my Liberty judged, ſays St Paul, ſpeaking of Things of an indifferent Nature, of another Man's Conſcience? Every one of us ſhall give an Account of himſelf to God; let us not therefore judge one another any more. Sometimes again we find it repreſented, as a Practice of very miſchievous Conſequence; as it diſturbs the Quiet and Comfort of Society, and commits irreparable Outrages upon the Reputation of innocent Perſons: Hence we are told, that [r] the Whiſperer ſeparateth chief Friends; that [s] the Mouth that ſlandereth, ſlayeth the Soul; that [t] the Words of ſuch Men are Wounds; and that he, who ſcatters them, and ſays, I am in Sport, is as a Madman, that caſteth about Firebrands, and Arrows, and Death.

BUT if the Reverence due to Almighty God will not reſtrain us from aſſuming his Right to Judicature; if the Evils, that follow this wicked Diſpoſition and Practice, will not prevail with us to refrain from all cenſorious Speeches; yet Regard to ourſelves, one would think, ſhould not fail to work upon us; and therefore our Holy Religion ſupplies us with this Argument likewiſe: [u] * Judge not, and ye ſhall not be judged; condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned; forgive, and ye ſhall be forgiven; for with the ſame Meaſure Men mete withal, it ſhall be meaſured to them again. They, who put themſelves forward, and are very ſevere in cenſuring their Neighbours, take a moſt effectual Courſe to prepare a Scourge for their own Backs; and in a very literal Senſe procure, and lay up for themſelves, [x] good Meaſure, preſſed down, ſhaken together, and running over; for the World is ſeldom behind-hand in ſuch Retaliations: Whereas the Man of Diſcretion and Reſerve, that aſperſes no-body, nor intermeddles with Matters, that concern him not; that puts the beſt Conſtruction upon every Thing, and allows all People their due Commendation, is much more ſafe from the Laſh of ill Tongues, and beſpeaks the Juſtice and favourable Treatment of all that know him. So very malicious is the World indeed, that even this Man muſt not flatter himſelf with a total Exemption from Cenſure and Miſrepreſentation; but ſtill he has this Advantage, that when Obloquy and Detraction attempt upon his Honour, the Slander is ſcattered with leſs Bitterneſs, received with leſs Delight, and ſuffered with leſs Regret and Self-reproach, than it muſt needs be, where a Man's own Conſcience tells him, that he hath given others juſt Provocation to make Repri- ſits upon his good Name, and, by his own hard Dealing, has deſerved to be treated as a common Enemy.

[l] 2 Cor. i. 12. [m] Fiddes's Sermons. [n] Vid. Page 431. [o] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III. [p] James iv. 11, 12. [q] 1 Cor. x. 29. [r] Rom. xiv. 12, 13. [s] Prov. xvi. 28. [t] Wiſdom i. 11. [u] Prov. xxvi. 18, &c. * Luke vi. 37, 38. [x] Ibid. ver. 38.

But 'tis not by Men only that he may expect to be thus treated; even God, the Judge of all, has expreſſly threatened, that he ſhall have Judgment without Mercy, who hath ſhewed no Mercy. And this is ſurely Diſcouragement and Terror enough, in all Conſcience, to conſider, that, by giving a Looſe to a Licentiouſneſs of Tongue, we muſt expect to find no more Kindneſs from God, than Men have found from us: and yet, [a] if God enter into Judgment with his Servants, no Fleſh living can be juſtified in his Sight; or, [b] if he will be extreme to mark what is done amiſs, where is the Man able to abide it? Leaſt of all are thoſe Men qualified to abide it, whoſe critical Obſervation, and inhuman Expoſing of other People, ſo hinders them from examining into their own State and Condition, that, while they are [c] ſpying and pulling out Motes from their Brother's Eye, they perceive not the Beam, that is in their own, though never ſo groſs and viſible.

How to cure it in us.

That therefore we may preſerve ourſelves againſt ſo common and ſo pernicious a Sin, let us often reflect upon the Words of the Apoſtle; thou art inexcuſable, O Man, whoſoever thou art, that judgeſt; for wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thyſelf; for thou, that judgeſt, doſt the ſame Things, or perhaps worſe: And in the Strength of this, whenever we find ourſelves, upon any Miſdemeanour of our Brother, ready to mount the Tribunal, and pronounce our Sentence; let us firſt conſider how competent we are for the Office, and call to our Remembrance the Deciſion of Chriſt, once made in the like Caſe; [d] he that is without Sin, let him firſt caſt a Stone! To the ſame Purpoſe, it will be highly requiſite, that we frequently and ſeriouſly contemplate the Laſt and Great Judgment, and then we may aſk ourſelves, as St Paul does, [e] Why doſt thou judge thy Brother; or, why doſt thou ſet at nought thy Brother? We ſhall all ſtand before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt. Then will come the great Day of Revelation and Retribution, and we are not to anticipate it by our private Inqueſts or Sentences. Our own Accounts are Buſineſs enough for us to get ready againſt that Day: And, as it would be a ſpiteful Folly for Malefactors, that are going to the Bar, to ſpend their Time in exaggerating one another's Crimes; ſo ſurely it is for us, who are all going toward the dreadful Tribunal, to be drawing up Charges againſt one another. But, if we muſt needs be talking of other People's Faults, let it be not to defame, but to amend them, by converting our Detraction and Cenſoriouſneſs into fraternal Admonition and Reproof; [f] exhorting one another daily, while it is called To-day, leſt any of us be hardened through the Deceitfulneſs of Sin; and, [g] if any one be overtaken in a Fault, reſtoring ſuch a one in the Spirit of Meekneſs, conſidering ourſelves, leſt we alſo be tempted.

Deriſion.

What Kind of it allowable.

Once more, with Regard to our Neighbour: Another Breach upon the Innocence and Inoffenſiveneſs of Converſation, is Scoffing and Deriſion, what the Scripture expreſſes, as I ſuppoſe, by [h] fooliſh Talking and Jeſting, which are not convenient. We mightily miſtake the Spirit of Chriſtianity, if we imagine that, it was ever deſigned to debar us from any innocent, much leſs from any uſeful Pleaſure, that human Life requires: [i] God certainly has not been more rigid to our Minds, than he has to our Bodies; and therefore, as he has not ſo devoted the one to Toil, but that he allows us ſome Time to exerciſe them in Recreations, as well as Labours; ſo doubtleſs he indulges the ſame Relaxation to the other, which are not always to be ſcrewed up to the Height, but allowed ſometimes to deſcend to thoſe Eaſineſſes of Converſe, which entertain the lower Faculties of the Soul. [k] If then our gay and jocular Diſcourſe may ſerve to any Purpoſes of this Kind; if it has a Tendency to raiſe our drooping Spirits, to allay our Cares, and recreate our Minds, when tired with graver Occupations; if it any Way occaſions Alacrity, or maintains good Humour; endears Society, or ſweetens Converſation; it is plainly neither inconvenient nor unprofitable, and, conſequently, is not that Kind of Jeſting, which the Apoſtle condemns. The Holy Scripture is very remarkable for its great Gravity and Seriouſneſs of Expreſſion, and yet for ſome particular Purpoſes, ſuch as reproving Vices, and reclaiming Perſons, that are too abſurd for any ſolemn Confutation, we find it employing a Spirit of Facetiouſneſs, and dreſſing up, what it means to explode, in a very ludicrous and ſatyrical Manner. Thus, of the fooliſh and beſotted Prieſts of Baal, it is recorded, that that Elias mocked them, and said, cry aloud, for he is a God; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a Journey, or peradventure he sleeps, and must be awaked: And of those other ridiculous Sinners, the Worshippers of carved Images, no Man can speak in finer Raillery, than does the Prophet Isaiah; he planteth an Ash, says he, speaking of one of them, and the Rain doth nourish it. He burneth Part thereof in the Fire; with Part thereof he eateth Flesh: He roasteth Roast, and is satisfied; yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, aha! I am warm, I have seen the Fire: And the Residue thereof he maketh a God, even his graven Image: He falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, deliver me; for thou art my God.

[a] James ii. 13. [b] Pſal. cxliii. 2. [c] Ibid. cxxx. 3. [d] Matth. vii. 3, 4. [e] Rom. ii. 1. [f] John viii. 7. [g] Rom xiv. 10. [h] Heb. iii. 13. [i] Gal. vi. 1. [k] Eph. v. 4. [l] The Government of the Tongue, &c. [k] Barrow's Works, Vol. I.

SINCE then it is apparent, from those and other Passages of Scripture, that a certain Vivacity and Sportfulness of Wit, in many Cases, is allowable, and, in some, is necessary, to banter and expose such Errors, as neither deserve, nor can well bear a serious Confutation; the Apostle's Meaning must be restrained, either to such Jesting, as makes Sport and Mockery of the most sacred Things, (which is an Abuse of Speech considered before) or such severe and satyrical Jesting, as tends to the Disgrace and Prejudice of our Neighbour, the more of Wit and Poignancy there is in it. A dull Contumely indeed quickly vanishes, because no-body thinks it worth his remembering; but when it is steeled with Wit, and Sprightliness of Imagination, it pierces deep, and leaves such Impressions in the Fancy of the Hearers, that thereby it gets Rooting in the Memory, and will hardly ever be forgot. And as Wit gives an Edge, so it also adds Wings to the Abuse, and makes it fly abroad in an Instant. The Jest recommends the Defamation, and is commonly so incorporated with it, that they cannot be related apart. From whence it comes to pass, that even those, who like it not in one Respect, are, many Times, so transported with it in the other, that they chuse rather to propagate the Contumely than to stifle the Conceit. By this Means a Man, for what perhaps is none of his Fault, his natural or moral Infirmities, or some accidental Singularities of Humour or Temper, or the like, shall be exposed to the Scorn and Contempt, not of his own Generation only, but sometimes of his latest Posterity, it being no unusual Thing to have Sarcasms of Wit transmitted to Story.

What Kind, not.

The Mischief of it.

But now, what an inhuman Thing is this, to make the Weaknesses of Men the Subject of our Mirth; which, considering whence they come, and how common they are in most of us, do deserve our Compassion, not our Severity, and are rather to be deplored secretly, than openly derided?

THE Heart of Fools, says the wise Man, is in the House of Mirth, meaning such Mirth, as affects to raise an Admiration of its Wit from ignominious Reflections on the Persons and Actions of others; because, in another Place, he declares, that it is a Sport to a Fool to do Mischief. And indeed, what can be a greater Instance of Folly, than, for such mean Ends, to do so great Harm; to lose Friends, and get Enemies for a Conceit; and, out of a light Humour, to provoke fierce Wrath and lasting Hatred. For this daily Experience verifies, that nothing does so speedily inflame, and so thoroughly enrage Men's Passions, as such Scoffs and Invectives, as are sharper than Swords. In the mean Time, the Scoffer fails in his main Pretence, and cannot with Reason claim an Interest in Wit; since he manifestly discovers a great Straitness and Sterility of good Invention, who cannot, in all the wide Field of Things, find better Subjects of Discourse; who knows not how to be ingenious within reasonable Compass; but, to pick up a sorry Conceit, is forced to make Excursions beyond the Bounds of Honesty and Decency; and, if the Word of God be true, into the very Confines of Destruction and Death, since Judgments are prepared for Scorners, and Stripes for the Back of Fools.

THE Purpose of all this is, to engage Men of Wit and Ingenuity, who place much of their Dexterity, and some Part of their Pride, in the Art of scoffing and ridiculing others, to weigh soberly and seriously the Account they must one Day give, of the Employment of their Parts; and the more they have hitherto embezzled them, the more to expiate that Unthriftiness, by a wiser and more careful Managery for the future; and so, instead of that vain, empty, and vanishing Mirth, they have courted here, they may find a full and eternal Satisfaction in the Joy of their Lord hereafter.

III. WITH

[m] 1 Kings xviii. 27. [n] Isa. xliv. 14, &c. [o] Barrow's Works, Vol. I. [p] The Government of the Tongue, &c. [q] Barrow, ibid. [r] Barrow, ibid. [s] Prov. xix. 29. [t] The Government of the Tongue, &c.

The Government of the Tongue, with Respect to ourselves. And 1. Against Boasting.

III. WITH Respect to ourselves, the Duty of governing our Tongues consists in the Modesty and Decency of our Words and Expressions, to which all Boasting and Ostentation, all Positiveness and Obscenity of Speech are directly opposite. If we look into the Family of Boasters, we shall soon perceive the Subjects of their Ostentation are, either some natural Excellencies, such as Beauty or Wit; or some accidental Acquisitions, such as Honour and Wealth, &c. but, since God is manifestly the Author and Giver of all these, the Foundation of our glorying in them is utterly taken away. No Man, I suppose, fancies himself to be his own Creator; and tho' some have assumed to be the Carvers of their own Fortunes, yet the frequent Defeats of Mens Industry and Contrivance do sufficiently confute the bold Pretence, and give them to understand, that there is a Divine Providence above them, which can either blast or prosper their Attempts. The Piety of some is another Article of their Ostentation: But as this is less owing to ourselves, than any Endowment of Nature; so, when once it begins to be boasted of, it is utterly blasted, and becomes insignificant: For even of the most Christian Actions, such as Prayer, Alms, and Fasting, our Saviour has told us, that, when they are done to be seen of Men, and with a Design to catch at their Applause, that is all the Reward, they are likely to have. Nay, that is a Reward, which they frequently miss of too, since Vanity quite drowns the Notice of the Things, on which it is founded, and, as common Experience shews, Men are not so apt to say, "such a Person is handsome, wise, and good, "as that he is proud, upon the Conceit of being so." * In a Word, he that celebrates his own Excellencies, must be content with his own Applauses; for he will get none of others, unless it be from those fawning Sycophants, whose Praises are worse than the bittersest Detraction.

Its Vanity.

Its Ridiculousness.

THUS foolish a Sin is Ostentation, that it effectually undermines and supplants itself. 'Tis Glory that it seeks, and yet instead of gaining That, it loses common and ordinary Estimation. It has a strange Ambition to be popular, and yet nothing makes a Man so despicable, and useless in the World. To do him a Kindness most Men are loth, because they foresee he will arrogate it to himself, as the Effect of his Merit; to receive one from him, none, that are not in the greatest Exigence, are willing, because they know it is not only sure to be proclaimed, but magnified much above its true Worth. He is excluded therefore from all Commerce in Life, and seems only of Use to give Sport to his Company; which, by suggesting some Hints, and now and then shewing a Nod or Smile of Approbation, can make him display himself more disadvantageously, more ridiculously, than the most satyrical Character could possibly do.

IN the mean Time, though he goes on at this foolish Rate, yet, according to Solomon's Observation, this Distemper of his precludes all Means of his growing wiser: For [x] seest thou a Man wise in his own Conceit? There is more Hope of a Fool, than of him; and the Reason is evident, because he discards the two great Instruments of Instruction, Admonition and Observation. [y] The former he thinks superseded by his own Perfections, and the latter he circumscribes within himself; and yet, even here, instead of making Enquiry into his Faults and Defects, he fixes his Contemplation only on his more splendid Qualities, with which he is so dazzled, that, when you bring him to the darker Parts of himself, it fares with him, as with those, that come newly from gazing on the Sun, he can see nothing.

Its Cure.

To cure the Imposthumation in our Minds then, which occasions this vain Ostentation of our Tongue, a good Way will be, to put ourselves under the Course, which the Apostle prescribes, [z] to look not every Man on his own Things, but every Man also on the Things of others, i. e. to observe the Good, that is visible in every Man, and, when we find ourselves mounting into our Altitudes, to clog our Wings with the Rememberance of those, that have out-soared us, not in Opinion only, but in true Merit: Or, if we must needs be looking into ourselves, to take a full and just Survey of all; to estimate our Sins, as well as Virtues, and so considering, how many and heinous are the one, as well as how few and defective are the other, instead of the proud Pharisee's, [a] Lord, I thank thee, that I am not as other Men are, we shall be led, with the humble Publican, to smite on our Breasts, and say, Lord, be merciful to me a Sinner.

ANOTHER

[u] Matth. vi. 5. * The Government of the Tongue, by the Author of the Whole Duty of Man.
[x] Prov. xxvi. [y] The Government of the Tongue, &c. [z] Phil. ii. 4. [a] Luke xviii. 11, 13.

ANOTHER Breach upon the Modesty and Decency of Conversation, (for it will not be expected, I hope, that I should enlarge upon that obscene and smutty Talk, which, the Apostle tells us, [b] should not so much as once be named among Christians) is a certain Peremptoriness in Discourse, which consists either in a magisterial Manner of dictating Matters of Opinion, or, in a positive Manner, of averring Matters of Fact. Against Positiveness.

[c] Now, besides that the former of these is a manifest Incroachment upon the common Birthright of Mankind, who have, every one of them, a Liberty of thinking and judging, according to their own Understandings; there is this manifest Incongruity attending it, that no Man can be positively assured, whether what he dictates so confidently be, in Reality, Truth or no: For, [d] the Thoughts of mortal Men, says the wise Hebrew, are miserable, and our Devices are but uncertain. For the corruptible Body presses down the Soul, and the earthly Tabernacle weigheth down the Mind, that museth upon many Things; and hardly do we guess aright at Things, that are upon Earth, and with Labour do we find the Things that are before us, but the Things that are in Heaven, and of difficult and abstruse Speculation, who hath searched out? And, if so, 'tis Pride and Presumption to impose mere Conjectures for infallible Oracles upon other Mens Judgments; for, who made thee to differ from another? "Since God has made Rationality the common Portion of Mankind, how came it "to be thy Inclosure? Or, what Signature has he set upon thy Understanding, "what Mark of Excellence, that it should be paramount?" The great Misfortune is, [e] that Men of this sanguine Complexion, in relation to their own Sentiments, are generally made up of Pride and Ignorance, which, of all others, is the most unhappy Composition. For Ignorance, being, of itself, like stiff Clay, when once Pride comes to scorch and harden it, grows perfectly impenetrable: And accordingly we may observe, that none are so obstinate and inconvincible, as your half-witted People, who know just enough to excite their Pride, but not so much as to cure their Ignorance. But even, if this should not be the Case, Peremptoriness is certainly a Thing that befits no Form of Understanding. Wise Men it makes disobliging and troublesome, and Fools ridiculous and contemptible: It casts a Prejudice upon the most solid Reasoning, and renders the lighter more notoriously despicable: Good Parts, by being tinctured with it, are made a Snare to their Owners, and useless to others; and mean Parts, under its Infection, are condemned to be always so, by despising the Aids which should improve them.

THE like may be said of that other Kind of Peremptoriness, which consists in asserting Matters of Fact with so much Positiveness, that it is attended with many ill Consequences, though perhaps of a different Nature; that it often engages Men in Oaths and Execrations, to confirm their incredible Stories; that it betrays them into Feuds and perpetual Quarrels, when they meet with others, as positive as themselves; that it exposes them to the Contempt and Scorn of every Company, while the Good abominate their Sin, and the Ill triumph over their Folly; and yet, after all, that it is so far from gaining Credit to their present Affirmations, that it destroys it for the future. For he, that sees a Man make no Difference in the Confidence of his asserting Realities and Fictions, can never take his Measures by any Thing he avers, but, according to the common Proverb, will be in Danger of disbelieving him, even when he speaks Truth. Against Positiveness in Matters of Fact.

IN the mean Time, what is there, that he proposes to himself by his Positiveness, that may not be obtained more effectually by a modest and unconcerned Relation? He, that barely relates what he has heard, or proposes modestly what his Opinion is, leaving the Hearer to judge of its Probability, does, doubtless, as civilly entertain the Company, as he, that throws down his Gauntlet, in Attestation of what he affirms. He as much, nay, much more persuades his Hearers, because violent Asseverations serve only to give Men an untoward Umbrage, that the Speaker is conscious of his own Falseness; and, all the while, he has his Retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the Truth and Certainty of what he affirms or relates. So that, upon the whole, tho' the Things, which Men advance, be never so certain and infallible, yet it seems much more decent and adviseable, not to press them with too much Importunity; because Boldness, as we hinted before, is so known a Pander to Lying, that Truth cannot but come in Danger of being defamed by its Attendance and Proximity.

[b] Eph. v. 3. [c] The Government of the Tongue, &c. [d] Wisdom ix. 14. [e] The Government of the Tongue, &c.

To conclude, Modeſty is ſo amiable, ſo inſinuating a Thing, that all the Rules of Oratory cannot help Men to a more agreeable Ornament in Diſcourſe. And, if they would but try it in the two foregoing Inſtances, they will undoubtedly find it to be Fact—that a modeſt Propoſal will ſooner captivate Mens Reaſon, and a modeſt Relation, their Belief.

Motives and Conſiderations againſt it.

THESE are ſome of the Duties and Enormities of Speech, in the Purſuit or Avoidance of which, the good or ill Government of our Tongue will conſiſt. And therefore, to heighten our Care in this Reſpect, let it be remembered, [f] that the Uſe of Speech is a peculiar Prerogative of Man above other Creatures, and beſtowed upon us for moſt excellent Purpoſes; which we ſadly pervert, when we make it an Inſtrument, either of reviling God, or injuring our Brother, or expoſing ourſelves: That our Breath, as well as other Faculties, is the pure Gift of God, which he may withdraw when he pleaſes; and, in ſo doing, ſurprize us, perhaps, with an Oath, a Blaſphemy, or a Detraction in our Mouths: That, if this he ſhould not do, our Tranſgreſſions, however, of this Kind, do not fly off into empty Air, but are recorded in the Volume of his all-containing Mind, to be produced againſt us at the great Day of Judgment; and that, in the great and terrible Day of the Lord, [h] every idle Word (as we are told) and much more then every wicked and profane, every hurtful and abuſive Word, that Men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give an Account thereof. Since [i] Death and Life, then, are in the Tongue; ſince [k] by our Words we ſhall be juſtified, and by our Words we ſhall be condemned; ſince ſo great a Streſs is laid upon this, that [l] if any Man ſeemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his Tongue, that Man's Religion is vain; how earneſt ſhould the Conſideration of theſe Things make us in our daily Supplications to God, that, in Conjunction with our own Endeavours, he would be pleaſed to [m] ſet a Watch before our Mouths, and keep the Door of our Lips, that [n] no corrupt Communication, of any Kind, may proceed from thence, but that which is good to the Uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter Glory to God, Grace to the Hearers, and Salvation to our own Souls.

SECT. III.

Of the Government of the whole Man.

THE two great Virtues relating to the Government of the reſt of the Body, are Chaſtity and Temperance: But of theſe we ſhall have leſs Reaſon to treat with any great Prolixity, becauſe they are Things obvious to every one's Conception.

Chaſtity, what.

I. NOW Chaſtity, as it relates to a ſingle State, conſiſts in a total Abſtinence from all Manner of Uncleanneſs; not only that of Adultery and Fornication, but from all other more unnatural Sorts, whether committed upon ourſelves, or in Commerce with any other: And, even in a conjugal Eſtate, it requires ſuch Temper and Moderation, as may preſerve the Ends of Matrimony, and continue it (what it was intended to be) a Remedy, and not an Incentive to Laſciviouſneſs. Nor does this Virtue reſtrain us from the groſſer Acts only, but ſets a Guard likewiſe upon [o] our Eyes, upon [p] our Hands, upon [q] our Tongues, and upon our very Thoughts and Imaginations; for it accounts [r] all laſcivious Looks, obſcene Language, impure Thoughts, and immodeſt Behaviour; all pampering and luxurious Diet to inflame ourſelves; all induſtrious Endeavours to kindle thoſe Flames, and attract, firſt their Eyes, and then the Deſires of others; as well as all Coquetry, and Affectation of Dreſs and Deportment, which have a Tendency that Way, among the Number of its Tranſgreſſions. But of theſe Things we have treated already in our Expoſition of the ſeventh Commandment, and have only to add, in this Place; that, [s] as of all Vices, to which Mankind are ſubject, there is none of greater Danger and worſe Conſequence to us, than thoſe, which the Luſts of our Fleſh tempt us to; none, to which Nature is more prone; none, by which it is more vilely debaſed, more ſhamefully expoſed, and more mortally wounded; that Perſon we cannot but pronounce very happy, who, in Its Commendation.

Strength

[f] The Government of the Tongue, &c. [g] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [h] Matth. xii. 36.
[i] Prov. xviii. 21. [k] Matth. xii. 37. [l] James i. 26. [m] Pſal. cxli. 3. [n] Eph. iv. 20.
[o] Matth. v. 28. [p] Ibid. ver. 30. [q] Eph. iv. 29. [r] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.
[s] Stanhope, ibid. Vol. IV.

Strength of this Virtue, keeps under his Body, and brings it into Subjection; ſince by it he is Conqueror of the ſtrongeſt and ſubtleſt Enemy, and has learnt to be deaf to the buſieſt and moſt importunate Solliciations of a Syren, that labours perpetually to ruin him by her treacherous Incantations; ſince by it he ſecures his native Freedom and Greatneſs of Spirit, preſerves his Faculties from thoſe thick unwelcome Miſts, by which Senſe and Appetites ungoverned darken their Sight; ſecures Order and Peace within, by ſubduing all rebellious Paſſions, and keeping Reaſon and Religion conſtantly ſupreme; fixing the Affections upon ſuch Objects, as deſerve their Care and Aſſiduity, and exerciſing the Mind in the ſweet Raptures of Meditations and Prayers, the Thirſt of ſpiritual Comforts, and the unſpeakable Delights, which reſult from an holy Converſation, and fervent Love of God. And ſo we proceed to

II. THE other Virtue, which concerns our Bodies, and that is Temperance, which ſeems to be of different Sorts, according to the Objects about which it is exerciſed. For there is, 1. Temperance in Eating and Drinking, which is not only a neceſſary Duty in Chriſtianity, but a very ornamental Virtue likewiſe. It renders lovely and beautiful the Perſon that is endued with it: It makes him reſpected and reverenced by all, that know him. For a Man, that eats and drinks only for Neceſſity, to repair the daily Decays of his Body, and not to pleaſe his Palate, or ſatisfy the Cravings of a luxurious and extravagant Appetite, lives as becomes a Man; upholds the Dignity of his Nature, and maintains that Dominion, which the rational Part of him, his Soul, ought to have over the brutiſh Part of him, his Body: Whereas he, who is a Slave to his Palate, or drinks away his Reaſon, turns a wiſe Man into a Fool, and a Man into a Beaſt; and is therefore more vile and deſpicable than other Fools, or other Beaſts; becauſe his Folly, or his Want of Reaſon, is the Effect of his own vicious Choice, whereas theirs was the Lot of their Creation: [u] Take heed therefore to yourſelves, ſays our Saviour, leſt, at any Time, your Hearts be overwhelmed with Surfeiting and Drunkenneſs; for [x] Wine is a Mocker; ſtrong Drink is raging, and whoſoever is deceived thereby is not wiſe. Temperance in Eating and Drinking.

2. THERE is Temperance in Apparel, which conſiſts in our uſing ſuch Habits and Dreſſes, as ſuit with the Cuſtom of the Country, where we live, and that Station and Quality of Life, whereunto we are appointed. [y] Gorgeous Apparel, as our Saviour obſerves, is fit for the Courts of Kings: Nor is it any Oſtentation of Pride, but rather a Matter of good Order and Decency, that Perſons, inveſted with high Power and Authority, ſhould, in their very Garb and Appearance, diſtinguiſh themſelves from others: But then there are theſe Reſtrictions, which this Virtue of Temperance lays upon Men of all Conditions. 1. That the Coſtlineſs of Apparel exceed not the Quality and Ability of the Wearer. For beſides the Debts, and other conſequential Miſchiefs, unavoidably incurred by ſuch Extravagance; [z] this certainly is an Offence againſt the Decency, we juſt now mentioned, againſt that natural and becoming Order, which the Wiſdom of all Ages has agreed upon, as moſt convenient to diſcriminate People one from another, and, in the Matter of Quality, to prevent Diſreſpect and Confuſion. 2. That the Coſtlineſs of our Apparel obſtruct not our doing the Good, we might otherwiſe do, in ſeveral Acts of Charity: For, ſince Charity and doing Good, is the very End of God's beſtowing Riches upon us, the Pretence of our deſiring them, and the beſt Uſe we can poſſibly make of them; we certainly muſt be ſelf-condemned, if, to pleaſe a vitiated Imagination of our own, or attract the Eyes of others, we lay them out in ſuch extravagant Manner upon ourſelves, as to defraud many poor and needy Creatures of the neceſſary Comforts of Life. 3. That our Dreſs and Attire be ſuch, as ſhall neither naturally, nor deſignedly ſerve to the Purpoſes of Looſeneſs and Immodeſty in ourſelves, nor miniſter Temptations to the unwary Hearts, or the heated and depraved Imaginations of others. 4. That too much of our Time be not taken up in dreſſing and adorning ourſelves; becauſe Time is not our own, and muſt not be expended, as we think fit. And, 5. That, when we are never ſo richly and elegantly dreſſed, we be not ſo conceited, and highly opinionated of ourſelves, as to look down upon others, that make not the like Appearance, with Contempt and Deriſion. For ſince Cloaths (as we muſt allow) add no real Value to any Perſon, the Vanity muſt be egregious, to ſpend any conſiderable Part either of our Thoughts, or Time, or Wealth, or Eſteem, about them. Temperance in Apparel.

3. ONCE

[t] Blackhall's Sermons, Vol. I.
[z] Fleetwood, on Relative Duties.
[u] Luke xxi. 34.
[x] Prov. xx. 1.
[y] Luke vii. 25.

Temperance in Recreations.

3. ONCE more; there is a Temperance in the Matter of our Recreations. For, though theſe are not only uſeful, but, many Times, neceſſary, to breathe our Spirits, after they have been almoſt ſtifled in a Crowd of Buſineſs, and ſo divert our wearied Thoughts, which, like the Strings of a Lute, by being ſlackened now and then, will ſound the ſweeter, when they come to be wound up again; yet we muſt take great Care, that we turn not our Phyſick into Food, and make that our Buſineſs, which ſhould be our Diverſion; that our Recreations be ſhort, and apt to refreſh, but not to ſteal away our Minds from ſeverer Employments. For long Sports and Recreations are like a large Entry to a little Houſe; they take up ſo much Room in the narrow Compaſs of our Time, that there is not Space enough left in it for the more uſeful Apartments; and, ſo far as our Sports do exceed the Meaſures of neceſſary and convenient Recreation, they are unwarrantable Incroachments either upon our Calling, or our Religion. The like Care we muſt take, to make our Recreations a liberal Exerciſe to amuſe and recreate us, and not a ſordid Trade to get Money. For ſome Money indeed we may be allowed to play, as much, as will be neither any great Concern to the Loſer, nor Triumph to the Winner; but he, that propoſes to adventure any conſiderable Sum this Way, [b] runs himſelf manifeſtly into the Danger either of Covetouſneſs, and an eager Deſire of winning, or of Rage, and Anger at his ill Fortune, if he happens to loſe; both of which will naturally engage him in other Commiſſions. Covetouſneſs will tempt him to cheat and cozen, and Anger to ſwear and curſe, as common Experience ſhews: The Man therefore, who plays deep, may every Time be ſaid to ſet his Soul, together with his Money, to ſtake, and is ſure to loſe all Senſe of the Sport and Recreation, which he pretends to aim at; becauſe, all the while that he plays, he is convulſed with alternate Paſſions, and has, at one Time, the Deſires and Fears of the Covetous, and, anon, the Impatience and Rage of the furious Man, boiling in his Breaſt.

Niggardlineſs.

THESE are ſome of the chief Inſtances of that Virtue of Temperance, which concerns our Bodies, and we have only hitherto conſidered the Tranſgreſſions of them, in Point of Exceſs. [c] There is another Evil, ſays the Royal Preacher, which I have ſeen under the Sun; and it is common among Men; a Man to whom God hath given Riches, Wealth, and Honour, ſo that he wanteth nothing for his Soul of all that he deſireth; yet God giveth him not Power to eat thereof. Miſerable Creatures! who cannot find in their Hearts to borrow ſo much from their Cheſts, as may fill their Bellies, or cloath their Backs; who are ſo intent upon the World, ſo moiling and drudging in it, that they cannot afford themſelves competent Times for Sleep, much leſs for Recreations: This is Vanity, and it is an evil Diſeaſe. And therefore he very juſtly concludes, [d] it is good and comely for one to eat and drink, meaning in Moderation, and to enjoy the Good of all the Labour, that he taketh under the Sun, all the Days of his Life, which God giveth him; for this is his Portion, and the Gift of God.

Of Mortification.

Our natural Depravity.

EVER ſince the firſt Corruption of our Nature, our Bodies are become the Inſtruments of Sin, and the Deſires and Appetites, that ariſe from thence, are in a great Meaſure our Prompters and Seducers to it. Theſe are the Luſts, which war againſt the Soul, as the Apoſtle declares; and yet they have the good Luck to be thought our deareſt Friends, and looked upon as a Part of ourſelves. [e] In them, when accompliſhed, we account ourſelves happy; in them, when croſſed, we account ourſelves miſerable; and in them, when unheard, we account ourſelves affronted. We allow them indeed to do any Thing with us; they can put out our Eyes, and be welcome; they can blind our Judgments, and make Stupification pleaſe us. Our holy Religion however teaches us another Leſſon: It informs us, [f] that, notwithſtanding this dear Union and Commerce between Soul and Body, there are no two in the World at greater Enmity with one another; none, that drive on ſuch different Intereſts, as they. Our fleſhly Luſts are in a State of Rebellion againſt our Reaſon; and to liſten to them, is to be Confederates to our own Ruin. Some of them are actually

[a] Scott's Chriſtian Life, P. I. [b] The Whole Duty of Man. [c] Eccleſ. vi. 1, 2. [d] Ibid. v. 18, 19.
[e] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [f] Young, Ibid.

actually evil, and the reſt are inclinable to be ſo; and therefore the Buſineſs of Religion is to deſtroy the one, and reſtrain the other; from whence ariſe the two great Chriſtian Duties of Mortification and Self-denial.

Mortification, what, and wherein it conſiſts.

I. THE Apoſtle, ſpeaking of what we have hinted above, viz. that [f] the Fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the Fleſh, and that theſe are contrary the one to the other, gives us a long Muſter-Roll of that formidable Army of Wickedneſs, againſt which we engaged ourſelves at our Baptiſm to contend. The Works of the Fleſh, ſays he, are manifeſt, which are theſe; Adultery, Fornication, Uncleanneſs, Laſciviouſneſs, Idolatry, Witchcraft, Hatred, Variance, Emulation, Wrath, Striſe, Seditions, Hereſies, Envyings, Murthers, Drunkenneſs, Revellings, and ſuch-like. Now, to ſome, or more of theſe, every one of us, by our depraved Nature, is inclined, and perhaps have run great Lengths in the Commiſſion of them. The Inclination or Appetite therefore, whereby we have been inſtigated to do theſe Things, we muſt ſo totally extirpate and deſtroy, as to leave no Remains of it in our Nature. [g] For it is not enough that we neither practiſe any of theſe Sins, nor conſent to the Practice of them, unleſs we make it our conſtant Endeavour likewiſe, to wean and abſtract ourſelves from thoſe evil Tendencies and Inclinations, which we have contracted by our adhering to them. Theſe Inclinations indeed are no farther our Sins, than we yield our Conſent to them; yet, while we patiently harbour them in our Boſom, without endeavouring to ſmother and extinguiſh them, they are in ſome Meaſure choſen and voluntary, and may be ſaid to have in them the Bane and Formality of Sin. Though we ſhould not think it proper, for Inſtance, to run into the ſame Acts of Laſciviouſneſs, that we have formerly done; yet, while we retain, with Delight, our Inclination towards it, and quietly pleaſe ourſelves in the fantaſtic Joys of it; while we freely entertain its lewd and filthy Ideas, and ſuffer them to walk to and fro upon the Stage of our Fancies without Check or Controul; we are ſtill incontinent in the Sight of God, to whom our Luſt is as obvious within the Cloſet of our Minds, as upon the Theatre of our Practice. We muſt not think therefore that our Sin is mortified, becauſe we neither practiſe, nor conſent to the Practice of it; for, while we have any Inclinations to it remaining in us, we muſt ſtrive to ſubdue and conquer them; otherwiſe we have only forced our Enemy into his laſt Retreat, where, by our own Neglect, we give him an Opportunity to rally, and re-inforce himſelf againſt us. Our Sin ſtill lives in our Inclination to Sin, and will ſoon, if it be not beaten thence, recover its broken Forces, and become as formidable again as ever. If ever therefore we mean to mortify our vicious Inclination, we muſt not only abſtain from the Sin itſelf, but avoid all Occaſions, that lead to it; deny ourſelves thoſe lawful Liberties, that too nearly approach it, and impoſe upon ourſelves ſuch voluntary Reſtraints and Severities, as have a natural Tendency to ſtarve and root it out.

A Chriſtian Duty.

How much it is every Chriſtian's Duty, in this Senſe of the Word, to mortify his evil and corrupt Affections, needs not ſurely to be told him, when he remembers, how, at his firſt Initiation into the Service of Chriſt, [h] he renounced all the ſinful Luſts of the Fleſh, and at the ſacred Altar, when he ratified his baptiſmal Vow, [i] offered and preſented unto God himſelf his Soul and Body, to be a reaſonable, holy, and lively Sacrifice unto him: When he reflects, how frequently, in the Old Teſtament, he is called upon [k] to ceaſe to do Evil, to learn to do well, to [l] circumciſe himſelf to the Lord, and to take away the Fore-ſkin of his Heart; and how inceſſantly in the New; to [m] purge out the old Leaven, in order to become a new Lump, and [n] to put off, concerning his former Converſation, the Old Man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful Luſts, and to be renewed in the Spirit of his Mind: And when he conſiders, how diſmal a Proſpect is ſet before him, if he continues his vicious Inclinations; but how bleſſed and joyful an one, if he abandons and deſtroys them: For this is a Decree, that ſhould always be ſounded in every Chriſtian's Ear, [o] If ye live after the Fleſh, ye ſhall die; but, if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the Deeds of the Body, ye ſhall live.

And neceſſary to our future Happineſs.

AND indeed, if we conſider the preſent Depravation of our Nature, together with the Nature of thoſe Felicities, which God has provided for us in a future Life, we ſhall find it morally impoſſible for us ever to attain the one, without endeavouring to correct or amend the other. Our future Felicity will conſiſt in the beatific Viſion of God and his Chriſt, in the happy Society of Saints and Angels, and in ſuch rational Pleaſures and Employments, as the Beauty of the Object, and other Circumſtances of the Place may be ſuppoſed to ſupply. But now allowing the Caſe, that all the great Hinderances of Impiety were removed; that God were ſo eaſy and indulgent as to paſs by, in the other World, all the Affronts, that wicked Souls have offered him in this; yet ſuch is the Incongruity between their Temper, and the Temper of Heaven, that he could not make them happy there, without either creating in them a new Heart, or creating for them a new Heaven. For alas! if we conſider the Matter rightly, how could Souls of their Reliſh and Complexion find a proper Employment for themſelves in the Regions of Bliſs? There are no wanton Amours among thoſe heavenly Lovers, no Rivers of Wine, among the Rivers of Pleaſure, to gratify their boundleſs Senſuality: No Paraſite, to flatter their lofty Pride; no Miſeries, to feed their meagre Envy; no Miſchiefs, to tickle their deviliſh Revenge; but all the Felicities, with which that heavenly State abounds, viz. Praiſe, Love, and Contemplation, are ſuch, that they would loath and nauſeate them, as too pure and refined for their depraved Appetites; and not improbably, if they had their own Option, deſire to flee to Hell for Shelter, and to Spirits of their own Depravity, rather than ſtay to be tormented in an Heaven ſo incongruous to their Nature. And hence we may obſerve, that, as neceſſary as it is to obtain Heaven and avoid Hell, ſo neceſſary it is for us to crucify the Fleſh, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, with the Affections and Luſts; becauſe God has reduced us to this ſhort Iſſue, either our Sins or our Souls muſt die; either we muſt ſhake Hands with Heaven, or with our depraved Appetites: So that, unleſs we value eternal Happineſs ſo little, as to exchange it for the ſordid trifling Pleaſures of Sin; and unleſs we love our Sins ſo well, as to ranſom them with the Blood of our immortal Souls, it nearly concerns us, in the next Place, to ſit us down, and conſider a little, by what Helps and Inſtruments we may beſt be enabled to ſubdue them.

[f] Gal. v. 17, &c. [g] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Part III. [h] Vide Church-Catechiſm. [i] Vide Communion Service. [k] Iſa. i. 16, 17. [l] Jer. iv. 4. [m] 1 Cor. v. 7. [n] Eph. iv. 22, 23. [o] Rom. viii. 13.

The Means and Inſtruments of doing it.

The Holy Spirit.

IN examining the Gifts and Graces of the Holy Ghoſt, we had Occaſion to conſider more largely its ordinary Operations, and how far they contribute to the Sanctification of our Minds and Affections, and need only obſerve in this Place, that, conſidering the Infirmity of our Natures, and the many Temptations, we have to encounter; how we are habituated to a ſenſual Life, before we are capable of exerciſing our Reaſon, and how much our Wills are biaſſed, and led aſide by our carnal Inclinations; it is hardly to be imagined, that we ſhould ever be able to retrieve ourſelves from the Power and Dominion of our Luſts, without ſome ſupernatural Aid and Aſſiſtance. We want not indeed an Underſtanding, capable of diſtinguiſhing between Good and Evil; nor is our Will ſo far determined to Evil, as not to be able to comply with the Dictates of right Reaſon; we can deliberate what is beſt to chuſe, and chuſe what we find beſt upon Deliberation; but then we are like a Man ſtanding between two contrary Roads, naturally indeed free to turn either to the Right-Hand or to the Left; but, on the Left-hand Way, there are ſo many Temptations, perpetually beckoning to us, and inviting us unto that which is evil, and our carnal Paſſions and Appetites are ſo ready, upon all Occaſions, to yield and comply with them, that we ſhould certainly attend to their Lure, did not the Holy Spirit, with very ſtrong Arguments, importune us to turn to the Right-Hand Way of Virtue and Goodneſs.

Our own Endeavours.

THE great Principle then, which is to begin and conduct the Work of our Mortification, is the Spirit of God, operating upon our Minds, ſometimes by the Arguments and Motives of the Goſpel; ſometimes by external Providences, that excite us to our Duty; ſometimes by the Aids and Aſſiſtances of his Holy Angels; and many Times by thoſe internal Motions and Suggeſtions, which he himſelf immediately infuſes. But how great a Share ſoever this bleſſed Agent may have in this Work, yet, ſince we are enjoined to cleanſe ourſelves from all Filthineſs both of Fleſh and Spirit, perfecting Holineſs in the Fear of God, there is certainly ſome Part of it incumbent upon us. As we are naturally dead in Treſpaſſes and Sins, we cannot indeed give the firſt Motions to our Minds, in the Buſineſs we are now ſpeaking of; but, when once we perceive it given, we have the Means and Inſtruments in our Power, that are proper to continue it, and, by the Bleſſing of God, to bring it to Perfection. Upon any ſudden Conviction of the Sinfulneſs of our Ways, we can ſit ourſelves down, and conſider the Motives and Arguments, which our Holy Religion gion has provided us againſt the moſt pleaſant and alluring, the moſt profitable and advantageous of our Luſts: When we have weighed theſe in a juſt Balance, the momentary Pleaſures and Profits of this Life, with that Eternity of Happineſs or Miſery, that waits us in the next, we can then take a Survey of the Road that leads to our Duty, and view carefully all the Difficulties and Temptations, that lie in our Way; and, when we have made a proper Eſtimate of both, aſk our Hearts ſeriouſly, whether, for the Joys, that are ſet before us, in a diſtant Country, they are willing to ſurmount the one, and renounce the other. After we have thus calmly conſidered with ourſelves all the Arguments againſt our Luſts, and all the Difficulties of forſaking them, and have reaſoned our Wills into an expreſs Conſent to abandon them for ever; we can then fall down upon our bended Knees, and, in a ſolemn Manner, devote ourſelves to God's Service, moſt religiouſly vowing and promiſing, that whatever we have done amiſs, we will never do ſo any more. In Obedience to this Reſolution, we can keep ourſelves at a wary Diſtance from our Luſts, and every Thing, that may prove an Excitement to them; at leaſt, till we have ſo far gotten the Maſtery of them, that their Nearneſs ceaſes to be a Temptation to us: And, to compleat this Maſtery, we can draw off from the Enemy their Succours, by Faſting and Abſtinence; can confirm our Party by a religious Obſervation of God's holy Ordinances; and procure freſh Auxiliaries from above, by conſtant Invocation and Prayer.

THIS is certainly what any of us can do: And, if we continue to do this, with an hearty Purpoſe to extricate ourſelves from the Paths of Deſtruction, there is no Doubt, but that God's Grace will be ſufficient for us. By the Concurrence of this Principle with our own Faculties, this holy Reſolution was at firſt begotten in us; and therefore 'twill injure the Character of our Heavenly Father, to think, that, for Want of any Aſſiſtance, ſo long as our own Endeavours are not wanting, he will ſuffer his own Offſpring to become abortive.

Of Self-denial.

Our Saviour's Words, Matth. xvi. 24, explained.

THE only Place, as I remember, wherein the Duty of Self-denial is expreſſly enjoined us, is in [q] the Diſcourſe, which our Saviour held with his Diſciples, not long before his Crucifixion; and, to find out the true Senſe of the Word, it may not be amiſs to enquire a little into ſome Circumſtances, that occaſioned the Diſcourſe. Our Saviour, as the Text acquaints us, had, ſome Time before, [r] ſhewn unto his Diſciples, that he muſt go up to Jeruſalem, and ſuffer many Things of the Elders, and Chief Prieſts, and Scribes, and, at laſt, be killed. Upon the hearing of this, Peter, who was always particularly zealous for his Maſter's Welfare, preſumes to expoſtulate with him, and (as the Text expreſſes it) [s] to rebuke him, ſaying, be it far from thee, Lord, this ſhall not be unto thee. There is a peculiar Emphaſis in the Words, Ἱλεώς σοι κύριε, which our Tranſlation does not ſo well anſwer. For they properly mean, Lord, favour thyſelf, or be not ſo negligent of thy Safety, as to ſuffer ſuch Evils to come upon thee. This in itſelf was no unkind Speech of the Apoſtle; but then the Misfortune was, that he had made no proviſional Exception for the Glory of God, nor any Reſerve for thoſe Obligations, which the Cauſe of Righteouſneſs required of his Maſter; and for this Reaſon he met with ſo ſevere a Reprehenſion —— [t] Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an Offence to me; for thou ſavoureſt not the Things that be of God, but thoſe that be of Men. The Character of this Diſciple will hardly admit us to think, that, how much ſoever his Advice might favour of Fleſh and Blood, there was any Spark in it, either of Pride, Diſſimulation, or Malice of Intention, which the Devil is wont to make uſe of in his Addreſſes to Mankind; and therefore it may be no bad Conjecture, that our Bleſſed Saviour called his Diſciple Satan, "becauſe he had imprudently run upon the ſame Advice, that Satan "employs, the moſt ſucceſsfully of all others, to ruin and undo Men by, and that "is the Advice of Self-indulgence."

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that our Saviour takes Occaſion from hence, to recommend two Duties, which himſelf intended to practiſe, though little in Uſe, before his Example taught us the Way; Self-denial, which being a Man's own Act, requires, requires, that he ſhould ſuffer from himſelf by voluntary Inflictions; and taking up our Croſs, which, being inflicted by another's Act, (for every condemned Perſon was, by his Sentence, to bear his Croſs to the Place of Execution) requires a ſubmiſſive and patient Bearing of involuntary Evils, or ſuch as the Providence of God ordains to come upon us from other Hands. Then ſaid Jeſus unto his Diſciples, if any Man will come after me, in the Capacity of a Diſciple, and Profeſſor of my Religion, let him deny himſelf, and take up his Croſs, and follow me.

[q] Matth. xvi. 24. [r] Ibid. ver. 21. [s] Ibid. ver. 22. [t] Ibid. ver. 23.

Self-denial, what.

FROM this Expoſition of the Context we may obſerve, that by the Word Self, in the Compound, we are not to underſtand (as ſome have imagined) any of the criminal Affections of our animal Part, but ſuch only, as are of an indifferent Nature. In our Conſtitution (as we ſaid in the former Section) we have Appetites, ſome that are morally evil, and others, that in themſelves are innocent, and only liable to be depraved, if they chance to be immoderately indulged. Of this Kind are the Deſires of Eaſe and Indolence, of proper Refreſhments and honeſt Pleaſures, and of avoiding ſuch Things, as are noxious and afflicting to human Nature; theſe were in our Nature from the very firſt, even before Sin had defaced its Purity, and, conſequently, our Saviour took them upon him with our Nature, tho' it is certain, he partook of nothing that was ſinful in it. To theſe it was, that St Peter, in the Advice he gave his Maſter, addreſſed himſelf; and his Maſter, in his Rejection of that Advice, has given us to underſtand, that even the moſt innocent Deſires of Nature are, upon ſome Occaſions, to be reſtrained. So that the Sum of the Doctrine, we are to inſiſt on under this Head, will amount to this—— [u] "That "there are voluntary Severities, conſiſting in the Submiſſion of ourſelves to many "unpleaſing Things, though otherwiſe avoidable; and in the Reſtraint of ourſelves "from many pleaſant Things, though otherwiſe lawful, which, upon their reſpective "Occaſions, we ought to engage in, as abſolutely neceſſary to make us good "Chriſtians."

The Neceſſity of it in a ſettled State.

WHEN we find the Chriſtian State ſo often compared unto a Warfare, it is to let us underſtand, that there is a neceſſary and continual Engagement of our rational Deſires againſt our ſenſual, in order to bring them under, and keep them in Obedience; and this is a Warfare, from whence there muſt be no Diſmiſſion. There muſt be no League, no Truce, no laying down of Arms in it: For our Enemies are perfidious, and will never keep the Peace; and therefore we are never out of Danger, but while we are actually fighting. St Paul, a Man of Miracles, and Viſions, and of Sanctity of Life more glorious than either, even while he was daily fought againſt from without, by the Malice of Satan and evil Men, was nevertheleſs obliged to fight againſt himſelf, to caſt down his Mind, as he calls it, and to beat down his Body, and bodily Affections: And leſt we might ſuppoſe, that he did this from a Principle of Vain-glory, the Affectation of Singularity, or a ſimple Miſtake of Judgment, he tells us withal, that the Reaſon of his exerciſing ſuch Diſcipline over himſelf was, leſt, for the Want of it, [x] he might poſſibly be a Caſt-away: And, if ſo great a Saint was obliged to maintain this Fight, for Fear of being a Caſt-away, who among Chriſtians can lay down their Arms, and be ſafe?

Now this fighting with our Appetites and Deſires is the very ſame Thing, as denying ourſelves; and the Practice of it conſiſts in reſtraining them, and not giving them leave to ſatiate themſelves on their particular Objects: For he that gives his Appetites their looſe and their Fill even of Enjoyments, that are otherwiſe lawful, brings himſelf in Danger of being worſted by them: Becauſe, by what he allows them, they will grow ſo very ſtrong, that 'tis a Thouſand to one, but they will take the reſt, in ſpite of his Approbation.

In a penitential State.

THUS, in the ordinary Courſe of every Man's Life, the Duty of Self-denial is neceſſary, even though he has never fallen into any flagitious Way: But then, if unhappily he has been engaged in a Courſe of Sin, the Reaſons and Obligations of it become ſtronger, To this Purpoſe, St Paul, ſpeaking of the ſeveral Offices of Repentance, reckons them up in the following Manner; [y] behold this ſelf-ſame Thing, that ye ſorrowed after a godly Sort, what Carefulneſs is wrought in you, yea, what Clearing of yourſelves, yea, what Indignation, yea, what Fear, yea, what vehement Deſire, yea, what Zeal, yea, what Revenge! So that a Man cannot repent, in the Senſe of the Scripture, without bringing himſelf under the daily Severities of Mourning, and Vigilance, and Reſtraint of Delights, and Labour in the Works of Charity, and whatever elſe may conduce to the humbling of our Nature, and taking Revenge

[u] Young's Sermons, Vol. II. [x] 1 Cor. ix. 27. [y] 2 Cor. vii. 11.

Revenge upon thoſe Paſſions and Deſires, whereby we have offended God. And, for this Reaſon, I ſuppoſe, it is, that the Ancients were wont to call ſuch Inſtances of Penance by the Name of Satisfactions: Not that they eſteemed them of Value to ſatisfy the Divine Juſtice, nothing but the Blood of Jeſus can do that; but that they thought them the Conditions, which the Goſpel requires of Penitents, as highly neceſſary, both for their preſent Correction, and future Caution: And accordingly we may obſerve, that [a] whenever the Fathers uſed this Word, 'tis either with Reſpect to Men, or to God; if to Men, then the Meaning of it is, that, by theſe external Acts of Sorrow, we ſatisfy the Church of our Repentance, and make Reparation for thoſe Offences and Scandals, which we gave by our Sins; but if to God, then 'tis taken for the Acknowledgment of our Faults, and the earneſt Deſire we have of Pardon and Forgiveneſs.

to a glorified State.

NOR is the Duty of Self-denial neceſſary to our preſent Condition only, whether we conſider it in a ſettled or penitential Capacity; but as it has a Tendency likewiſe to our future Glory and Felicity. It can hardly eſcape the Obſervation of any common Reader, that there is, in Scripture, a certain Fitneſs or Meetneſs required in thoſe, that are to be Partakers of the Inheritance of the Saints in Light; but then the Queſtion is, how we muſt acquire this Fitneſs? And by what Means we are to induce this perfective Diſpoſition into our Souls? The Apoſtle, indeed, tells us, concerning our Saviour himſelf, that [a] he was made perfect through Sufferings; for it became him, ſays he, of whom are all Things, and by whom are all Things, in bringing many Sons unto Glory, to make the Captain of their Salvation perfect through Suffering: But then theſe Words do not abſolutely imply, that theſe Sufferings of our Saviour were neceſſary for his perſonal Perfection: He might have paſſed to Glory an eaſier Way, becauſe he wanted no Virtue to accompliſh and qualify him for that State. They imply, however, that his Sufferings were neceſſary for his exemplary Perfection, i. e. as he was to be an Example to us, and the Captain and Preſident of our Salvation; as he was to lead us the Way, by which many adopted Sons of God might likewiſe paſs into Glory, ſo it was neceſſary that he ſhould be made perfect by Sufferings, becauſe no adopted Son, no Chriſtian, can ever be perfect without them: And accordingly we find it mentioned in the Chriſtian Covenant, as an expreſs Condition of our future Glory, [b] that, if we ſuffer with Chriſt, we ſhall alſo reign with him; for it is [c] through much Tribulation, (through many Wreſtlings or Contendings, as it is in the Original) that we muſt enter into the Kingdom of God.

Now, if the Spirit of God gives us Warning, that Sufferings are of ſo neceſſary Importance to our future Welfare, and yet, at the ſame Time, does not lay upon us any outward Neceſſity to ſuffer; this is a plain Indication, I think, that the Neceſſity lies upon ourſelves to take Care, that we ſuffer from our own voluntary Diſcipline; that we faſt often, pray much, impoſe Taſks of Labour, ſtrict Rules of Abſtinence, and have a continual Watch over ourſelves, which, in the Time of the Church's Peace and Tranquillity, was called a daily Martyrdom.

And even in Uſe among the beſt Heathens.

THE primitive Chriſtians were very remarkable for this Kind of Diſcipline. [d] Their callous Knees, and guttered Cheeks, and meagre Looks, occaſioned by their faſting, weeping, and praying, are often taken Notice of in Antiquity, though with us miſtaken for ſuperſtitious Uſages, and Acts of Supererogation. That Chriſtian, however, (as St Jerom calls one upon a like Occaſion) that Chriſtian, I ſay, is by much too delicate, who would excuſe himſelf from this Diſcipline in the School of Chriſt, when we may find, that, in every Heathen School, they required no leſs to make a Philoſopher; that is, in the Senſe of their ſober Stile, an honeſt and good Man.

[e] EPICURUS, indeed, preſented the World with a very ſpecious Scheme, when he pretended to ſatisfy the Aims both of Senſe and Morality together, when he invited Men to Virtue and Pleaſure at the ſame Time; telling them, that a Life, which was both virtuous and pleaſurable, was purely the Life of the Gods. But all the other Sects remonſtrate againſt this new Doctor, as one, who, by hanging out the Flag of Pleaſure, had covered all that was true, and laid aſide all that was great in Philoſophy. They had juſter Notions of the Corruption of human Nature; and therefore they teach, that whoever intends to be a virtuous Man, muſt by no Means, propoſe his Life to be a Scene of Pleaſure. They teach us, that Wiſdom and Felicity have built their Palaces together upon a craggy Rock, whither it is not a little difficult to aſcend: They repreſent their Hercules, as always engaging in Labours, always ſeeking Conflicts, always harſh and ſevere to himſelf; and his Character they propoſe to their Scholars, as the common Guide to Proficiency in good Living. But we have our Inſtruction from a better Fountain, and are ſufficiently advertized what we are to do, when we are commanded, by our Bleſſed Saviour, [f] to enter in at the ſtrait Gate; for wide is the Gate, and broad is the Way, that leadeth to Deſtruction; but ſtrait is the Gate, and narrow is the Way, which leadeth to Life, and few there be that find it.

[a] Cave's Primitive Chriſtianity, Part III [a] Heb. ii. 10. [b] 2 Tim. ii. 12. [c] Acts xiv. 22.
[d] Cave, ibid. [e] Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

Of Regeneration.

The Occaſion of our Saviour's Words, Matt. xix. 16.

THE firſt Place, wherein we find expreſs Mention made of our Regeneration, is, (as I take it) in our Saviour's Conference with Nicodemus. Nicodemus was a Ruler of the Jews, and of the Sect of the Phariſees, great Enemies to our Bleſſed Lord; but being convinced, by his Doctrine and Miracles, of his Divine Miſſion and Authority, he came, no doubt, though it was at Night that he came, with an Intent to be farther inſtructed by him. The Evangeliſt has recorded the firſt Addreſs, which this Ruler makes to our Saviour; but, from the Nature of our Saviour's Anſwer, ſome have been induced to think, that his whole Speech is not related; and that, after he had done his Preface, he might not improbably put ſome ſuch Queſtions to our Lord, as we find the young Man did in the Goſpel, viz. [g] What good Things he was to do, that he might obtain eternal Life? Becauſe the Anſwer, which is returned him, is ſo very much to this Purpoſe, and ſeems to have ſo ſlender a Connexion with what went before; [h] Verily, verily, I ſay unto thee, except a Man be born again, he cannot ſee the Kingdom of God.

To be born again is a Form of Speech, which not only occurs in the Writings of ſome [i] Gentile Moraliſts, but was of common Uſe among the Jewiſh Doctors. They received Proſelytes into the Church by Baptiſm; and being perſuaded, that the Heathen Soul was, by this Means, waſhed away, and a new and pure one ſubſtituted in its room, they were, for this Reaſon, wont to call theſe Proſelytes new-born, new Men, new Creatures, and the like. This was the common Phraſe and Stile of the Rabbins, and therefore our Saviour very juſtly reproves Nicodemus for his Ignorance of it; The Notion, [k] Art thou a Maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe Things? The Deſign of the Expreſſion, however, is to inform us, that there is a two-fold Birth or Nativity, which every one is to undergo: The firſt is common and natural; when the tender Infant quits its cloſer Cell, wherein it has been ſome Months impriſoned, and, coming into the World, enters into a new and different State from what it was in before: But the ſecond is ſpiritual and ſupernatural, when a Perſon, upon his firmly believing and embracing the Goſpel of Chriſt, is not only changed from his wicked Courſes, to a contrary Form of living, but is poſſeſſed likewiſe with Thoughts, and Deſires, and Affections, quite different from what he had before; inſomuch, that, both to himſelf and others, who behold him, he looks not like the ſame Man, but in the Temper of his Mind, as well as the Tenor of his Actions, is indeed another Creature.

and Nature of Regeneration.

HIS Underſtanding, which was before [l] darkened, being alienated from the Life of God, through the Ignorance that was in him, becomes then enlightened to diſcern his true Intereſt, and is informed with the Knowledge of thoſe great Truths, which he is moſt of all required to know, concerning God and himſelf, and a Life to come. [m] This Knowledge has a powerful Effect and Influence over his Will and Affections. The Belief of the great Truths of the Goſpel gives him a new Set of Principles, makes him have different Notions and Opinions of Things, form different Proſpects and Projects, and ſteer quite a contrary Courſe, to what he did before. For, whereas before he conſulted only his preſent Eaſe and Pleaſure, ſtudied the Gratifications of his ſenſual Luſts and Appetites, and gave himſelf up to the Intereſts of [f] Matth. vii. 13, 14. [g] Ibid. xix. 16. [h] John iii. 3. [i] Thus both the Platonicks and Stoicks uſe the Word Παλιγγενία, which is no other than Regeneration; the former, for the Renovation of all Things, after certain Intervals and Revolutions; and the latter, for the Renovation of all Things, after the Conflagration of the World. [k] John iii. 10. [l] Eph. iv. 18. [m] Ibbot's Sermons, Vol. I.

of this Life, the Welfare of his Body, and the Concerns of the World; he now mortifies his Members, which are upon the Earth, endeavours to ſubdue his Paſſions, and to get above his Body, and above the World. He is now governed by Reaſon, and not by Senſe; he walks by Faith, and not by Sight; and the World is crucified to him, and he to the World. He calculates all his Actions for Eternity, and is not ſo much concerned what befals him here, as what ſhall become of him hereafter. In a Word, he is new moulded and faſhioned, formed over again, and created, as it were, anew, by being furniſhed with a new Principle of Life and Action, engaged in new Courſes, and put upon new Deſigns and Undertakings. He has new Objects of his Hopes and Fears, of his Love and Hatred, new Thoughts and Sentiments of Things, and new Rules for the Conduct of his Life and Actions. Old Things are paſt away, and all Things are become new to him; nay, he is even new to himſelf, as well as others; and therefore very properly in Scripture-Language is he called a new Creature, or a new Creation.

AT the firſt Creation of the World, the Spirit of God, as we are told, moved upon the Face of the Waters, and was concerned in the Formation of Man: And, in the ſecond Creation, or Redemption of the World, the ſame Spirit moves in Mens Hearts, and inclines them to comply with thoſe gracious Terms of Reconciliation, which are offered to the World. And, for this Reaſon, St John, ſpeaking of thoſe that believed in our Saviour, gives us to know, that [n] they were born, not of Blood, nor of the Will of the Fleſh, nor of the Will of Man, but of God, i. e. it was not by any Strength of their own, that they had this Power of becoming the Sons of God, by believing in our Saviour, but by the Power of Divine Grace, proceeding from the Spirit of God. The ſame Power, which firſt formed Man out of the Duſt of the Earth, and, when he is returned to Duſt, will raiſe him out of it again, does create us again unto good Works, and faſhion us after the Image of him, who firſt created us in Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs: For, [o] if the Spirit of him, that raiſed Jeſus from the Dead, dwell in us; he, that raiſed up Chriſt from the Dead, ſhall quicken our mortal Bodies, i. e. from dead Works now, and hereafter from Death itſelf, by his Spirit, that dwelleth in us.

WE muſt not however imagine, that, becauſe the Author of our Regeneration is an Almighty Agent, the Effects of his Operations upon our Minds are either inſtantaneous or irreſiſtible; that ourſelves are purely paſſive under them, can contribute nothing towards them, and are wholly ignorant of the Steps and Meaſures, that are taken in them. [p] For, beſides that, theſe Notions are a manifeſt Defeat of all the Exhortations and Threatenings recorded in Scripture, and a great Diſcouragement to all virtuous Endeavours; they are a plain Contradiction to Reaſon and common Experience, both of which do abundantly teſtify, that the Grace of God, and thoſe good Motions, which are ſtirred up in us, may be, and frequently are, neglected and reſiſted; that Men muſt do ſomething themſelves, in order to conquer their vicious Inclinations, and acquire ſettled Habits of Piety and Virtue; and that this is a Work, which cannot be done in an Inſtant, but requires Time, as well as Pains, to bring it to Perfection.

FROM what hath been ſaid on this Subject, thus far purſued, we may plainly perceive, that Regeneration is that Change and Alteration in a Man, whereby his Nature, which is corrupted by Sin, is ſanctified and purified; whereby his Iniquities are purged away; and he, by God's Spirit, endued with true Knowledge, Righteouſneſs, and Holineſs: And we come now to ſhew the abſolute Neceſſity of it, in order to our future Happineſs.

Its Neceſſity to future Happineſs.

ST Paul, ſpeaking of ſome, who deſired to make a fair Shew in the Fleſh, and conſtrained others to be circumciſed, tells us expreſſly, that [q] in Chriſt Jeſus neither Circumciſion availeth any Thing, nor Uncircumciſion, but a new Creature. Circumciſion, we know, was an Ordinance of God's own Inſtitution, the Seal of the Covenant between him and his People, a Mark of Diſtinction between them and other Nations, and a Symbol of inward Purity, or Sanctity of Mind; and yet the Apoſtle tells thoſe, that held themſelves obliged to the Obſervation of it, that all its ſuppoſed Privileges and Prerogatives, without a Renovation of their Nature, availed nothing: And, [r] by Parity of Reaſon, he muſt be interpreted to ſay to us, that our Sacramental Waſhing in Baptiſm, our ſpiritual Gifts and Endowments. our profound Knowledge [n] John i. 13. [o] Rom. viii. 11. [p] Ibbot's Sermons, Vol. I. [q] Gal. vi. 15.

[r] Edwards, on Regeneration.

ledge and Learning, our Obſervation of the Ordinances of Chriſt, and our outward Acts of religious Worſhip will all avail us nothing, unleſs we have a new Principle implanted in us, ſuch as influences our Lives, and produces Evangelical Obedience. For it is not ſaying to our Saviour, Lord, Lord! nor all the fair Speeches, and Profeſſions in the World, that will recommend us to the Favour of God, who hath eternally decreed, that [z] without Holineſs no Man ſhall ſee him; and that [a] into the heavenly Jeruſalem, there ſhall, in no wiſe, enter any Thing that defileth, neither whatſoever worketh Abomination, or maketh a Lye.

WHAT all the Particulars of that City of God may comprize, it does not yet appear; but this we know in general, that the Company, the Employment, and the Happineſs of it, are of a pure and ſpiritual Nature, very different from any Thing here below, and directly contrary to all the ſinful Pleaſures, and ſenſual Enjoyments of the Men of this World. And therefore, if we would be Partakers of the Reſurrection of the Juſt; if we would be numbered among the Saints, and bear a Part in the Buſineſs and Employment, in the Joys and Pleaſures of a future State; we muſt qualify and prepare ourſelves for it, by cleanſing our Hearts from all inordinate Paſſions, ſubduing our Luſts, and conquering the vicious Inclinations of our corrupt Nature; by acquiring good and virtuous Habits and Diſpoſitions of Mind, an holy Frame and Temper of Soul, and renewing ourſelves, Day by Day, after the Image of him, that created us, and the Likeneſs of him, that redeemed us. For this is the Will of God, even your Sanctification, [b] that ye put off, concerning the former Converſation, the Old Man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful Luſts; and be renewed in the Spirit of your Mind; and that ye put on the New Man, which, after God, is created in Righteouſneſs, and true Holineſs.

How to know whether we are regenerate, or no.

IF ſuch then be the Ordination and Appointment of God, that, without being regenerate, there is no entering into the Kingdom of Heaven; it ſeems to be a Matter of no ſmall Concernment to us, to be ſatisfied, unto what Claſs of Men it is that we belong. As long as we continue in this State of Infirmity, we cannot but be liable to Sin, nor is every Tranſgreſſion an immediate Forfeiture of our Birth-Right: But then the Difference between the Regenerate and Unregenerate is this——that the one ſins out of Incogitancy, or Want of Conſideration; the other out of propenſe Malice and Deſign; the one uſes Means for the Diſcovery and Conviction of his Sin, the other negligently overlooks, and thinks no more of it; the one laments and bemoans it ſeverely, the other makes a Mock of it perhaps, or pleaſes his Imagination with frequent Reflections on it; the one, from his Failings, improves his future Vigilance, the other hardens himſelf in ſinning, and comes every Time to his Iniquity with more and more Greedineſs. * The Senſe, in ſhort, and Conviction of Sin, the Confeſſion of it, and the Remorſe and Repentance for it, which the Regenerate expreſs, proceed from their real Hatred of it, as it is the greateſt Evil in its own Nature, and as it is diſpleaſing to God. Their Wiſhes, and Reſolutions, and Promiſes, come from their Hearts, and therefore prove effectual. Their Belief of the Doctrines of the Goſpel is well-grounded, which makes it permanent and laſting. Their religious Exerciſes and Performances are Acts of the inward Man, of the Soul and Spirit, and ſpring from a deep Senſe of the Majeſty of him, to whom they are addreſſed. Their Obedience to the Divine Commands is impartial, and univerſal, and without Reſerve. It flows from a lively and active Faith, from a Love of God and their Duty, and from Sincerity of Heart; and laſtly, they ſtrive to do all this in a right Manner, and for a right End, the Glory of God, and of their Redeemer, Jeſus Chriſt.

THESE are ſome of the Signs, whereby ye may perceive, whether or no ye belong to the Number of the Regenerate: If, upon Examination, ye find ye do not, [x] neither ſhould your Eyes ſleep, nor your Eye-lids ſlumber, nor the Temples of your Head take any Reſt, until ye reſolve upon a Change. This is the one Thing neceſſary; and therefore let all your Cares and Projects, all your Aims and Deſigns give way to this. Without this, ye muſt periſh everlaſtingly; and [y] what is a Man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole World, and loſe his own Soul? If, on the contrary, ye experimentally find, that the Grace of God's Holy Spirit has begun the Work of Regeneration in your Souls, has renewed your Mind, and tamed your Paſſions, and changed your [z] Heb. xii. 14. [a] Rev. xxi. 27. [b] Eph. iv. 22. * Edwards, on Regeneration.

[x] Pſal. cxxxii. 4. [y] Matth. xvi. 26.

your Lives, rejoice and be exceeding glad, becauſe your Renovation, being thus happily commenced, is a good Pledge, and Reaſon to hope, that your Names ſhall be written in the Book of Life.

Of abſtaining from Evil-appearance.

To abſtain from Evil-appearance, what.

ST Paul, towards the Concluſion of his firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, praying with all Earneſtneſs for them, that the very God of Peace would ſanctify them wholly, and that their whole Spirit, and Soul, and Body, might be preſerved blameleſs, unto the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, makes it on their Part a Means highly neceſſary to this good Effect, that they ſhould abſtain from all Appearance of Evil, i. e. that the whole Tenor of their Actions ſhould not only be innocent, but of good Report; not only free from the Guilt of Sin, but even from the leaſt Colour or Suſpicion of it; ſo guarded with Care, and guided with Diſcretion, as not to give the leaſt Occaſion for any to blame or cenſure their righteous Doings.

The Extent of this Duty.

THIS ſeems, at firſt Sight, to be the proper Senſe of the Precept; but then we muſt take Care to reduce it under ſome Reſtrictions. For, [y] ſince Mankind, as we daily find, are ſo very ignorant and paſſionate, apt to judge without Evidence, or according to Prejudice or Reſentment; ſo full of Hypocriſy, and willing to exalt themſelves by abaſing others; ſo full of affected Wiſdom, which they think they can beſt diſplay by finding Faults; ſo addicted to Detraction, and careful to furniſh themſelves with Materials for Slander; and ſo conſcious of their own Sins, and willing to conclude others under the like Condemnation: Since there are theſe, I ſay, and many more Reaſons, to deprave Mens Judgments concerning others, 'tis certain, that no Action can be innocent, but what, for aught we know, may chance to appear ſinful to ſome ignorant Men, nor any Duty ſo highly obligatory, but what, through Prejudice or Corruption, may be evil thought of: And therefore we ſhould lay an unſupportable Reſtraint upon our Liberty, if we were to debar ourſelves from all innocent Actions for Fear of offending ſome; or we ſhould ſtretch it too far, if we ſhould preſume to omit what is abſolutely required of us by the Laws of God, merely to avoid the Cenſure of others.

Is it to the Good and Wiſe only then, that we are thus to approve ourſelves? This perhaps were no difficult Taſk, becauſe they are not apt to miſtake, nor diſpoſed to miſconſtrue our Actions; and therefore not likely to be offended with any Thing, but what is evidently and notoriouſly ſinful. But then the Misfortune is, that this is a Limitation, which the expreſs Letter of Scripture will not admit of. For that we may not think, that we are concerned to juſtify our Conduct only to the Wiſe, we are taught by St Peter, that [z] it is the Will of God, that, by Well-doing, we ſhould put to Silence the Ignorance of fooliſh Men: That we may not ſatisfy ourſelves with the good Opinion and Commendation of the Charitable and Good-natured, we are inſtructed by St Paul to [a] do all we can do, that we may cut off Occaſion of Cenſure, even from them, which deſire Occaſion: That we may not acquieſce in the good Eſteem of our own Friends and Adherents, we are required [b] to ſhew ſuch Uncorruptneſs and Sincerity, that he, who is on the contrary Part, may be aſhamed, having no evil Thing to ſay of us: And finally, that we may not ſuppoſe any Man under ſuch a State of Sin or Ignorance, as to ſlight his Opinion, and be altogether indifferent in what Manner our Actions appear to him, we are ſtrictly enjoined, [c] by the Manifeſtation of the Truth, to commend ourſelves to every Man's Conſcience in the Sight of God.

WELL then, ſince, by Virtue of this Precept, we are not obliged to abſtain from all Actions, that appear evil, becauſe the moſt innocent and unblameable may appear ſo to ignorant and wicked Men; and yet, in the ordering of our Converſation, we are bound to have a Reſpect to the Opinion of all Men, and to fence our Actions againſt the Miſtakes and Calumnies of the moſt ſimple and malicious; ſince that, which to ſome will actually appear evil, both lawfully may, and ſometimes neceſſarily muſt be done; and yet the Appearance of Evil muſt at all Times, and in all Caſes, be ſtudiouſly avoided; the Duty, which reſults from the Precept, can be no other than this, —— "That we do whatever in us lies to juſtify ourſelves to Men, as [y] Smalridge's Sermons. [z] 1 Pet. ii. 15. [a] 2 Cor. xi. 12. [b] Titus ii. 7. [c] 2 Cor. iv. 2.

" well as God; that we take all poſſible Care, ſo to place our innocent and laudable " Actions in their true Light, that the wrong and accidental Appearance of Evil " may not be our Fault; and that we uſe our utmoſt Endeavour to avoid that Ap- " pearance of Sin, which, after our utmoſt Endeavour, cannot always be avoided." This muſt certainly be the true Senſe of the Apoſtle's Precepts; which we will, 1. Endeavour to enforce with an Argument or two; and then, 2. Adjoin ſome ſuch Directions, as may conduce towards the Practice of it.

The Appearance of Evil, hurtful to our own Reputation.

I. [d] THAT Men, who have no other Meaſures to judge by, than outward Appearance, muſt neceſſarily judge of us according to what we openly ſeem to be, and not according to what we inwardly are; and that therefore the Appearance of Evil will give as deep a Wound to our Eſteem among Men, as real Guilt itſelf can do, is a Truth ſo evident in Theory, and ſo well confirmed by conſtant Experience, that there needs no entering into a Detail of Arguments to prove it. The only Queſtion is, whether a good Name be of that Value, as to deſerve a wiſe Man's Care, either to get it, or preſerve it; whether a ſincere Chriſtian, who ought to ſit looſe to the World, and to approve himſelf to God and his own Conſcience, ſhould let a Regard to his Reputation bear any Sway at all in the governing of his Actions; whether, when he can honeſtly ſatisfy himſelf, that what he doth is in itſelf innocent, though to others it may appear offenſive, the Fear of hurting his good Name thereby ought to reſtrain him from an Action, which, by carrying the Face of Evil, will tend to his Diſgrace. And there is the greater Room for this Queſtion, becauſe ſome Divines, as well as Moraliſts, have taken a great deal of Pains to ſhew the Emptineſs of that vain imaginary Thing (as they pleaſe to term it) which we call Reputation.

THIS however ſeems to be a great Miſtake: For, if we conſider the ſtrong Averſion to Shame, which the Author of our Nature has implanted in us, as a Guard againſt Sin; the warm Reſentments we feel, and the large Demands we make upon having our Reputation, at never ſo great a Diſtance, attacked: If we conſider the high Price, which both human and divine Laws ſet upon it; the one, making the Penalty of Slander riſe in Proportion to the Perſon that is injured; and the other ranking Slanderers and Backbiters among the Number of thoſe, [e] that ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God: If we conſider the Chriſtian Perfection of ſpeaking well of thoſe, that ſpeak ill of us, and of ſuffering Reproach patiently, when we are reviled by Men for keeping a good Conſcience towards God; neither of which could be of any Value, if Calumny and Reproach were not evil in themſelves: Or laſtly, if we conſider, that the main Spring of thoſe laudable Actions, by which the Worthies of the heathen World both ſignalized themſelves, and adorned the Ages wherein they lived, was no other than the Deſire of Glory and juſt Commendation; we cannot but be concluded by the Royal Preacher's Opinion, that [f] a good Name is better than precious Ointment: But then, to go along with him in the Metaphor, we muſt ſubſcribe likewiſe to this other Obſervation, that [g] as dead Flies cauſe the Ointment of the Apothecary to ſend forth a ſtinking Savour; ſo doth a little Folly him, that is in Reputation for Wiſdom and Honour.

And to our Neighbour's Soul.

BUT it is not our own Reputation only, but the Salvation likewiſe of our Neighbour's Soul, that is concerned in this Affair. Were we indeed required only to work out our own Salvation, without any Regard to that of our Brethren, there would be leſs Occaſion for all this Circumſpection in us. Upon this Suppoſition, we might do every Thing that appeared fit and reaſonable to us, without putting ourſelves to any Pain about the Conſtruction, which others may paſs upon it: But when we are ſo frequently told, that other Mens Safety depends upon our Conduct, and that therefore we ought to exert our utmoſt Power to do every Thing that may advance it, and watch, with all poſſible Care, againſt doing any Thing, that in the leaſt may hinder it; there hence ariſes a Duty and Obligation, to guard our Actions againſt the Miſchief and Prejudice they may poſſibly do, by any ſlight Shew and Appearance of Evil.

UNDER the Law of Moſes it is provided, that, [h] if any Man ſhall open a Pit, or if any Man ſhall dig a Pit, and not cover it, and an Ox or an Aſs fall therein, the Owner of the Pit ſhould make it good. Now, moſt of theſe Laws, as the Apoſtle intimates, had a figurative, as well as a literal Senſe in them; and therefore this in particular may well be ſuppoſed to denote, that, as a Jew, when he ſunk a Pit for the Service of his Houſe or Ground, for Fear his Neighbour's bour's Beast should fall into it, and be drowned, was bound by the Law to provide a sufficient Cover for it; so we, when we enter upon any Action, in itself innocent, and fit to be done, should do it in such a Manner, and so cover it against the Suspicions of Evil, that it may not, thro' our Default, be an Occasion of our Brother's Ruin. But we need not have Recourse to Allegories to find out a Duty, which is delivered in the express Letter of the Gospel. St Paul, in his Epistles, very often, and very largely insists upon the Obligation, which all Christians are under, to abridge their Liberty in Things otherwise indifferent, for Fear of offending or scandalizing their weaker Brethren. [l] Take Heed, says he to the Corinthians, lest, by any Means, this Liberty of yours become a Stumbling-block to those that are weak. For if any Man see thee, which hast Knowledge, sit at Meat in the Idol's Temple, shall not the Conscience of him, which is weak, be emboldened to eat those Things, which are offered to Idols? And through thy Knowledge shall thy weak Brother perish, for whom Christ died? But, when ye sin so against the Brethren, and wound their weak Conscience, ye sin against Christ.

[d] Smalridge's Sermons. [e] 1 Cor. vi. 10. [f] Eccleſ. vii. 1. [g] Ibid. x. 1. [h] Exod. xxi. 33.

THIS is a Passage so very full, that we need go no farther for Conviction: Only, for our better understanding it, it may not be amiss to observe, [k] that, in relation to the Sacrifices here spoken of, some Part of them was eaten in the Idol's Temple; which being an Act of religious Worship and Communion with the Idol, as our eating the Bread in the Sacrament is a Communion with Christ, the Apostle utterly disallows, as absolutely unlawful; but the Remainder of them, which fell to the Priest's Share, and they, having no Use for, sold to those, who afterwards exposed it to Sale, promiscuously among other Meats, upon the Shambles: This the Apostle allows might lawfully be bought, and eat in any private House, without the least Sin; only with this Caution, that whereas there were some Converts, who well understood, that Meat could have no defiling Quality imprinted upon it by its Consecration to an Idol, and others, on the contrary, who, having not so much Knowledge, supposed that the Consecration left such a polluting Quality upon it as certainly defiled the Eater; the former Sort might innocently and freely eat such Meats in private Families, provided it was not before those of the latter Sort, who, thro' Weakness, having an Opinion of the Unlawfulness of such Meats, might nevertheless be induced to use the same Liberty, tho' their Consciences, in the mean Time, having quite another Judgment in this Matter, esteemed the eating them little better than Idolatry. Now the Argument, whereby the Apostle abridges the Liberty of the former Sort of Converts, in Condescension to the latter, proceeds upon the Strength of this Assertion——That the Lawfulness of Mens Actions depends, not solely, either upon the Lawfulness of the Subject-Matter, nor yet upon the Conscience of the Doers of them, considered in itself, but as considered with Reference to the Consciences of others, to whom, by the Law of Charity, they are bound so to behave themselves, as, by none of their Actions, to give them Occasion of Sin. And therefore the Apostle concludes with this noble Resolution, as supposing it his own Case; [l] If Meat make my Brother to offend, I will eat no Flesh, while the World standeth, lest I make my Brother to offend.

II. SINCE the Appearance of Evil then, even in the most indifferent Actions, may prove prejudicial both to our own Reputation, and the Salvation of our Neighbour's Soul, it cannot but be of Use to insert a Direction or two, how we may happily avoid it: And, to this Purpose, it must be allowed, 1. That the Foundation of a fair Appearance in the World must be primarily laid in the inward Sincerity of the Heart: For the shortest, and safest, and perhaps the only Way, to appear good and virtuous, is really to be such, as we desire to appear. [m] If we first seek the Kingdom of God, and his Righteousness, we have a sure Gospel-Promise, that all other Things, which we want, the Necessaries and Comforts of Life, shall be super-added to us; and, in like Manner, if we make it our principal Aim, to approve ourselves in the Sight of God, we may securely depend upon his Goodness, that he, who can turn the Hearts of Men as he pleases, will dispose them to think well of us, and to judge favourably and tenderly of all our Actions. Nay, this will follow in the Way of natural Consequence: For when once Integrity, and an uniform Practice of Virtue, founded upon religious Principles, have established our Character, and procured us a good Esteem in the World, this Reputation will be the best Guard against unkind Suspicions,

Directions how to avoid it; as,

1. Inward Sincerity.

[l] 1 Cor. viii. 9, &c. [k] South's Sermons, Vol. III. [l] 1 Cor. viii. 13. [m] Luke xii. 31.

Suſpicions, and ſevere Cenſures. What is doubtful in our Carriage, and admits of ſeveral Interpretations, will be conſtrued in Analogy to what was, without Controverſy, worthy of Praiſe: An Eſteem for our Perſons, gained by what we have done confeſſedly well, will incline Men to judge the beſt of thoſe Actions, which are not manifeſtly evil; and thoſe, who have entertained a favourable Opinion of us, for our former good Life, will be deſirous to continue it, to ſhew the Steadineſs of their own Judgment, as well as Eſteem and Affection for us.

2. Outward Prudence.

AND as an honeſt Sincerity of Heart, and Integrity of Mind, is the beſt Way to ſecure our Actions from an evil Appearance; ſo, 2. The Apoſtle has laid it down as a certain Rule, that Prudence and Circumſpection in our outward Behaviour is the beſt Guard of Integrity, and the greateſt Ornament of Virtue: [n] See, therefore, (ſays he to the Epheſians) that ye walk circumſpectly, not as Fools, who unneceſſarily expoſe themſelves to Danger, to being ill uſed, or evil-ſpoken of; but as wiſe, who are careful to ſecure their Intereſt, and their good Name, where they can ſhelter themſelves from Suffering, and from Diſgrace, by behaving themſelves with Diſcretion: And, in like Manner, to the Coloſſians, walk in Wiſdom toward them that are without, i. e. towards the Adverſaries of your Religion, who will be careful to watch all your Steps, and lay hold on any imprudent, any indiſcreet, any unwary Carriage, whereby they may caſt a Blemiſh upon you, and your holy Profeſſion: And, upon this Account, the good Advice, which our Saviour, in his Time, gave his Apoſtles, is very applicable, in this ill-natured and inſidious World, to all Chriſtians, in all Ages, [o] Behold, I ſend you forth as Sheep in the Midſt of Wolves, be ye therefore wiſe as Serpents, and harmleſs as Doves.

3. Setting our Virtues in a clear Light.

WE muſt obſerve farther, that as there is ſcarce any one Vice, which does not borrow the Features of ſome Virtue, nor any Virtue, which, to a tranſient and careleſs View, may not, perhaps, ſeem to have the Colour of ſome Vice; and as it is this Likeneſs, which gives room to the erroneous Judgment of the Ignorant, or the wilful Miſrepreſentations of the Malicious: If ever therefore we would ſecure our innocent, and even commendable Actions, from an evil Appearance, we muſt be very diligent to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe particular Vices, from which they may chance to be miſtaken.

THUS, for Inſtance, Devotion and Hypocriſy, Zeal and Paſſion, Moderation and Lukewarmneſs, Prudence and Cunning, &c. have ſome Lineaments, ſo much reſembling each other, and, by being ſo frequently called by each other's Names, are ſo liable to be taken the one for the other; that, unleſs we attend carefully to theſe particular Circumſtances, in which they differ, and ſtudy to expreſs theſe diſtinct Characters in our Practice, the World muſt be much better-natured, than we have Reaſon to expect it is, if our Good be not evil-ſpoken of.

WOULD a truly devout Perſon then not be ſuſpected of Hypocriſy: In his publick Devotions, he muſt take Care, that there be nothing ſingular or affected; that, in his Countenance, in his Geſtures, in his Voice, there be no Air or Appearance of Oſtentation; and, in his private Devotions, he muſt ſtrictly attend to our Bleſſed Saviour's Direction; [p] When thou prayeſt, enter into thy Cloſet, ſhut thy Door, and when thou haſt ſhut thy Door, pray to thy Father, which is in Secret; and thy Father, which ſeeth in Secret, ſhall reward thee openly. Would a zealous Perſon not be looked upon as paſſionate: He muſt take ſtrict Care, that his Zeal be guided with Knowledge, and tempered with Charity; that it be more converſant about Things, than about Perſons; bear a due Proportion to the Objects that employ it; and, above all, that it be not ſo intemperate and outrageous, as either to eat himſelf up, or put him upon devouring his Chriſtian Brethren. In like Manner, would a moderate Perſon avoid the Imputation of being Lukewarm: He muſt take Care to be moderate only in ſuch Things, wherein there is Danger of Exceſs; but, in thoſe Things, wherein it is laudable to excel, he muſt not affect Moderation. About Things, in their own Nature indifferent, he may be indifferent too, or not very much concerned; but it would badly become him to be thought a moderate Lover of Piety and Virtue, of Peace and good Order; one, that has a moderate Concern for the Laws and Liberties of his Country, or for the Welfare and Proſperity of his Church.

THESE Inſtances, without proceeding any farther, are ſufficient to ſhew us, that, how reſemblant ſoever Virtue and Vice may be, there are certain Notes and Characters, whereby we may diſtinguiſh them, not only in our Thoughts, but in our Practice; and that, therefore, to avoid the Appearance of Evil, it is highly expedient and [n] Eph. v. 15. [o] Luke x. 3. [p] Matth. vi. 6.

and neceſſary, that we endeavour to expreſs this Difference in the whole Conduct of our Lives, as fully, and ſignificantly as we poſſibly can; but, if all this will not do to conciliate the good Opinion of a perverſe World, the Apoſtle's Advice will then come in to our Comfort and Relief: [q] Sanctify the Lord God in your Hearts, and be always ready to give an Anſwer to every Man, that aſketh you a Reaſon of the Hope that is in you, with Meekneſs and Fear: Having a good Conſcience, that, whereas they ſpeak Evil of you, as of Evil-doers, they may be aſhamed, that falſely accuſe your good Converſation in Chriſt; and others, [r] by your good Works, which they behold, may glorify God in the Day of Viſitation.

Of the Deſire of Righteouſneſs.

BLESSED are they which do hunger and thirſt after Righteouſneſs, for they ſhall be filled, is one of the happy Sentences of our Saviour's Sermon upon the Mount, and may be a proper Argument for the Concluſion of this Work. By Righteouſneſs here, we are to underſtand the whole Duty of Man, in all Relations and Capacities; or that Integrity of Obedience, and univerſal Regard to all God's Commandments, which thoſe, that endeavour to ſerve him in Sincerity and Truth, are ready, on all Occaſions, to expreſs, both in their Temper of Mind, and outward Behaviour: And to hunger and thirſt after this Righteouſneſs [s] implies an ardent and intenſe Deſire of it; ſuch a Deſire, as will not be ſatisfied without it; ſuch a Deſire, as puts Men upon trying all poſſible Means, and uſing their utmoſt Endeavours to attain it. 'Tis an earneſt Appetite and Intention of Mind to grow in Grace, and in the Knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; to follow his Example, and to be counted worthy of the Inheritance of the Saints in Light. 'Tis a ſincere Endeavour [u] to mortify all the Remains of Sin in us, to get the perfect Maſtery of our Affections and Paſſions, and to bring them under an entire Subjection to the Law of God; to increaſe daily in all Chriſtian Virtues; and to walk in every Thing, as it becomes the Profeſſors of a moſt holy Religion. 'Tis a fervent Breathing after greater Degrees of Charity, Humility, Patience, and all other Graces; [x] forgetting thoſe Things, that are behind, the Pitch of Goodneſs we have already attained; and reaching forth unto thoſe Things, that are before, that Perfection in Piety and Virtue, which alone can ſatisfy a generous Chriſtian; and preſſing towards the Mark of the Prize of the high Calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus: A Weaning our Hearts from the World, and fixing them upon that happy State, where we ſhall ſin no more, but be eſtabliſhed for ever in conſummate Righteouſneſs. In ſhort, 'tis ſuch an eager and importunate, ſuch a ſincere and efficacious Deſire for all this, as the Man, who is almoſt famiſhed with Hunger, and parched up with Drought, has for that Meat and Drink, with which, if he be not ſoon ſupplied, he knows he muſt unavoidably periſh.

The Deſire of Righteouſneſs, what.

THIS is the full Force of the Metaphor, and proper Import of the Duty; and the Reward annexed to it, though comprized in theſe few Words, they ſhall be filled, is, in itſelf, of an adequate Extent. For, 1. They ſhall be filled with the Righteouſneſs, they deſire. 2. They ſhall be filled with Comfort and Satisfaction of Mind here; and, 3. They ſhall be filled with all imaginable Happineſs hereafter.

The Bleſſing and Reward of it are,

1. THE great Deſign of God, from the Beginning of the World, was, that all Mankind might ſerve him in Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, and be accordingly rewarded by him; and, to effect this, he, in his infinite Wiſdom, has contrived many wonderful Ways. [y] He has imprinted the Law of Righteouſneſs upon the Hearts and Conſciences of Men; he hath bound it up with their Reaſon and Underſtanding; he hath ſent his Son into the World to promote the Practice of it, both by his Inſtruction and Example; by his Holy Spirit he begins the good Work, where it is not, and cheriſhes it, where it is begun: and, in ſhort, he hath omitted no Methods of engaging us; all that Promiſes and Threatenings, that kind Intreaties and vehement Expoſtulations can do, he hath not left unattempted; and, after all this, it would be incongruous to think, that he will refuſe the Gift of Righteouſneſs and Sanctification to ſuch, as heartily deſire and endeavour it. We cannot ſay ſo

1. The Acquiſition of Righteouſneſs.

[q] 1 Pet. iii. 15, 16. [r] Ibid. ii. 12. [s] Matth. v. 6. [t] Blackwell's Sermons, Vol. I.
[u] Gardiner's Sermons. [x] Phil. iii. 13, 14. [y] Gardiner, ibid. 1 with Reſpect to the Bleſſings of this preſent Life: The Race, as the wiſe Man obſerves, is not always to the Swift, nor the Battle to the Strong, nor Bread to the Wiſe, nor Riches to Men of Underſtanding, nor yet Favour to Men of Skill; but Time and Chance happen to them all. Though Art and Induſtry do naturally tend to make Men rich, yet they are often blaſted in the Event. Experience is a ſtanding Evidence of this, that neither Fraud nor Honeſty, Righteouſneſs nor Unrighteouſneſs, the moſt likely Endeavours, nor the moſt diligent Application can effectually command the Things of this World: But it is not ſo with the Bleſſings, that are better worth enjoying. There is no Defeat in the Endeavours after Righteouſneſs. A Man cannot be diſappointed, who labours to be virtuous. The Love and Deſire of the Thing does naturally enforce the Practice, and the Practice brings on the Habit, and the Habit is continually ſtrengthened by the Influence of God's Holy Spirit, till it be finally confirmed and rewarded in Glory. God may refuſe, and refuſe, in Kindneſs, to hear the Prayers even of a good Man, when he prays for temporal Bleſſings; but he never refuſes (at leaſt he never does it in Mercy) to grant Requeſts for Spiritual; upon which Preſumption it is, that Solomon founds this Exhortation: [a] If thou crieſt after Knowledge, and liſteſt up thy Voice for Underſtanding; if thou ſeekeſt her, as Silver, and ſearcheſt for her, as for hid Treaſures; then ſhalt thou underſtand the Fear of the Lord, and find the Knowledge of God; then ſhalt thou underſtand Righteouſneſs, and Judgment, and Equity, and every good Path.

Comfort and Satisfaction here, eſpecially at the Hour of Death.

2. He ſhall be filled with Comfort and Satisfaction here. The Progreſs and Proficiency he makes in the Ways of Righteouſneſs will fill him with a ſpiritual Joy, far exceeding the Pleaſure, which any Thing elſe in this World can afford. For God has ſo adapted Religion to the Mind of Man, that, though there be Labour in the Undertaking, yet there is always a Reliſh that goes along with it. The conquering of an evil Habit, or a ſtrong Temptation, is like the conquering of a powerful Enemy, difficult to perform, but what, when accompliſhed, fills him with mighty Joy and Triumph. Every Grace he obtains, every ſinful Inclination he ſubdues, every good Action he performs, is no leſs, than a new Conveyance to him of eternal Glory, a new Aſſurance of his Right and Title; and this, being what is congenial to his Soul, muſt be entirely agreeable to all his Faculties. But we have not Time to follow the righteous Man through all the pleaſurable Perceptions of his Life; and ſhall therefore chuſe to conſider him only, as he is drawing to the Period of it: When, if ever, he will rightly underſtand the ineſtimable Price of a quiet Conſcience, of a ſatisfied Mind, and of an Hope full of Glory and Immortality: When, if ever, he will find That, which was always a continual Feaſt, then a ſovereign Cordial, and Food of Angels; for never certainly is Peace and Comfort more ſeaſonable, than at this Inſtant.

[b] What an unſpeakable Satisfaction then muſt it be to a dying Man, when, if he looks backward, he ſees a Life well ſpent; if forward, he has before him a bright Proſpect of immortal Glory: When he can ſay, with King Hezekiah, [c] Remember now, O Lord, I beſeech thee, how I walked before thee in Truth, and with a perfect Heart; or, with the great Apoſtle, even when within View of his Diſſolution, [d] I have fought a good Fight, I have finiſhed my Courſe, I have kept the Faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Righteouſneſs, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, ſhall give me at that Day. It muſt needs, I ſay, be an unſpeakable and inconceivable Satisfaction for a Man in his laſt Hour, when he is taking Leave of his Body, and ſhaking Hands with the whole World; when all are ſad about him, and concerned for him; then to conſider, that there is a better State, and that he has a Title to it; that, when his [e] earthly Tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, he has a Building with God, an Houſe not made with Hands, eternal in the Heavens; that, when he ſhall ceaſe to converſe with Men, he ſhall dwell with God, and converſe with Angels; in a Word, that he is to leave nothing but Vanities and Shadows behind him, and that he has the ſolid and real Happineſs of a whole Eternity before him. What a mild and unterrifying Thing is Death to ſuch a Man as this, and with what Serenity and Chearfulneſs does he entertain its Summons! He can ſmile in the Phyſician's Face, when he hears him pronounce his Sickneſs deſperate; can receive his Sentence without Trembling, and, if his Senſes hold out ſo long, can hear even his Paſſing-Bell without Diſturbance. So true is that of the Prophet, [f] the Work

[a] Eccleſ. ix. 11. [a] Prov. ii. 3, 4, 5, 9. [b] Norris's Diſcourſes, Vol. II. [c] Iſa. xxxviii. 3. [d] 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. [e] 2 Cor. v. 1. [f] Iſa. xxxii. 17.

Work of Righteousness shall be Peace, and the Effect of Righteousness, Quietness, and Assurance for ever.

And Happiness hereafter.

3. THEY shall be filled with all imaginable Happiness hereafter. For when all their Sins shall be pardoned and done away; when their Righteousness shall be advanced to a full Strength and Perfection; when they [g] shall awake up after the Likeness of God, and, with joyful Acclamations, be conducted into his glorious Presence; so far shall their Happiness be from falling short of their present Expectation, that it will far exceed, not only what Eye hath seen, or Ear heard, but every Thing, that can now enter into the Heart of Man to conceive: For [h] they shall be before the Throne of God, and he, that sitteth on the Throne, shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more: The Lamb, which is in the Midst of the Throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living Fountains of Waters; and God, who is their Portion and their Inheritance, [i] in whose Presence there is Fulness of Joy, and at whose Right-hand there are Pleasures for evermore, shall wipe away all Tears from their Eyes.

[k] FINALLY then, my Brethren, since Godliness has the Promises both of this Life, and of that which is to come, we cannot conclude, better, than with St Paul's Advice to the Philippians; whatsoever Things are true, whatsoever Things are honest, whatsoever Things are pure, whatsoever Things are lovely, whatsoever Things are of good Report; if there be any Virtue, if there be any Praise, think on these Things, and the God of Peace shall be with you.

[g] Psal. xvii. 15. [h] Rev. vii. 15. [i] Psal. xvi. 11. [k] Phil. iv. 8, 9.

FINIS.

AN INDEX OF THE PRINCIPAL MATTERS contained in this BOOK.

A.

AARON ſent with Moſes to deliver the Iſraelites out of Egypt, 360, 361. The High Prieſthood eſtabliſhed in his Family, 440. Why he made the Golden Calf, 443, 444. His Behaviour upon the Deſtruction of his two Sons, 446. His Rod bloſſoming, 449. The Difference between his Prieſthood and that of Melchizedeck, 576. Wherein his Prieſthood, and that of Chriſt, both differ and agree, 577.

ABEL, the Occaſion of his Murder, 296.

ABRAHAM, his Birth and Character, 331. God's Covenant with him, ibid. His Victory over the four Kings, 334. He is commanded to offer up Iſaac, 337. The Firmneſs of his Faith herein, ibid. And Conſtancy of his Reſolution, ibid. Inferences from the Whole, 339.

Abyſs, or great Deep, its Reality, 311. How much it contributed to the Flood, 312.

Acceptance with God, how we may judge of it, 567.

Act, natural, a Diſtinction to be made between it, and the moral Evil that adheres to it, 101.

Actions, how we become accountable for other Mens Actions, 809, 810.

ADAM, the firſt of Mankind, 214. His State in Paradiſe, 270. The Covenant between God and him, 271, &c. How long he ſtood, ibid. His Fall, 276. See Fall, and Man.

Admiration, the Nature and Uſe of that Paſſion, 941.

Admonition, one Duty of the married State, 903. One Office of Friendſhip, 910.

Adoration paid to Chriſt, a Proof of his Divinity, 123.

Advantages, Worldly, their Uncertainty and Emptineſs, 912.

Adultery, what, 413. The Heinouſneſs of it, ibid. The Danger of that Sin, 414.

Adultery in the Heart, 415.

ÆGYPTIANS, their Learning, 24. Their Opinion of one ſupreme Being, 74.

AETIUS, his Hereſy, 141.

Affections. See Paſſions.

Afflictions. Reaſons for bearing them with Patience, 860. The Benefits ariſing from them, 861.

Agony of Chriſt in the Garden, 653. Different Opinions of the Cauſe of it, 654.

AHAB, his Wickedneſs, and of the Spirit that ſeduced him, 364. His Sin in coveting Naboth's Vineyard, 422, 423.

Air, its Expanſion and Properties, a Proof of the Exiſtence of God, 7.

ALEXANDER the Great, comes to Jeruſalem, and treats the High-Prieſt and People very kindly, 503.

Almſgiving, the Manner and Meaſure of it, 926, 927.

AMERICA, ſome Account of the Idolatry there, 528, 529.

Angels, when created, 183. Their Exiſtence proved from Scripture, 184. From Heathen Authority, 185. From Reaſon, ibid. Their Number and Orders, 186. Their Nature, Powers, and Abilities, 186, 187. Inferences from the Doctrine concerning them, 188, 189.

Angels, good, attend upon God, 189. They worſhip and adore him, and adminiſter to his Providence, 190. And to his Church, 191. Their Diligence therein, ibid. They attend on good Men, 192. They defend us from evil Angels, ibid. And from evil Accidents, 193. They aſſiſt us in Goodneſs, ibid. Inſpect our Behaviour, 194. Aſſiſt us in Death, and convey our Spirits into Paradiſe, 195. The Uſes of the Doctrine concerning them, ibid.

Angels, evil, their Exiſtence, 196. Their Fall, and the probable Occaſion of it, 197. The Reaſon of their Non-Redemption, 198. Their Miniſtry and Employment, 198, 199. An Inference from the Doctrine concerning them, 199.

Anger, when lawful, and when not ſo, 411. The Uſe of this Paſſion, 941. Why more peculiarly called Paſſion, 945. Reſtrained by Meekneſs, ibid The Deformity and Miſchiefs of immoderate Anger, and how to avoid it, 947.

Animals, their Variety, Frame, and Inſtinct, a Proof of the Exiſtence of God, 8.

ANOMOEANS, their Hereſy, 141.

ANTEDILUVIANS, their Years not lunar, 299, 300. Different Opinions about the Cauſes of their Longævity, 301. Their Religion, 302. Their general Corruption, and the Occaſion of it, 303. Their Number about the Time of the Flood, 307.

ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES, propheſied of by Daniel, 31. Perſecutes the Jews, 505. His miſerable Death, 507.

APELLEANS, their Hereſy, 629. Notes.

Apocryphal Books, 51.

APOLLINARIAN Hereſy, 142, 630. Notes.

APOLLONIUS TYANÆUS, the Account of his Miracles triſling and ridiculous, 709. Notes.

Apoſtles, their Honeſty, and Impartiality in their Relation, 39. Competent Judges of what they report, ibid. and 676. Uniform in their Story, and unable to frame an Impoſture, 40, 677, 678. Void of Intereſt and Ambition, ibid. Conſtant in the Teſtimony, 40. They and their Followers wrought Miracles, 41. Their Truth confirmed by the Teſtimony of Enemies, 41, 42. They were far from being credulous, 678. A general Account of their Character, 710. Chriſt's Commiſſion to them, the firſt Branch of it, 730. The ſecond Branch of it, 734. The third, 746. The Manner of their Preaching, ibid. The fourth Branch of their Commiſſion, 753. The fifth Branch of it, 757. The Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, 760. The extraordinary Gifts with which they were furniſhed, 762, 763, 764. That they did not think the Day of Judgment near at Hand in their Days, 820. Why they expreſſed themſelves as they did in that Matter, ibid.

Apparel, Rules for preſerving Temperance therein, 963.

Appearance of Evil. See Evil Appearance.

Application neceſſary in reading the Scripture, 68.

Apprehenſions, wrong ones concerning God, a Hindrance to our delighting in him, 852.

Arch-Biſhops. See Metropolitans.

ARIANS, the Riſe of that Sect, 139. Their Proceedings, 140, 141. They diſagree among themſelves, 141. Their Power in the Weſt, 144.

ARIUS, ſome Account of him, 139, 140.

ARISTOTELIAN Hypotheſis, of the World's Eternity, its Riſe, 169. Confuted, 169, &c.

Ark of the Covenant, 433.

Ark, Noah's, where built, 312. Its Capacity, 313. Biſhop Wilkins's Reflections upon it, ibid. Where it reſted, 315.

ARMILLUS, the Jewiſh Story of him, 727. Notes.

ARMINIANS, their Opinion concerning Predeſtination, 152. They are condemned in the Synod of Dort, 154. Their Doctrines obtain in England, ibid. Their Arguments for their Opinions, from the divine Attributes, 156. From the Freedom of Man's Will, and the Sufficiency of Grace, 157, 158. Their Senſe of Election in Scripture, 158, 159. Of Reprobation, 159. Their Arguments from Scripture in Proof of their Doctrines, 160. Their Opinion compared with that of the Calviniſts, 161, &c. The Senſe of Antiquity on their Side, 165. Their Opinion of Original Sin, 288.

Arts and Sciences, their late Invention an Argument againſt the World's Eternity, 174.

ASMONÆANS. See Maccabees.

Aſcenſion of Chriſt, whether there were more than one, 687, to 690. The Reality, Manner, and Ends of it, 691, 692.

Aſſiſtance promiſed in the Goſpel, 717, 966.

Aſſiſtance, one Office of Friendſhip, 909.

ASSYRIAN Monarchy, its Riſe, 325.

ASTAROTH, its Signification, and who that Goddeſs was 482. Notes.

ATHANASIUS baniſhed, 140. The Story of his ludicrous Baptiſm, 609. Notes.

Atheiſm, its Folly and Danger, 13, 14.

Atheiſtical Diſcourſe. See Diſcourſe.

Attention, neceſſary in reading the Scriptures, 68. And in Prayer, 874.

Attributes of God, how to be considered by us, 71, 72. His incommunicable Attributes, 74, to 83. His communicable Attributes, 84, to 99. His moral Attributes, 99, to 114. How we should be affected with the Consideration of his several Attributes, 113, 114. The Display of them in the Incarnation of Christ, 640. They are a Ground for our loving God, 845. For our fearing him, 853. For our trusting in him, 856, 857. They should be made the Subject of our serious Meditation, 933, 934.

AUSTIN, St opposes the Pelagians, and Semi-Pelagians, 152.

B.

BAAL-PEOR, what, 455.

BABEL, Tower of, where built, 327. Who were the Builders, and several Opinions concerning their Design, 317, 318. A Description of the Tower, 318. Why God put a stop to it, 319.

BABYLON, a Description of it, 325.

Back-biting. See Evil-speaking.

Bad Company, the Mischiefs of it, 931, 932.

BALAAM, why Balak sent to him, 453, Some Remarks upon him, 453, 454. His Ass speaking not incredible, 454. The Sense of his Prophecy, 454, 455. His wicked Advice, 455.

BANIANS, their Idolatry, 526.

Baptism, its Institution, 604. Difference between that of John and Christ, ibid. By whom it is to be administered, 605. To whom it is to be administered, 610. Children capable of the Ends of it, 612. The Pre-requisites to it, 614. The Manner of it, 615. The Benefits and Privileges of it, 616. Our Engagements therein, 617. The Means of our Admission into the Church, 732.

Baptism of Christ, by John, 646.

Bath Kol, what, 16.

BEL and the Dragon, what we are to think of that History, 498.

Beneficence. See Charity.

BETHLEHEM highly honoured by Christ's Birth, 635. The Massacre of the Children there, and God's Permission of it vindicated, 644. The Use to be made of it, 645.

BIDDLE, JOHN, revives the Socinian Heresy, 146.

Birth of Christ, the Time of it, 633, 634. The Place of it, 635. The Condition of it, 639.

Bishops, that they were the supreme Governors of the Church, 739. The small Distinction between them and Presbyters at first, 742. That Bishops were all equal, 743. Ordination and Confirmation their peculiar Work, 750.

Blacks, their Complexion accounted for, 215.

Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. See Sin against the Holy Ghost.

Blemishes, natural, Persons not to be derided, but pitied for them, 923.

Blessedness. See Happiness.

Blood forbidden, 327. Some Opinions concerning the Prohibition, and the right Meaning of it, 327, 328. Objections answered, 329. The Conclusion of the Question, ibid.

Boasting. See Ostentation.

Bodies, their Independency upon one another, their Composition and Corruptibility, Arguments against the World's Eternity, 171, 172.

Bodies, the Difference between the present and future Bodies of the Righteous, 801.

Bodily Parts, in what Sense ascribed to God, 86.

Body of Man, its wonderful Contexture, 8, 9, 10. Galen's Admiration of it, 10. That of the first Man formed out of the Dust, and why, 217, 218.

Boldness, or Confidence, a Concomitant of Lying, 961.

Books of Scripture, by whom wrote, 47. Some doubted of, 50. Preserved from Corruption, 53, 54.

Books Apocryphal, 51.

Bounty to the Poor, the Reasonableness of it, 924. Strongly enjoined both in the Old and New Testament, 925. The Manner and Measure of it, 926. Motives and Encouragements to it, from the Pleasure, Security, and Profit of it, 928, 929. See Poor.

Brazen Serpent, 451. A Type of Christ, 452.

Burial of Christ, the Circumstances of it, 670. An Inference from thence concerning our own Burial, 671.

BURNET, Dr his Theory of the Earth examined, 202. His Opinion of the Cause of the Flood answered and refuted, 308.

C.

CAIN kills Abel, and why, 296. The Mark set upon him, what, 297.

CALCEDON, the Council there, 143.

CALVINISTS, their Opinion of God's Decrees, 150. Their Arguments for their Doctrine from the Nature and Prescience of God, 154. From his Decrees and Providence, 154, 155. From Scripture, 155. Their Opinion compared with that of the Arminians, 161, &c. Their Doctrine of Original Sin, 288, 292.

Calumny. See Evil-speaking.

CANAAN conquered by Joshua, 458, 461.

Candour consistent with Prudence, 957.

Canon of the Old Testament, 50. Of the New Testament, 51.

Capital Punishments, the Lawfulness of them, 405.

Captives, Duties towards them, 924.

CARTESIAN Hypothesis of the Formation of the World, the Sum of it, 178. The Confutation of it, 178, 179.

Catechizing, and the primitive Manner of it, 747, 748. Its Use, and how it is now neglected, 748.

Censoriousness, the great Evil of it, 957. Arguments against it, ibid. How to cure it in us, 958.

Censures, the Power of the Church in Relation to them, 755, 756.

Ceremonial Law of the Jews, 429, &c. The original Design of it, 712. It was frequently dispensed with, and obliged the Jews only, 713. Why instituted at first, 442. Dr Spencer's Opinion of it censured, 443. When it was to cease, ibid. That it has actually ceased, never to be restored, 714. The Meaning of its abiding for ever, 715. Its Imperfection, ibid. Supplied by the Gospel, 715, 716.

CERINTHUS, his Heresy, 136.

Challenge, to refuse one, not dishonourable, 410.

CHAMOS, various Opinions about that Idol, 482. Notes.

Chance-Medley exempted from the sixth Commandment 406.

Chaos, what, 200. When turned into an habitable World, and why no sooner, 200, 201. In what Season of the Year, and in what Manner, 201, and 206. It was not the Atmosphere of a Comet, 204. The Spirit of God's moving upon it, 206.

Charity, St Paul's excellent Description of it explained, 883, 884, 885. Our Obligations to it from the Nature of Things, and from the Nature of God, 885. Our peculiar Obligations to it, as Christians, 886. Its great Excellency, 887. The Rule of it, ibid. The Reasonableness of it, and Motives to it, 888. The Extent of it to our Enemies, 889, &c.

Charity to the Poor. See Bounty.

Charity-Schools recommended, 920.

Chastity, wherein that Virtue consists, and its Commendation, 962.

Cherubims over the Mercy-Seat, various Opinions about them, 433. and ibid. Notes.

Children, in what Sense God may visit the Sins of the Fathers upon them, 386, 387.

Children, Duties of Children to their Parents, 398, 399, 400.

Childrens Right to the Covenant, 612. They are capable of the Ends of Baptism, ibid.

CHINESE, their Language, 321. Notes. Their Idolatry, 525. Some further Account of their Religion, 533.

CHRIST, the Meaning of the Word, 696. See JESUS CHRIST.

CHRISTIANITY, the Character of its Author, 32. Evidences of its Truth and divine Authority, 33, 34, 39, &c. 682. Excellency of its Doctrines and Precepts, 34, 35, 36 Its wonderful Propagation, 36, 720. Its Influence upon the Hearts and Lives of Men, 37, 38. Its Excellency farther displayed, 42, 711. That its Propagation was not owing to natural Means, 721, 722. Why Learning and the secular Power were not employed in it, 722. The Dangers it has been in, and how God has protected it, 757.

Christians, Primitive, their Courage in Suffering, 769. Notes. Their extraordinary Charity, 888. How they prayed for their Governors, 900. Notes. Their remarkable Self-denial, 969.

Christ's, false ones, 698. Notes.

Church, its Rise and Nature, 730. Its Regularity and Unity, 730, 731. Its Spirituality and Visibility, 731, 732. The Means of our Admission into it, 732. And Continuance in it, ibid. Its Officers, 734. Three Orders in it, 736. Bishops the supreme Governors in it, 739. Its Power to appoint Rites, 753. And pass Censures, 755. Its Perpetuity, 757. The Reasons of God's protecting it, 759.

Churches, the Means of Union between distinct Churches, 733.

Circumcision, first among the Jews, 332. Instituted by God, ibid. When and how derived to other Nations, ibid. The Reasons of it, 332, 333.

Circumcision of the Heart, what, 333.

Circumcision of Christ, 642.

CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS, an Opposer of Heresy, 137.

COMBER, Dr his Opinion of Bishops and Presbyters, 742.

Comforting, one Office of the Spirit, 769.

Comforts of Religion, 978.

Commandments, the Ten, general Observations upon them, 377. Not a compleat System of Morality, 378. The Method of explaining them, ibid. Their Order, 379. How all are concern'd in them, 379, 380. The Preface to them, and its Relation to us, 380. The first Commandment, ibid. Its primary and secondary Meaning, 382. The Transgressors of it, 383. The second Commandment, 384. The Meaning of it, ibid. And of the Sanction, 386. Who the Transgressors, and who the Observers of it, 387. The third Commandment, 388. What prohibited in it, 390, 391. The Duties imply'd in it, 392. The Nature of the fourth Commandment, 393. The moral Part of it, ibid. The ceremonial Part, 394, &c.

The

The fifth Commandment, 398. The Encouragement to the Obſervance of it, 401, Caſes exempted from the ſixth Commandment, 405, 406. The Heinouſneſs of the Sin forbidden in it, ibid. And the Uneaſineſs of its Guilt, 407. Self-murder included in it, 408. And Duelling, 409. How far the Prohibition is extended by our Saviour, 410. Poſitive Duties included in it, 413. The ſeventh Commandment, ibid. How far extended by our Saviour, 415. The eighth Commandment, 416. Duties imply'd in it, 417, 418. The principal Meaning of the ninth Commandment, 418. The further Intention of it, 419, 420. Duties included in it, 421. The tenth Commandment, 422. Contentment implied in it, 423. The general Rule of our Saviour for the eaſier Obſervance of the Commands of the ſecond Table, 424. The Excellency of it, ibid.

Commiſſion of Chriſt to his Apoſtles, the Extent of it, 729, &c.

Company, bad, the Miſchiefs of it, 932.

Compaſſion. See Mercy.

Conception of Chriſt, 631.

Concurrence and Co-operation with all Things, an Act of Divine Providence, 235.

Confirmation, not a Sacrament, 601. The proper Work of Biſhops, 750.

Conflagration of the World, an ancient Tradition, 815. A Deſcription of it, 816.

CONFUCIUS, the Prophet of the Chineſe, his Doctrines, 533. Some Account of him, ibid. Notes.

Confuſion of Languages, 319. How effected, 321. God's Deſign in it, 324.

Conſcience, its wonderful Nature, a Proof of the Being of God, 11. Its Power, 803.

Conſideration, the Want of it, the chief Occaſion of Sin and Vice, 935. See Meditation.

Conſtancy, the Duty of Friendſhip, 911.

CONSTANTINOPOLITAN Council, 143.

Contentment, What, 423, 948. Several Conſiderations leading to it, 423, 424. The Reaſonableneſs of it, from the Conſideration of God's Bounty, and how few Things are really neceſſary, 948. From the Conſideration of Divine Providence, 949. From the Conſideration of ourſelves, 950. From comparing ourſelves with others, 952. From the Conſideration of the Sufferings of good Men of old, and eſpecially of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, 952, 953. The Sum of the whole Argument, 953.

Continuation of all Things, a Proof of the Divine Providence, 243.

Contradiction, Things implying a Contradiction no Objects of the Divine Power, 94.

Contra-Remonſtrants. See Calviniſts.

Converſion of others to be endeavoured by us, 921. Motives to it, 921, 922.

Copy of the Law, found in the Temple, 491.

Corruption, natural, its Reality, 288, 964. Conjectures concerning it, 289. The Scripture Account of it, ibid. Various Opinions thereupon, ibid. And concerning the Sinfulneſs of it, 290. See Original Sin.

Covenant, how God's Dealings with Man differ from a Covenant, 271.

Covenant between God and our firſt Parents, the Reality of it, 271. The Nature of it, 272. Its Sanctions, ibid. Its Condition, 273. Its poſitive Precept, ibid. How long it laſted, 276.

Covenant with Abraham, 331.

Covenant of Grace, or the ſecond Covenant, the Tenor of it, 539. Its Advantages above the firſt Covenant, 540. Why it was not eſtabliſhed firſt, 541. God's Deſign in it, 542. Its Antiquity, ibid. The Conditions of it, as Firſt, Faith, 545. Secondly, Repentance, 555. Thirdly, Obedience, 563. The Mediator of it, 567, &c. The Sacraments of it, 601, &c. See Baptiſm, and the Lord's Supper.

Covetouſneſs, not always criminal, 422. When and in what Caſes it is ſo, ibid. The miſchievous Conſequences of ſuch Covetouſneſs, 423. A Caution againſt it, 659.

Council, the firſt general One held at Nice, 139. The ſecond at Conſtantinople, 143. The third at Epheſus, ibid. The fourth at Calcedon, ibid.

Creation, what, and why we are apt to conceive it impoſſible, 166. The Unreaſonableneſs of ſuch a Conception, ibid.

Creation in a proper Senſe, 167. Proved from natural Agents, 168. Creation in an improper Senſe, ibid.

Creation of the World, proved from ſeveral Arguments, 170, &c. See World.

Creation of Heaven, 181. Of Angels, 183. Of the viſible World, 200.

Creation, the Moſaic Account of it, 206. The firſt and ſecond Day's Work, 206, 207. The third Day's Work, 207. 208. The fourth, fifth, and Part of the ſixth Day's Work, 208, 209. Exceptions to this Account anſwered, 210. Why God employed ſix Days in it, 211.

Creation of Man, 213. The Manner of it, 216. The End of it, 228. 1. That he might know God, ibid. 2. That he might delight in him, and ſerve him, 229. 3. To be kind and beneficent to one another, ibid. 4. To procreate, and take Care of their Offſpring, 230. 5. To rule the Animal and Vegetable World, ibid. 6. To offer up their Praiſes to God, ibid. 7. To enjoy him both here and hereafter, 231.

Creation, the Works of it a proper Object of our Meditation, 934.

Creation, new, under the Goſpel, what, 971.

Croſs in Baptiſm, the Meaning of that Sign, 615. Notes.

Croſs, the Meaning of taking it up, 968.

Crucifixion of Chriſt, 663. The Manner of it, ibid. Notes.

Cup that Chriſt was to drink, what, 655. Why he endeavoured to decline it, 656.

CYRUS propheſied of by Iſaiah, 31. His Actions, and Decree for the Reſtoration of the Jews, 496. Various Accounts of the Manner of his Death, 498.

D.

DANIEL, not thrown into the fiery Furnace, and why, 493. His Deliverance from the Lions, 494. His Prophecy of the ſeventy Weeks, 495, 496, 700. His Death, Character, and Writings, 498.

DARIUS, his Acts, 499. His Character 501.

DAVID kills Goliah, 476. Succeeds Saul in the Kingdom, 477. His Sin, and Aggravations of it, 478. Why recorded in Scripture, ibid. How Nathan reproves him for it, 479. The Puniſhments it brought upon him, ibid Upon what Account he may be ſaid to be a Man after God's own Heart, 478. Notes. Chriſt's Deſcent from him, 637.

Day, how the Day was divided by the Jews, 664. Notes.

Deacons, their Inſtitution and Office, 734, 736. Why they might not conſecrate the Elements in the Lord's Supper, 749.

Dead Sea, the Original of it, 342. Its Situation, Qualities, and adjacent Country, 343.

Death, the Nature of that threatened to our firſt Parents, 273.

Death of Chriſt, the Extent of it according to the Calviniſts, 155. According to the Arminians, 160. The Manner of it, 664. The Wiſdom of God, and Triumphs of our Saviour therein, 665. It is our Glory, ibid. The Goodneſs of God therein, and his Juſtice and Severity againſt Sin, 665, 666. Patience and Reſignation to be learnt from thence, 666.

Decalogue. See Commandments.

Decrees of God, what, 148. That they are not the Eſſence of God, 149. Whether they are Eternal, ibid. Whether abſolute or conditional, 149, 150. The Order of them, according to ſome, 150. The Nature of them, 587. Some explain them in a Manner deſtructive of Piety and Virtue, ibid.

Dedication, Feaſt of, 431, 507.

Defamation. See Evil ſpeaking.

Delight in God, what, 849. The Reaſonableneſs of it, from the Conſideration of natural, moral, and heavenly Delights, 849, 850. The Advantages of it, 851. How to poſſeſs our Souls with it, ibid. Impediments to it, 852.

Deluge, the Truth and Reality of it, 305. its Univerſality, 306. Objections againſt its Univerſality anſwer'd, from Reaſon and Scripture, ibid. From the Number of the World's Inhabitants, and the Hiſtory and Tradition of all Nations, 307. And from what is found in the Earth itſelf, ibid. and 308. Dr Burnet's Opinion of the Cauſe of it, anſwer'd and refuted, 308. Mr Whiſton's Hypotheſis refuted, 309, 310. The Moſaic Account of it, 311. How far the Clouds contributed to it, ibid. And the great Abyſs, ibid. and 312. Reflections upon thoſe that were loſt in it, 314. And upon thoſe that were ſaved, 314. 315.

Demon Worſhip among the Gentiles, the Original of it, 578.

Depravity. See Corruption.

Deriſion. See Jeſting and Scoffing.

Deſire of Happineſs, the Nature of it in Man, a Proof of the Being of God, 12.

Deſire of Righteouſneſs. See Righteouſneſs.

Detraction, what, 421.

Devil prompts Men to Wickedneſs, and how he is to be defeated, 935. See Angels, evil.

DIONYSIUS of Alexandria, ſome Account of him, 138.

Diſcipline of the primitive Church, and how it may be reſtored, 755, 756, 757.

Diſcontent, Arguments againſt it, 952. See Contentment.

Diſcourſe, religious, in Converſation, the Uſefulneſs and great Neglect of it, 920.

Diſcourſe, Atheiſtical, the great Boldneſs of it, 955. The Folly and Madneſs of it, ibid.

Diſſimulation, the Evil of it, 956, 657.

Diſtribution, unequal, of Things in this World, no juſt Objection againſt a Providence, 255

Divinity of the Son. See Son. Whether it was united to his dead Body, 669.

Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt See Holy Ghoſt.

Divinity. Poſitive, Polemical, Moral, and Caſuiſtical, 751.

Doctrine of Chriſt, the Excellency of it in Relation to what we are to know concerning God, 572. Concerning Sin and its Atonement, 573. Concerning our Juſtification and future Glory, 573, 574. Its Excellency in Relation to what we are to do, in our Duty to God, our Neighbour, and ourſelves, 574, 575. Its Excellency above the old Moral Law, 575, 576.

INDEX.

DORT, the Synod held there, 154.
Dreams. Why God revealed himself in them, 350. Natural Dreams, how occaſioned, 354. Supernatural ones, why now ſuperſeded, 355. The Interpretation of them, from whence, ibid.
Drollery upon Scripture, the ſinfulneſs of it, 956.
Duelling unlawful, 409. Excuſes for it anſwer'd, 410.
Duties to God, our natural Obligations to them, 844. The internal Duties we owe to him, 845, &c. External Duties to him, 869, &c. See GOD.
Duties towards our Neighbour; Univerſal Love and Charity, 883. 2. Juſtice, 893. 3. Mercy, 916, &c.
Duties of Parents to their Children, 401. An Exhortation to them, 404.
Duties of Children to Parents, 398. Encouragements to them, 401.
Duties of Princes and Subjects, 897. Of Paſtors and People, 900. Of Huſbands and Wives, 902. Of Maſters and Servants, 905. Of Friends towards one another, 908. Of Superiors in Rank, &c. and their reſpective Inferiors, 912.
Duties to ourſelves, reſpecting, 1. The Government of our Thoughts, 929. 2. The Government of our Paſſions and Affections, 941. 3. The Government of the Tongue, 954. 4. The Government of the whole Man, 962, &c.

E.

EARTH, its Productions, &c. a Proof of the Exiſtence of God, 7. The Moſaic Creation extended beyond it, 204. Its Diurnal Motion before the Fall, ibid. Why more particularly concerned in the Moſaic Account, 206. How it might be raiſed above the Waters, 207. Its Surface, Petrifaction, and its Inhabitants, and late Cultivation, Arguments againſt the World's Eternity, 172. Arguments for the Earth's Motion, 460, and ibid. Notes.
EBION, his Hereſy, 136.
ECCLESIASTES, the Book of, upon what Occaſion it was written, 482.
Eccleſiaſtical Laws of the Jews, 429, &c. See Ceremonial.
EDEN, where ſituate, 267, 268, 269. See Paradiſe.
EGYPTIANS. See Ægyptians, and Iſraelites.
Elders of the Church, who they were, 738.
Election in Scripture, the Calviniſts Senſe of it, 155. The Arminian Senſe of it, 158, 159.
ELIJAH, ſome Account of the Name, and the Opinion of ſome Jews concerning him, 484. Notes. His foretelling the Drought, and being fed by Ravens, ibid. The Trial between him and the Prieſts of Baal, 484, 485. His Tranſlation, 485.
ELISHA's Actions, 486.
Empires, their Riſe, 324.
Endeavours, our own, neceſſary to the Work of Mortification, 966.
Enemies, our Duty of loving them. See Loving our Enemies.
ENOCH, his Character and Tranſlation, 298, 299.
Envy, contrary to Charity, 883.
EPHESUS, the Council held there, 143.
Ephod made by Gideon, various Opinions concerning it, 464, 465.
EPICTETUS, a remarkable Paſſage of his concerning Reſignation to the Will of God, 94.
EPICUREAN Hypotheſis of the Formation of the World, its Riſe, 175. Confuted, 176.
EPICURUS, the good Account ſome give of him, 100. His Scheme, as repreſented by others, 969.

Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, upon what Occaſions they were written, 45.
Equity, what, 906.
ESSENES, their Original, 510. Their Opinions and Principles, ibid. The Form of their Admiſſion, ibid.
ESTHER, made Queen, and her good Offices to the Jews, 501.
Eternity of God, proved from Reaſon and Scripture, 76, 77. What we are to learn from thence, 77.
Eternity of the World, that Notion confuted, 169.—175.
Eternity of Hell Torments proved from Scripture, 835. From the Nature of Sin, and the Diſpoſition of Sinners, 836, 837. From God's Proceedings with us, 837. And the neceſſary Sanctions of his Laws, 838. An Objection anſwered, 838, 839. The Sum of the whole Argument, 840. And a final Exhortation thereupon, 841.
EVE, her Formation, 222. Why made of a Rib, ibid. The Manner of the Serpent tempting her, 280. Her Fall, 281.
Events, the ordering and directing them, one Branch of Divine Providence, 239.
Evidence to a Matter of Fact, Requiſites in a valid one, 39.
Evils that are in Life, no juſt Objections againſt a Providence, 257, 258, 259.
Evil Appearance, what it is to abſtain from it, and the Extent of that Duty, 973 Motives to abſtain from it, becauſe it is hurtful to our own Reputation, 974. And to our Neighbour's Soul, ibid. Directions for avoiding it. As, 1. Inward Sincerity, 975. 2. Outward Prudence, 976. 3. Setting our Virtues in a clear Light, ſo that they may not be miſtaken for Vices, ibid.
Evil-ſpeaking, ſeveral Kinds of it, 420. The Miſchiefs and Madneſs of it, ib. & 421.
Evil Spirit that troubled Saul, what, 472.
EUTYCHIANS, their Hereſy, 143.
Exaltation of Chriſt. See Reſurrection, Aſcenſion and Seſſion. What we are to obſerve from thence, 694, 695.
Excommunication, the ſeveral Kinds of it among the Jews, 755. Practiſed by the Chriſtian Church, ibid.
Expiation, the great Day of, a ſolemn Faſt among the Jews, 431.
Extreme Unction. See Unction.

F.

FACULTIES of the Soul. See Soul.
Faith, a Condition of the ſecond Covenant, 545. The general Notion of it. 546. The different Kinds of it, ibid. The Object, and the Evidence of it, 547. 548. The different Senſes of the Word in Scripture, 551, 552. Why made a Condition of our Salvation, 553. Means to improve it, 554.
Fall of our firſt Parents, the Hiſtory of it literal, 276. The Occaſion of it, 277. &c. The Manner of it, 280, 281. Why God permitted it, 282. The effect of it to themſelves, 284. To the Serpent, 285. Upon the Ground, ibid. Upon the Bodies and Souls of Men, 286.
Faſts among the Jews, 431, 432.
FATHER, the firſt Perſon in the Trinity, wherein his Pre-eminence conſiſts, 120.
Fathers, antient, their Teſtimony to the Divinity of the Son, 126. To that of the Holy Ghoſt, 128. Their Opinion of Free Will and Predeſtination, 165.
Fear of God, the Reaſonableneſs and Importance of it, 96, 853. The Benefits of it, 855. Means of poſſeſſing our Souls with it, ibid. and 856.
Fear of Man, Inſtances of its prevailing in us over the Fear of God, 854. Why it is apt to do ſo, ibid. The Folly and Sinfulneſs of it, 855.

Feaſts, the ſeveral Sorts of them among the Jews, 430, 431. See Dedication, Paſſover, Pentecoſt, Purim, Tabernacles, and Trumpets.
Felicity, the Capacity of it founded in the Temper of the Mind, 102. See Happineſs.
Fervency, a proper Qualification of Prayer, 874.
Fidelity, a Duty of the Married State, 902. One Office of Friendſhip, 909.
Fiery Serpents 451.
Fire, how immaterial Beings may be tormented with it, 831.
Fire, from God, what, 447.
Flaming Sword, at the Entrance of Paradiſe, various Opinions about it, 284. Notes.
Flattery, what, 421. The Evil of it, 957.
Fleſh permitted to be eaten after the Flood, 326. The Reaſon of it, 327.
Flood. See Deluge.
Forms of Prayer not prohibited, but in ſome Places commanded in Scripture, 877. The Expediency of them, ibid.
Foxes, Sampſon's, accounted for, 468, 469.
Friendſhip, the Neceſſity and Benefit of it, 908. The Offices of it, 909, 910, 911.

G.

GALEN, his Admiration of the Texture of Man's Body, 10.
Gaming condemned, 964.
GEHENNA, whence it came to be a Name for Hell, 830. Notes.
Genealogy of Chriſt ſettled, 637, 638.
Generation, equivocal, that there is no ſuch Thing, 209. Notes.
GIDEON moved by God to deliver Iſrael, 463. His Sign to the People, ibid. The Affair of his Men lapping, and the Stratagem by which he gained the Victory over the Midianites, ibid, and 464. His Ephod, 464, 465.
Gifts of the Spirit, different Sorts of them, 761.
Gifts, extraordinary, 762. Neceſſary to the firſt Chriſtians, 763. How long they continued in the Church, 764.
Gifts, ordinary, 767, &c. Their Neceſſity, 770. See Operations.
Glory, different Degrees of it in Heaven, proved from Reaſon and Scripture, 826, 827. Upon what Account it is ſo, 828. See Heaven, and Happineſs.
GNOSTICKS, their Hereſy, 136. Their Opinion of human Souls, 152.
GOD, his Being proved from the Frame and Order of the World, 5, to 8. From the Texture of the human Body, 8. From the Nature of the Soul, 10. Other Arguments of his Exiſtence, 13. The Folly and Danger of denying it, 13, 14. Praiſe and Admiration, Love and Obedience due to him, 15. The Poſſibility and Neceſſity of his making a Revelation to Men, 17, to 20. The Knowledge of him taught in Scripture, 56. His Nature incomprehenſible, yet ought to be contemplated, 69. How to form right Notions of it, 70. His Unity, 73, 381. His Eternity, 76. His Immenſity, 78 His Immutability, 81. The Life of God, 84. His Spirituality, 85. His Knowledge, 88. His Wiſdom, 91. His Power, 94. His Happineſs, 97. His Holineſs, 99. His Goodneſs, 103. His Mercy and Patience, 105. His Juſtice, 108. His Veracity, 111. His Decrees, 148. Why he employed ſix Days in the Creation, 211. His Image in Man 224. His Providence, 231, &c. His Nature, his Love and Tenderneſs, Proofs of his Providence, 241, 242. How his Dealings with Man differ from a Covenant, and from a Law, 271. Why he permitted Man to fall, 282. Why he ſelected the Family of Abraham, 330. His giving the Law to the Jews, 374, 376, 376. He appoints the Covenant of Grace, 539. His Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and his Juſtice and Severity againſt Sin, manifeſted in Chriſt's Sufferings and Death, 665, 666. Our Duty to love him, 845. To delight in him, 849. To fear him, 853. To truſt in him, 856. To ſubmit to him, 860. Purity of Heart neceſſary to recommend ourſelves to him, 862. And Heavenly Mindedneſs, 865. Our Duty to worſhip him, and pray unto him, 869. To praiſe him, and give Thanks unto him, 878. What induced him to bring Creatures into Being, 913. His Nature and Works, proper Objects of our Meditation, 933, 934.

Golden-Calf, why made, 443. Divers Opinions why this Emblem was choſen, 444.

GOLIAH ſlain by David, 476.

Good and Evil, their moral Diſtinction, 844.

Good Men, how they were expoſed to Sufferings, 952. Their Happineſs, 978, 979.

Good Name. See Reputation.

Goodneſs of God, 103. Proved from Reaſon, and the Teſtimony of Heathens, 103, 104. From Scripture, 104. Several Inſtances of it, and what Effect the Conſideration of it ſhould have upon us, 104, 105. It is a Ground for Truſt in God, 857.

Goſpel, its Advantages above the Law, 716, 717, 718. See Chriſtianity, and Covenant of Grace.

Goſpels, the Reaſon and Occaſion of their being written, 44.

Government, the Reaſon and Neceſſity of it, 897.

Government of all Cauſes, one Act of Divine Providence, 237.

Government of the Thoughts. See Thoughts.

Government of the Paſſions and Affections. See Paſſions.

Government of the Tongue. See Tongue.

Governors, Civil. See Princes and Subjects.

Governors, Eccleſiaſtical. See Biſhops, Miniſters, and Paſtors.

Grace, what, 103. Under what Notions the Grace of the Spirit may be conſidered, 772, &c. See Operations.

Gradus Moſaicus, what, 16.

Gratitude, what, and the Reaſonableneſs of it, 915.

Grief, the Uſe of that Paſſion, 941.

GUINEA, the odd Notions of the Inhabitants, 530.

H.

HAGGAI, his Prophecy of the Meſſiah, 497, 700.

Hail-Stones that deſtroyed the Canaanites, 460.

Happineſs of God, wherein it conſiſts, 97. Proved from Reaſon, from Scripture, and the Teſtimony of Heathens, 97, 98. What we are to learn from this Attribute, 98.

Happineſs of Heaven, the Metaphors it is expreſſed by, 822. Wherein it chiefly conſiſts, 824. Holineſs neceſſary to the Enjoyment of it, 825. Each Saint ſhall be ſatisfied with his own Degree of it, 829. See Heaven.

Hatred, the Uſe of that Paſſion, 941.

Heart, what it ſignifies in the Scripture Language, 929.

Heathen World, its Condition no juſt Objection againſt a Providence, 260, 261. Its antient State, 516, &c. 531. Its preſent State, 525, &c. 533.

Heathens, the wiſeſt of them believed in one God only, 516. The more ignorant believed a Plurality, 517, 518. The ſounder Parts of their Religion, 531, &c. Whether their Religion will ſave them, 534, 535. Their final Converſion to Chriſtianity, 595. Why they rejected Chriſt at firſt, 723, 724.

Heaven, its Happineſs inexplicable, 822. Its Locality, 823. Its Beauty and Magnificence, 824. Its rational Pleaſures and Enjoyments, ibid. Its Company, 825. Holineſs neceſſary to the Enjoyment of it, ibid. Different Degrees of Glory in it, 826, &c. Curious Queſtions about it, not to be reſolved, 829.

Heavens, their Diviſion, 181. Created by God; and whether Moſes's Account extends to them, ibid. and 182. When they were created, 183. Whether out of nothing, ibid.

Heavenly Bodies, their Variety, Magnitude, Revolutions, &c. a Proof of the Being of a God, 5, 6. The firſt Idolatry conſiſted in worſhipping them, 521.

Heavenly Mindedneſs, the Chriſtians Obligation to it, 695. What it implies, 865. Reaſonableneſs of it, from the Light of Nature, ibid. From Revelation, 866. From the Reſurrection of Chriſt, 867. The Benefits of it, ibid. and 868.

HEBREW, its Pretenſions to be the firſt Language, 320. More probably deſcended from that of Canaan, ibid. and 321.

Hell, the Nature of it, 830. The Reality of its Fire, ibid. That there is now a Hell, 831. Conjectures concerning the Place of it, 832, 833. A Deſcription of it, and its ſad Eſtate, 833, 834. Different Degrees of Puniſhment in it, and upon what Accounts, 834. The Eternity of its Torments proved, 835, &c. See Eternity, &c.

Hell, Chriſt's Deſcent into it, 671. The different Senſes of it, ibid. The moſt probable Senſe, 672. The Ends and Uſes of his Deſcent into it, 673, 674.

HERCULES, very probably the ſame with Sampſon, 469.

Hereſies, how Chriſtianity was preſerved in the midſt of them, 758.

Hereſy of Ætius, 141. Of the Anomæans, ibid. Of the Apelleans, 629. Notes. Of the Apollinarians, 142, 630. Notes. Of the Arians, 139, &c. Of Cerinthus, 136. Of Ebion, ibid. Of the Eutychians, 143. Of the Gnoſticks, 136. Of the Macedonians, 142. Of the Manichæans, 139. Of Menander, 136. Of the Neſtorians, 143. Of Noetius, 138. Of the Photinians, 140. Of Praxeas, 137. Of Sabellius, 138. Of the Samoſatenians, 139. Of Simon Magus, 135. Of Socinus, 145, 146. Of Valentinus, 136.

HEROD the Great made King of Judea by the Romans, 514. His Character, ibid. He puts his Wife Mariamne to Death, ibid. and 515. His other cruel Acts, and idolatrous Compliances, ibid.

HERODIANS, who, and why ſo called, 511.

HEZEKIAH, his Piety, 488. How the Sun's Receſs on his Dial was occaſioned, 489.

High Prieſt among the Jews, his Office, 440.

HIPPOLITUS, oppoſes the Noëtians, 138.

Hiſtory, its Lateneſs, an Argument againſt the World's Eternity, 173.

Holineſs neceſſary to Happineſs, 102, 825, 965, 966, 971.

Holineſs of God, what, 99. Proved from Reaſon and the Teſtimony of Heathens, 99, 100. From Scripture, 100. An Objection againſt it anſwered, 100, 101, Reverence to God, and Holineſs in ourſelves, ſhould be the Reſult of the Conſideration of this Attribute, 102.

HOLY GHOST, a Perſon, 126. Proved to be a divine Perſon from his Titles, Honours, and Offices, 127. From his Government of the Church, and the Teſtimony of the antient Fathers, 128. See Trinity. His Deſcent upon the Apoſtles, 760. The Circumſtances of it, 760, 761. His extraordinary Gifts, 762. That he is communicated now, 765. That he operates upon our Minds, 767. His ordinary Gifts, ibid &c. He aſſiſts us in the Duty of Mortification, 966.

Holy of Holies, 433.

Honours, the original Deſign of conferring them, 914.

Hope, the Uſe of that Paſſion, 941.

HOSEA's Fate, 487.

Humiliation of Chriſt, the Nature of it, 628. Not inglorious, 629. His perſonal Character and Tranſactions in that State, ibid. &c.

Humility, a neceſſary Qualification for Prayer, 874. This Virtue deſcribed, 937. It is a Chriſtian Duty, ibid. The Reaſonableneſs of it, 938. The Benefits of it, 939. Means of attaining it, ibid.

Humility of Chriſt, 937, 940.

Huſbands and Wives, their Duties, 902, &c.

Hypocriſy, the Folly of it, 91. How to avoid the Suſpicion of it, 976.

I.

JACOB purchaſes the Birthright of his Brother, 347. Supplants him in his Father's Bleſſing, 348. His Viſion of the Ladder, and the Reaſon of it, 349. His Wreſtling with an Angel, 350. The Reaſon of it, 351. His Prophecy of the Shiloh explained, 351, 352, 699.

JAEL, her killing of Siſera, 462.

JANSENIUS, ſome Account of him, 153.

JAPANESE, their Idolatry, 526. A farther Account of their Religion, 533.

Identity of a Body, wherein it conſiſts, 800.

Idleneſs, the miſchievous Effects of it, 932.

Idolatry, ſome Account of the antient Idolatry, 517, &c. A Summary of it, 525. The preſent Idolatry of the Chineſe, ibid. Of the Banians, 526. Of the Japaneſe and Siameſe, ibid. and 527. Of the Tartars, 528. Of Virginia, ibid. Of Canada, Florida, Peru, and Mexico, 528, 529. Of Lapland, 530. Of Guinea, ibid.

Idols, their firſt Inſtitution, 518. By whom, and how introduced, 519. For what Reaſons, 520. The great Multitude of them, 522. The Abſurdities the Inventors of them ran into, ibid. The Order ſettled among them, 523. The Manner of worſhipping them, 524. Their Feaſts, ibid. Of eating Meats offered to them, 975.

Jealouſy, a terrible Paſſion, and how to be prevented, 903.

JEHU deſtroys the Family of Ahab, 487.

JEPHTHAH, his Vow, 465. Whether his Daughter was really ſacrificed, 466, 467.

JERICHO, its Walls fall down, 459.

JEROBOAM, his Idolatry, 482.

JERUSALEM deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, 492. Taken by Pompey, 513. Its Deſtruction by the Romans particularly foretold by our Saviour, 33, 718.

Jeſting, what Kind of it lawful, and what not, 958, 959.

JESUS CHRIST, his holy and good Life, 32. His Predictions, 33. His Miracles, 34. The Excellency of his Doctrine, 34, 35. The wonderful Propagation of his Religion, 36. All theſe a Proof of his Divine Miſſion, 37. The Credibility of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts Teſtimony concerning him, 39, &c. His Divinity proved, 121, &c. The Time of his Birth, 515. His Mediatorſhip, 567. His Prophetical Office, 571. His Prieſthood, 576. His Death a real Sacrifice for Sin, 578. The Neceſſity of his Satisfaction, 581. That he died for all, 585. His Interceſſion, 589. His Kingly Office, 590. Of his Perſon, 629. His Conception, 631. The Circumſtances of his Birth, 633. Some proper Obſervations thereupon, 640. Why he was circumciſed, 642. The Import of his Name, 643. His Confirmation in the Temple, 645. His Subjection to his Parents, and Baptiſm by John, 645, 646. His Temptation in the Wilderneſs, 646, 647, 648. The Nature of his Preaching, 650. The Number and Quality of his Miracles, 651. His Entry into Jeruſalem, 652. His Agony in the Garden, 653, &c. His Sufferings afterwards, 659, 660. His Crucifixion, 663. His Death, 664. His Burial, and the Circumſtances of it, 669, 670. Of his Deſcent into Hell, 671. His Reſurrection, the Certainty of it, 674, &c. The Manner of it, 681. The Purpoſes of it, 682. His Aſcenſion, and whether he aſcended more than once, 687, &c. The Matter of his Diſcourſes after his Reſurrection, 690. The Reality, Manner, and Ends of his Aſcenſion, 691, 692. His Seſſion at God's right Hand, 693. That he is the true Meſſias, 696, &c. Proved from the Fulfilment of Prophecies, 702. From his Miracles, 707. From his own Predictions, 718. From the ſpeedy Propagation of his Religion, 720. Why he was not generally owned as ſuch by the Gentiles, 723, 724. And by the Jews, 725. His Commiſſion to his Apoſtles, 729, &c. He ſends down the Holy Ghoſt upon them, 760. His ſecond Coming, 813. He was a Pattern of Humility, 937, 940. Of Meekneſs, 945, 946. Of great Patience under Sufferings and Afflictions, 953.

JEWS, the Laws they had before thoſe given at Mount Sinai, 374. The ſeveral Kinds of their Laws, and the Number of them, 376. Their Oral Law, ibid. Their Moral Law, 377, &c. Their Civil or Judicial Laws, 425. Their Theocracy, 426. Their ſeveral Forms of Government, 426, 427. The Wiſdom of their Laws in Relation to the King, 427. To the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, National Intereſt, and common Prudence, 427, 428. How far they oblige other People, 428. The Nature of their Sanctions, ibid. Their Ceremonial or Eccleſiaſtical Laws, 429. Their Feaſts, 430. Their Faſts, 431, 432. Their Tabernacle, 432. Their Temple, 434. Their Oratories, 435. Their Synagogues, 436. Their Sacrifices and Oblations, 436, 437. Their Levites, Prieſts, and High Prieſts, 439, 440. They are carried Captive into Babylon, 492. Their Return from their Captivity, 497. They are made ſubject to the Kings of Egypt, 503. To the Kings of Syria, 504. Their Perſecutions under Antiochus Epiphanes, 505, 506. Their State under the Maccabees, 506, 507. The ſeveral Sects among them, 508. Their State under the Romans, 512. Their final Converſion to Chriſtianity, 595. Their Sins no Obſtruction to the Meſſiah's Coming, 701. Their diſtracted Circumſtances, 714. Their Miſeries in the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, 718, 719. Cauſes of their Infidelity, 725. Why the preſent Jews are not converted, 726, &c. Their Notion of two Meſſahs, 727. Notes. What is to be done in order to their Converſion, 727, 728, 729. Whether the antient Jews had right Notions of the ſeparate State of the Soul, 784. See ISRAELITES.

IGNATIUS, St. the Hereſies he oppoſed, 136.

Ignorance, the Unhappineſs of it to the Soul, 919.

Illumination, a Gift of the Spirit, 767.

Image of God in Man, different Opinions about it, 224. Wherein it conſiſted, 224, &c. A Recapitulation of it, 227. How far impaired after the Fall 227, 228.

Image Worſhip, the Folly and Wickedneſs of it, 385.

Images not to be made of God, 87, 385. The Folly and Impiety of ſo doing, 385, 386.

Images, ſtrange Images of the Trinity, 134.

Images, their Riſe, 520. When firſt worſhipped, 521.

Immateriality of the Soul, 219.

Immenſity of God, what, 78. Proved from Reaſon, ibid. And from Scripture, 79. To be admired, dreaded, and relied on by us, 79, 80.

Immerſion in Baptiſm, uſed by moſt Chriſtians at this Day, 616. Notes.

Immortality of the Soul proved from Scripture and Antiquity, 779. From univerſal Conſent, 781. From the Qualities of the Soul, its Deſire of Happineſs, and Relation to God, 781, 782. From its Deſire of Immortality, and Apprehenſions of Futurity, 783. The Influence of this Doctrine, 790, 791.

Immutability of God, proved from his Nature and Perfections, 81. From the Scriptures, and the Teſtimony of Heathens, 82. An Objection againſt it anſwered, ibid. The Uſe to be made of that Doctrine, 83.

Impoſition of Hands, the Deſign of it, 745.

Impoſition in Matters of Opinion, the Unreaſonableneſs of it, 961.

Incarnation of Chriſt, with its Circumſtances, 631, &c. The divine Attributes manifeſted therein, 640. It teaches us a true Eſtimate of the World, ibid. And leads us to Humility and other Virtues, 642. See Birth.

Inconſideration, a Hindrance to our delighting in God, 852. The chief Occaſion of Sin and Vice, 935.

Infant Baptiſm, Arguments againſt it anſwered, 610, 611. Arguments for it, 612, 613.

Inferiors, their Duty to their Superiors, 914, 915.

Injuſtice, the Heinouſneſs, Unprofitableneſs, Uneaſineſs, Deſperateneſs, and Folly of that Sin, 896, 897.

Inoffenſiveneſs, one Duty in the Government of our Tongues with Reſpect to our Neighbour, wherein it conſiſts, 957.

Inſpiration, the Degrees of it, 46, 47.

Inſtinct of Animals, 8.

Inſtruction proper for the Ignorant, 919.

Integrity, a neceſſary Qualification of Goſpel Obedience, 565.

Interceſſion of Chriſt, the Manner of it, 589. The Bleſſings of God come by it, ibid. The Divine Wiſdom and Goodneſs diſplayed therein, 590. The Advantages of it to us, ibid.

Inviſibility of God, 87.

Invocation. See Prayer.

JOB, where and when he lived, 356. A real Perſon, and of what Family, ibid. His Wealth, Virtue, and Afflictions, 357. His Conferences with his Friends, ibid. God juſtifies and rewards him, 358.

JOHN, the Apoſtle, the Hereticks he oppoſed, 136.

JOHN the Baptiſt, his Character, Preaching, and Baptiſm, 646.

JORDAN, River, deſcribed, 458.

JOSEPH, his Hiſtory, 353. Moſes's Elegance in expreſſing it, ibid. His Character from Juſtin, 355.

JOSEPHUS, his Teſtimony concerning our Saviour, 42. His Account of the Canon of the Old Teſtament, 50.

JOSHUA ſucceeds Moſes, 458. Who the Perſon was that appeared to him before Jericho, 459. He conquers Canaan, admoniſhes the People, and dies, 461.

JOSIAH prophecied of, 483. His great Piety, 491. His Death, and the Occaſion of it, 492.

Joy, the Uſe of that Paſſion, 941.

IRENÆUS oppoſes the Valentinians, 137.

ISAAC, Abraham commanded to offer him up, 337. He was a Type of Chriſt, 340. His Bleſſing to Jacob, 348. And to Eſau, 349.

ISRAELITES, how oppreſſed in Egypt, 358. Why God permitted it, 360. Their ſpoiling the Egyptians vindicated, 367, 368. They depart out of Egypt, 368. Why the Egyptians purſued them, 370. The Diſtreſs they were then in, 371. They paſs through the Red Sea, ibid. An Objection againſt the Miraculouſneſs of their Paſſage anſwered, ibid. That they went directly croſs, 372. The Manner of their encamping, 447. And marching, ibid. Their General, and Victory over the Midianites, 457. They paſs over Jordan, 458. Take Poſſeſſion of the Land of Canaan, 461. How they were governed after Joſhua's Death ibid. They demand a King, 472. See JEWS.

Jubilee, Year of, 430.

JUDAS Maccabæus, 506, 507.

JUDAS of Galilee, his Sect, 511.

JUDAS Iſcariot, his Character, 657. The Nature and Aggravation of his Crime, ibid. His Repentance, ibid. Wherein it was defective, 658.

Judges among the Jews, the Nature of their Power, 426, 462.

Judgment, no particular one before the Reſurrection, 788.

Judgment, future, proved from univerſal Conſent, 803. From the Power of Conſcience, ibid. From the Adminiſtration of Providence, 804. That it will be univerſal with reſpect to Perſons, 805, 806, 807. And with reſpect to Things, 808, 809, 810. How long the Time of it may laſt, 811. The Solemnity and Proceſs of it, 812. Some Circumſtances of it, 813, &c. How Men will then be differently affected, 816, 817. Concerning the Time of it, 818, &c. Why Men are left ignorant in that Reſpect, 821. It will come ſuddenly, ibid. The Uſe to be made of it, 821, 822.

Judicial Law of the Jews, 425, &c. See JEWS.

JUDITH, her Book conſidered, 490.

JULIAN the Apoſtate, 142. His Teſtimony of the Chriſtians Charity, 888. Notes.

Juſtice of God, what, 108. Proved from Reaſon and Scripture, 109. An Objection againſt it anſwer'd, 110. What Influence the Conſideration of this Attribute ſhould have upon us, 110, 111.

Juſtice, what, and its Relation to Mens natural and acquired Rights, 893, 894. Our Obligation to it from the Dictates of Nature, 894. From the Nature, Providence and revealed Will of God, 894, 895. The Rules of it, with the Limitation and Excellency of that Rule, 895. Farther Motives to the Practice of it, 896, 897.

Juſtice, Relative, between Prince and Subject, 897. Between Paſtor and People, 900. Between Husband and Wife, 902. Between Maſter and Servant, 905. Between Friend and Friend, 908. Between Superiors in Rank, Parts, Riches, and Beneficence, and their reſpective Inferiors, 912.
Juſtice and Equity, the Diſtinction between them, 906.
Juſtification, a twofold one, 551.

K.

KARRAITES, who, and why ſo called, 512.
Killing, what ſorts of Killing not intended in the ſixth Commandment, 405, 406. What is intended in it, 406. See Murder.
Kingdom of Chriſt, the Nature of it, 590, 591. The Enlargement of it, 594. How that will be effected, 596. The Happineſs of that State, 597. When it ſhall begin, ibid. That it is not yet paſt, 598. When begun, will laſt a Thouſand Years, ibid. The ſurrendering up of his Kingdom, 600.
Kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, their State, 487.
Kingly Office of Chriſt, 590. The ſeveral Acts of it; as, to conquer his Enemies, 592. To appoint proper Miniſters, ibid. To preſcribe Laws, to protect his Subjects, and to puniſh and reward, 593, 594.
Kings, their Duty to their Subjects, 897, 898. See Subjects.
Knowledge of God, of ourſelves, and of the World, taught in Scripture, 56, 57.
Knowledge of God, one of his Perfections, prov'd from Reaſon, and from Scripture, 88, 89. An Objection anſwered, 90. What Influence the Conſideration of it ſhould have upon us, 91. It is a Ground for Truſt in him, 856.
KORAH's Rebellion, upon what Pretences, 448. Its Puniſhment, 449.

L.

LACTANTIUS, his Diſcourſe concerning Mercy, 919.
Language, reproachful, forbid by our Saviour, 410.
Languages, which was the firſt, 320. How many upon the Confuſion of them, 322.
Languages, the Gift of them to the Apoſtles, 762. The Neceſſity of it, 763.
LAPLAND, the Idolatry and Witchcraft there, 530.
Law, how God's Dealings with Man differ from it, 271.
Law of Nature, 375. Its univerſal Extent and Obligation, ibid.
Law of Moſes, why inſtituted, 543, 544. The authentick Copy of it found in the Temple, 491. See JEWS.
Laws, the ſeveral Kinds of them, 374, 375.
Laws. See JEWS.
Lay-Baptiſm, Arguments againſt it from Scripture, Reaſon, and the Practice of the Primitive Church, 606. From the Practice of the Church of England, and the Conſequences of each Opinion, 607, Arguments for it from Scripture, 608. From the Practice of the Primitive Church, and of the Church of England, 608, 609. The Conſequences of the contrary Opinion, 609. The Determination of the whole, 610.
Laymen, not ordinarily allowed to preach, 746. When allowed to baptize, 749.
Learning, a neceſſary Qualification for a Miniſter, 744, 751.
LEVITES, ſeveral ſorts of them, and their Office, 449.
Liberality. See Bounty.
Life, the ſeveral Degrees of it, 84.
Life of God, 84. The Excellency of it, ibid.
Life, what that was which was promiſed to our firſt Parents, 272, 273.
Liturgy of the Church of England, its Excellency, 878.
Lord's-Day, the Chriſtian Sabbath, 394, 395. The Chriſtian's Obligation to obſerve it, and how it ſhould be done, 397.
Lord's-Supper, the true Senſe of the Words of Inſtitution, 618. The Teſtimony of the Fathers in this Matter, 619. How the Doctrine of real and corporeal Preſence came to be introduced, 620. That it is not a real propitiatory Sacrifice, ibid. The true Virtue and Nature of it, 621. The Ends of it, ibid. The Benefits we receive thereby, 623. Our Obligations to the frequent Obſervance of it, 624. Some Hindrances conſidered, 624, 625 How we are to behave before, at, and after it, 626, 627. An Exhortation to frequent Receiving, 627.
LOT's Wife, God's Judgment upon her, 344. Various Opinions about the Nature of it, 344, 345.
Lots, Feaſt of. See Purim.
Love to God, what, 845. Reaſons for it from his Attributes, his Relation to us, and his being the Author of Love in us, 845, 846. The Properties and Signs of it, 847. Miſtakes about it, 848. Means to attain it, 849.
Love. See Charity.
Love, the Uſe of that Paſſion, 941.
Loving our Enemies, the Occaſion of our Saviour's commanding that Duty, 889, 890. Wherein it conſiſts, ibid. An Objection againſt it anſwer'd, 891. Another Objection, ibid. Motives to this Duty, from the Conſideration of our Enemy, 892. From the Nature of the Duty, and the Example of God, 892, 893.
LUCIAN, his Account of a Tradition concerning the Flood, 305. Notes.
Luſt, inward, forbid, 415.
LUTHER eſpouſes St Auſtin's Opinions, 153.
LUTHERANS, their Opinion of God's Decrees, 149.
Lying, different Opinions of the Nature of it, 419. Wherein the Nature of it really conſiſts, ibid. Its Heinouſneſs, ibid. Officious Lying not allowable, tho' leſs ſinful, 420.

M.

MACCABEES, their Acts, 506, 507. The Reaſon of the Name, 506. Notes.
MACEDONIAN Hereſy, 142.
MAGIANS, their Opinion of two firſt Principles, 499. Corrected by Zoroaſtres, 500.
Magicans of Egypt, who, 361. How they might do what they did, 362.
Magick, different Kinds of it, 361.
Magiſtrates. See Kings.
Mahometan Religion, what its Succeſs was owing to, 720, 759,
Malice, the ill Effects of it, 889.
Man, the Texture of his Body, and Faculties of his Soul, a Proof of the Being of a God, 8, to 13. His Nature in his ſocial, private, and religious Capacity, a Proof of the Divine Providence, 242, 243.
Man, why not created till the ſixth Day, 216. The ſolemn Manner of his Creation, ibid. His Body made by God, 217. The Infuſion of his Soul, 218. The Image of God in him, 224, &c. The End of his Creation, 228, &c. His Fall, 276, &c. What to be done with him under the Breach of the firſt Covenant, 537. God compaſſionates him, and why, 539.
MANICHEAN Hereſy, 139.
Mankind not from Eternity, but made by God, 213. Adam and Eve the firſt Parents of Mankind, 214.
Mankind, their Degeneracy, 18. Their general Corruption before the Flood, 303, 304. Their Diſperſion after the Flood, 323, 324.
Mark ſet upon Cain, what, 297.
Marks of a true Revelation, 22. Applied to the Moſaic Revelation, 23. To the Prophetick, 29. To the Chriſtian, 32, 39, &c.
Marriage, not a Sacrament, 601. The Duties of that State, 902, &c.
Martyrs in the Jewiſh Church, 505, 506.
MARY, the bleſſed Virgin, Chriſt's human Nature taken from her, 631. Whether after his Birth ſhe continued a Virgin, 632. Her Condition, 639. How we are to honour and reſpect her, ibid.
Maſters, their Duty to their Servants, 905, 906. Motives to it, 907.
MATTATHIAS bravely aſſerts the Cauſe of the Jews, 506.
Matter cannot be made to think, 220.
Mediator, what, of whoſe Appointment, and when firſt appointed, 567, 568. The Neceſſity of one between God and Man, 569. Who was to partake of both Natures, 569, 570.
Mediatorſhip of Chriſt, the ſeveral Offices of it, 571, &c.
Meditation, religious, the proper Object of it, 933, 934. The Excellency of it, 935. It tends to preſerve us from Sin, and to recover us from it, ibid. To excite us to Virtue and Piety, 936. An Exhortation to it, 937.
Meekneſs, what, 945. A Chriſtian Virtue, and exemplified in Chriſt, ibid. The Excellency of it, 946. Means of attaining to it, 947.
Melancholy Perſons, their Caſe, 930.
MELCHIZEDEC, who, 334. The Apoſtle's Character of him explain'd, 335. Different Conjectures concerning him, ibid. The true Account of him, 336.
MENANDER, his Hereſy, 136.
Mercy of God, what, 105. Proved from Scripture, 106. The various Kinds of its Manifeſtation, ibid. and 917.
Mercy, what, and the Objects of it, 916. It is ſtrongly implanted in our Nature, 916, 917. Agreeable to the Nature and Will of God, and exemplified by Chriſt, 917. The Excellency of it, ibid. It engages the Mercy of Men, and of God, 918. What Kind of Mercy is to be exerciſed towards the Ignorant, 919. Towards the wicked and obſtinate, 921. Towards the infirm, ſick, and oppreſſed, 923, 924. Towards the poor, 924, &c.
Mercy-Seat, 433.
MESSIAH, the Meaning of the Word, 696. Scripture Promiſes and Characters of him, 696, 697. Expected by the Jews, at the Time of our Saviour's Coming, 697. And by the Gentiles, 698. The Time of his Coming long ſince paſt, 699. The Promiſes of his Coming not conditional, but abſolute, 701. That Jeſus is the Meſſiah, proved from the Fulfilment of Prophecies, 702. From his Miracles, 707. An Objection of the Jews anſwered, 712, &c. That he is the Meſſiah, proved from his own Predictions, 718. From the wonderful Propagation of his Religion, 720. Why he was not owned to be the Meſſias by the Gentiles, 723. By the Jews, 725. See JESUS CHRIST.
Method of the Scriptures, 63.
Metropolitans, their Riſe and Juriſdiction, 743.
MIDIANITES, the Stratagem by which Gideon overcame them, 464.
Millennaries, their Opinion of the future State of the Heathens, 535.
Millennium, the Doctrine of it in ſome Senſe confuted, 598, 599. Some Account count of that Doctrine, and its Original, 599. Notes.

Miniſters, a diſtinct Body of Men in the Church, 734. Three Orders of them, 736, &c. Their Qualifications, 744, 751, &c. Their Deſignation to their Office, 745. Their Powers and Offices, 746, &c.
Miracles, how to diſtinguiſh true ones from falſe, 28, 708, 709. The Nature of our Saviour's Miracles, 34, 651. Miracles of the Apoſtles and their Followers, 41. They evidence a divine Providence, 244. Miracles of Chriſt, a Proof of his being the Meſſiah, 707. Not diabolical, 708. That they were wrought by a divine Power, proved from the Nature of them, 709. From the Character of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, 710. From the Nature of his Religion, 711. The Abſurdity of ſuppoſing them to be diabolical, ibid.
Miſeries, which affect Mens Bodies, 923.
Miſery of an ignorant Soul, 919. Of a wicked Soul, 921.
Moderation, the Things about which it is converſant, 976.
Modeſty, what, and its Oppoſites, 960. The Excellency of it, 962.
MOLOCH, ſome Account of that Idol, 482. Notes.
MONTANUS, his pretended Revelations, 137.
Months, Jewiſh, their Names, 365. Notes.
Moral Law of the Jews. See Commandments, and JEWS.
Moral Perfections of God, 99, &c. See Attributes, and GOD.
Morality of our Thoughts, wherein it conſiſts, 930.
Mortification, wherein it conſiſts, 965. It is a Chriſtian's Duty, and neceſſary to our future Happineſs, ibid. The Means and Inſtruments of performing it, 966.
MOSES, an Account of him and his Education, 23, 359, 360. His Capacity and Integrity, 24, 25. The Excellency and Truth of his Hiſtory, 25. His Laws, 26, 376, &c. His Predictions and Miracles, 26, 27. His Account of the Creation includes the Solar Syſtem, but is more particular as to the Earth, 206. Exceptions to his Account anſwered, 210, 211, 212. His Account of the Deluge, 311. His killing the Egyptian juſtified, 360. His Manner of Life in Midian, ibid. He is ſent to deliver Iſrael, 360, 361. His Diffidence, 448. Several Opinions concerning his Offence, which hindered him from going into the Land of Canaan, 450, 451. His laſt Admonitions to the People, 457. His laſt Farewel, Death and Burial, 457, 458.
Motion of the Earth, Arguments for it, 460, 461, and ibid. Notes.
Murder, what Killing is not Murder. 405, 406. What is, 406. The Heinouſneſs of it, and God's Abhorrence of it, ibid. and 407. The Uneaſineſs of its Guilt, 407. What leads to it likewiſe unlawful, 410, 411.
Murder of the Soul, 412.
Muſick, its wonderful Power, 472, and ibid. Notes.
Myſteries in Scripture, 65. No Argument againſt the Credibility of the Chriſtian Religion, 549. They are the Commendation of Religion, ibid. No Contradiction in them, 550.
Mythology, Heathen, whence it aroſe, 523, 524.

N.

NADAB and Abibu's Crime, 445. The Heinouſneſs of it, 446.
NATHAN, the Manner of his reproving David, 479.
Nations, their Diſperſion, and the Wiſdom of God therein, 323, 324.
Nature of God incomprehenſible, yet ought to be contemplated by us, 69. How to form right Notions of it, 70, 71. See Attributes.
NAZARITES among the Jews, their Vow, 468.
NEBUCHADNEZZAR deſtroys Jeruſalem and the Temple, 492, 493. He is turned into a Beaſt, and for what Reaſon, 494.
Neceſſities of our Nature but few, 948.
Neighbour. See Duties towards our Neighbour.
NESTORIAN Hereſy, 143.
New Moon, a Feaſt among the Jews, and the Manner of their aſcertaining the Time, 430.
New Teſtament, its Books, by whom wrote, 50. Its Canon, 51, 52.
NICENE Council, 139.
NICODEMUS, our Saviour's Diſcourſe with him, 970.
Niggardlineſs condemned, 964.
NIMROD, the firſt King, 324. How he advanced himſelf, ibid. He founds the Aſſyrian Monarchy, 325.
NINEVEH, its Deſtruction, 491.
NOAH, his Deliverance from the Deluge, 314. His Behaviour thereupon, 315. How the Earth was divided among the Deſcendants of his three Sons, 323.
Noachical Precepts, 303.
NOD, the Land of, where, 297.
NOETIUS, his Hereſy, 138.
NORRIS, Mr his Notion of Love to God, 847. Notes.

O.

OATHS their Lawfulneſs proved from Scripture and Examples, 388, 389. From Reaſon, 389. Under what Conditions they are lawful, ibid An Objection from our Saviour's and the Apoſtle's Words, anſwered, ibid. What Oaths are unlawful, 390, 391.
Obedience to God, how extenſive it ſhould be, 339. Its Qualifications, as it is a Condition of the Covenant of Grace, 564. Reſpect to our own Advantage conſiſtent therewith, ibid. The Goſpel does not require an unſinning Obedience, 566. How to know whether our Obedience be ſuch as God will accept, 567.
Oblations, different Kinds of them, 437. See Sacrifices.
Offices of Chriſt; Prophetical, 571. Prieſtly, 576. Kingly, 590, &c.
Old Teſtament, its ſeveral Books by whom wrote, 48, 49. Its Canon, 50.
Omnipotence. See Power of God.
Omnipreſence of God, 89. See Immenſity of God.
Omniſcience. See Knowledge of God.
Operations of the Spirit, the Reality of them, 765. Their Imperceptibleneſs, and our Ignorance of the Manner of them, no Objection againſt them, 765, 766. The ſeveral Kinds of them, 767, &c. The Neceſſity of them, 770. The Platonick and Pelegian Notion herein confuted, 771. They work ſuitably to our rational Faculties, 772. Muſt be attended with Endeavours, 773. Are gradual and imperceptible, 773, 774. Not inſtantaneous, nor irreſiſtible, 775, 971. Conſiſtent with the Freedom of our Wills, 775. See Holy Ghoſt.
OPHIR, the Gold of, whence, 481.
Oral Law of the Jews, whence it aroſe, 376.
Oratories among the Jews, 435.
Ordination, not a Sacrament, 601. Neceſſary to Miniſters, 745. The peculiar Work of Biſhops, 750.
ORIGEN, his Service in Defence of the Doctrine of the Trinity, 138. He oppoſes the Gnoſticks Opinion of human Souls, 152. His Opinion of the Non-Eternity of Hell Torments, 835.
Original Sin, different Opinions about it, 287. About the Guilt of it, and the Imputation of that Guilt, 290, 291. And about the Puniſhment of it, 292. The whole Queſtion ſtated, 293. Which Opinion ſuits beſt with God's Attributes, 293, 294. The whole ſummed up, 296.
Oſtentation, its Vanity, 960 The Ridiculouſneſs of it, ibid. How to cure ourſelves of it, ibid.

P.

Παλιγγενεσία, how that Word is uſed by the Heathen Moraliſts, 970. Notes.
Papiſts, their Error in holding ſeven Sacraments, 601, 602. Their Errors in relation to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, 619, 620. How their Purgatory came to be eſtabliſhed, 789. Notes.
Parables, why Chriſt made uſe of them, 650. Why ſome are obſcure, 651.
Paradiſe, or the Garden of Eden, different Opinions concerning its Situation, 266. Its Situation according to Moſes, 267, 268, 269. The State of it, 270. A Type of Heaven, ibid. How the Jews uſed the Word in our Saviour's Time, 785.
Pardon, the Aſſurances of it in the Goſpel, 717.
Parents, the Duties of Parents, to their Children, 401, 402, 403.
Parents, our firſt, their Sin, 281. The Heinouſneſs and Aggravations of it, 283. Whether they repented of it, 285. See Fall.
Paſſions and Affections, how they differ, 941. Not ſinful, but uſeful, ibid. Where inherent in Chriſt, and will always be a Part of our Nature, 942. To regulate them, is to place them upon proper Objects, to reſtrain them from being exceſſive, and to govern them all, 942, 943. The Miſchiefs of not ruling them, and the Benefits of doing it, 943. Rules for this Purpoſe, 944.
Paſſover, what, and its Inſtitution, 365, 431. Its Rites not in Oppoſition to Heathen Idolatry, 365. Its literal and myſtical Meaning, 366. The modern Way of celebrating it. ibid.
Paſtors, their Duty to their People, 900. The People's Duty to them, 901.
Patience of God, what, 106. Proved from Reaſon and Scripture, 107. The Greatneſs of it, ibid. What Uſe we are to make of it, 108.
Patience, the Nature of it, 860. The Reaſonableneſs of it, ibid. Its Benefits and Advantages, 861.
Patriarchial Government, of what Extent, and when it expired, 425, 426.
Patriarchs. See Primates.
PAUL, St reconciled with St James, in the Buſineſs of Juſtification, 551. The Paſſage of his Cloak, Books, and Parchments explained, 471, and ibid. Notes.
Peace of Mind ſecured by governing the Paſſions, 943.
PELAGIANS, their Opinion of Original Sin, 287. Their Tenet about Baptiſm, 613. Notes.
PELAGIUS, his Doctrine, 152.
Penance not a Sacrament, 602.
Penteceſt, Feaſt of, 431.
Peremptorineſs. See Poſitiveneſs.
Perfection of the Scriptures, 52.
Perfections of God. See Attributes.
Perjury, the great Impiety and Wickedneſs of it, 391. The Guilt and Danger of it, 393.
Perſecutions, the Church preſerved in the midſt of them, 758.

Perſeverance,

Perseverance, a necessary Qualification of our Obedience, 565. Necessary to Prayer, 875.
Persian Empire, its Founder, 496.
Persons, three Persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, mentioned in Scripture, 116. That they are distinct Persons, 118. That they are three Divine Persons, 120, &c. That they are one God, 129. See Trinity.
Perspicuity of Scripture, 64, 66.
Peter, St the Occasion, Circumstances, and Aggravations of his Fall, 661. The Use we are to make of it, 662. His Repentance, ibid. And Zeal afterwards, 662, 663.
Pharaoh, how his Hardness might be occasioned, 363. Shewn in the Case of Ahab, 364. Himself only blameable, ibid.
Pharisees, some Account of that Sect, and their Opinions, 509.
Philistines take the Ark of the Covenant, and send it back again, 470.
Philosophers, their Inability to reform the World, 18, 19, 20. Their Conjectures concerning the Cause of the Corruption of human Nature, 289.
Phinehas's Act of Zeal, 456. No Precedent for others, ibid. and 457.
Photinian Heresy, 140.
Phylacteries, what, 509. Notes.
Piety, serious Meditation a Means of exciting us to it, 936.
Pilate's Character, 660.
Pillar of the Cloud and Fire, what, and an Objection against it answered, 368.
Pillar of Salt. See Lot's Wife.
Pity. See Mercy.
Places of Worship among the Jews, 432.
Plague upon sending the Quails, what, 448.
Plagues of Egypt enumerated, 361.
Plato, his Sentiment of the Truth of God, 112. His Belief of one God, 516.
Platonicks, how they use the Word Regeneration, 970. Notes.
Plutarch, his Character of a King, 398. Notes.
Pompey takes Jerusalem, 513.
Poor, Charity towards them, 924. Why they are ordained to be among us, 926. Of giving Alms to them, ibid. Other Instances of Mercy towards them, 927. We must lend to them without Usury, 928. See Bounty.
Poor Man, a Description of his State, 913
Positiveness in Matters of Speculation, the Unreasonableness of it, 961. And in Matters of Fact, ibid.
Poverty, none to be despised upon the Account of it, 913. Not so bad a State as usually accounted, 950, 951.
Power of God, what, 94. Proved from Reason, and the Frame of the World, 95. From the Government of it, 96. From Scripture, ibid. What Affections the Consideration of this Attribute should excite in us, 96, 97. 'Tis a Ground for Trust in God, 857.
Practice to be joined with reading the Scriptures, 68.
Praise and Thanksgiving, the Distinction between them, 878. What they imply, 879. The Reasonableness of Praise, from the Nature of God, ibid. From his Dealings with us, 880. From the Excellency of the Duty itself, as good, pleasant, and comely, 880, 881, 882.
Praxeas, his Heresy, 137.
Prayer necessary in reading the Scriptures, 68.
Prayer, what it is, 869. The Grounds of it, ibid. The Reasonableness of it, 870. The Pleasure and Honour of it, ibid. The Benefits and Advantages of it, 871. An Objection against it answered, 872. The Requisites of it, 873, 874, 875. The several Kinds of it, as publick and private, 875. Expediency of a Form of Prayer, 877.
Preaching, the Work of Christ's Ministers, 746. What it was in the Apostles Time, how it alter'd, and what it is now, 746, 747.
Predestinarites, their Objections answer'd, 214.
Predestination, various Opinions about it, 151. An Account of the Controversy in the first Ages, 152. In the Romish Church, 153. In the Reformed Churches, 153, 154. A true State of the Arguments on the Calvinists Side, 154. On the Arminian Side, 156. Some Reflections on the two different Opinions, 161. Whether Opinion is better founded, 162. Whether more agreeable to the Notions of God, 163. To the Sense of Scripture, 164. To the Sense of Antiquity, 165. To the Doctrine of the Church of England, ibid.
Predictions of our Saviour, 718.
Pre-eminence of the Father, wherein it consists, 120.
Presbytery, that it could not be changed into Episcopacy, 741.
Prescience of God reconciled with human Liberty, 90.
Presence of God, his essential and majestick Presence, 87. His gracious Presence, 80.
Preservation, one Part of Divine Providence, 233.
Pride, the Unreasonableness of it, 912, 938. The Mischiefs of it, 940.
Priesthood of Christ, 576. Compar'd with that of Aaron, 577. The Necessity of it, ibid. The two great Parts of it; as, First, His Sacrifice, 578. Secondly, His Intercession, 589. See Sacrifice, Satisfaction, and Intercession.
Priests among the Jews, their Office, 440.
Primates, their Rise and Jurisdiction, 743.
Princes, their Duty to their Subjects, 898.
Prisoners, Duties towards them, 924.
Prodigies and Miracles lead to the Acknowledgment of a Providence, 244.
Promises of worldly Happiness, how to be understood, 112.
Promises of the Gospel, their Excellency above those of the Law, 717, 718.
Promises of God, a Ground for our trusting in him, 857.
Property, the Foundation of it, 416.
Prophecies, their Fulfilment, a Proof that Jesus is the Messiah, 702. Why they are obscure, 704. The Christian Interpretation of them vindicated, 706.
Prophecy, one Kind of Revelation, what, 16.
Prophet that came to Bethel, who was seduced by the old Prophet, his Death accounted for, 483.
Prophetical Office of Christ, 571, &c. See Doctrine.
Prophets, their Institution and Education, 29. Their Office and Employment, 30. Their Sincerity, ibid. Their Doctrine, Prophecies, and Miracles, 31, 32.
Prophets, their Schools, 470. Their Manner of Life and Education there, 471.
Prophets of Baal, and of the Groves, who, 484. Notes. Elijah's Victory over them, 485.
Proselytes baptized in the Jewish Church, 611.
Prosperity, the Danger of it, 949, 950, 951.
Providence, Divine, what, 231. The Parts of it, 232, &c. The Proofs of it, 241, &c. The absolute Power of it, 246. The unsearchable Wisdom of it, 247. The Justice of it, 248. The Holiness of it, 249. The Goodness of it, 250. The several Objections against it answered, 251, &c. We should have a due Sense of it, 262. Should humbly submit to it, ibid. Trust and rely upon it, 263. Prayer and Thanksgiving the proper Result of it, 264. And Justice to our Neighbour, 895. 'Tis one proper Object of our Meditation, 934. 'Tis a great Ground for Contentment 949, 959.
Provision for Man and Beast, one Part of Providence, 233, 234.
Prudence, the Duty of a Christian, 946.
Punishment, the different Degrees of it in Hell, 834.
Purgatory, the Rise of that Notion, and how it came to be established, 789. Notes.
Purim or Lots, the Feast of, 431. How observed, ibid. Notes.
Purity of God. See Holiness.
Purity of Heart, what, 862. Its Necessity, from Scripture, ibid. Its Blessedness here and hereafter, 863. Means to attain it, 864.
Pyramids of Egypt, some Account of them, 358. Notes.

Q.

QUAILS sent among the Israelites, and what the Plague was that followed them, 448.
Quakers, their Notion of Baptism confuted, 601, 732.
Qualifications, necessary to a worthy Receiving of the Lord's Supper, 625, 626.
Qualifications of Ministers, 744, 751, &c.
Qualifications, necessary to Prayer, 873, 874, 875.
Quickening, the Work of the Spirit, 768.

R.

RAINBOW, whether before the Flood or no, 316.
Ravens, Elijah fed by them, 484. The Account some give of that Matter, ibid. Notes.
Reading the Scriptures. See Scriptures.
Reason, a Distinction of Things above and against it, 550.
Recollection necessary in reading the Scriptures, 68.
Reconciliation, a twofold one, 586.
Recreations, the Use and Abuse of them, 964.
Red Sea, the Israelites Passage through it considered, 370, &c.
Redemption, the Work of, the Wisdom of God discovered in it, 93. We should make it one main Subject of our serious Meditation, 934.
Regenerate and Unregenerate, the Difference between them, 972.
Regeneration, what, and the Nature of it, 970. The Necessity of it to future Happiness, 971.
Regeneration, the Meaning of the Word in Matth. xix. 28, 787.
Religion, the Nature of it, and whence it arises, viz. From the Relation between God and Man, 1. From the natural Constitution of Man, and from the Nature and Reason of Things, 2. Not occasioned by Fear, nor by Custom, not by any politick Contrivance, which is proved from Reason, 3. And from Antiquity, ibid. The Magistrate's Charge in the Business of Religion, 4. It is divided into Natural and Revealed, ibid.
Religion, our chief Concern, and the happy Consequence of making it so, 932. The Comforts of it, 978.
Remission. See Pardon.
Repentance, how ascribed to God in Scripture, 82, 83.
Repentance, a Condition of the second Covenant, 555. The Primitive Notion of it, ibid. The Nature of it, 559. How 'tis a Gospel-Doctrine, 560. The great Encouragements to it, ibid. The Conditions of it, ibid. &c. The Uncertainty of a late Repentance, 561.

Repentance after Baptism unjustly denied by the Novatians, 555, 556. Some Passages in the Epistle to the Hebrews, relating to it, explain'd, 556, 557.
Reprobation, the Calvinists Sense of it, 155. That of the Arminians, 159.
Reproof, the Nature and Necessity of it, 921, 922.
Reputation, the Evil of wounding our Neighbour's Reputation, 420. How our Reputation is to be valued by us, 974.
Resignation to the Will of God, Epictetus a wonderful Example of it, 91. See Patience.
Restitution, the Difficulty, and yet the Necessity of it, 897.
Resurrection of Christ, the Nature of its Proof, 675, &c. An Objection against it, taken from his not appearing to all the People, answer'd, 679, 680. The Manner of it, 681. 'Tis a Vindication of his Person and Performances, 682. A Proof of his Religion ibid. A Pledge of our own Resurrection, 683. An Obligation to Virtue and Godliness, 684. And to heavenly Mindedness, 867.
Resurrection of the Dead, the Time of Mens final Retribution, 787. What Notion the Heathens had of it, 792, 793. Notes. How far the Jews had the Knowledge of it, 793. How clearly 'tis revealed in the Gospel, 794. An Objection against it answer'd, 795. The Certainty of it proved from the Power of God, ibid. And from other Arguments, 796. The Propriety of the Resurrection, 797, 798, 799. The Manner of it, 800. The Uses of the Doctrine, 801.
Revelation, the several Kinds of it, 16. The Possibility of it, 17. Expediency and Necessity of it, 17, &c. 42. Why made no sooner, 20, 21. How to distinguish a true Revelation from a false one, 22. Manner of its Conveyance, 43. Submitted to our Examination, 114.
Revelation, Mosaick, 23.
Revelation, Prophetick, 29.
Revelation, Christian, 32.
Revelation, Apostolick, 39.
Revelations to particular Persons, the Certainty of them, 339. How Men were assured of them, not so easy to determine, 340.
Reviling. See Evil-speaking.
Reward of the Gospel, the Excellency of it, 718.
Rewards and Punishments, the Delay of them no just Objection against the Divine Providence, 253. The Opinion of the Heathens concerning them, 532, 533.
Riches, their Uncertainty and Emptiness, 912.
Righteousness, what, and what it is to hunger and thirst after it, 977. The Blessing and Reward of so doing; 1st. The Acquisition of Righteousness, ibid. 2dly, Comfort and Satisfaction here, especially at the Hour of Death, 978. 3dly, Eternal Happiness hereafter, 979.
Rights of Men, natural and acquired, 893, 894.
Rites, the Power of Church Governors in Relation to them. 753, 754.
Romanists. See Papists.
Rule, the Scriptures the only Rule of Faith, 66.

S.

SABBATH, why the Jewish Sabbath was changed, 394. No Obligation to Christians as to the Jewish Manner of observing it, 395. How the Jews observed it as a Day of Rest, 396, 430. How the Christian Sabbath is to be kept, 397. See Lord's Day.
Sabbath Day's Journey, what, 430. Notes.
Sabbatical Year, 430.
SABELLIAN Heresy, its Rise, 138.
SABIANS, their Idolatry, 499.
Sacraments, the Meaning of the Word, 601. The Number of them, and what are not Sacraments, ibid. What are, 602. The Original of the Christian Sacraments, ibid. Their Reasonableness, and the Effects of them, 603. How they operate, 603, 604. To administer them, the Office of Christ's Ministers, 749. See Baptism and the Lord's Supper.
Sacrifice, Christ's Death a real one, 578. See Satisfaction.
Sacrifices, their Original, 296, 302. Several Sorts among the Jews, 436, 437. The Ends of their Institution, 438. The Customs observed in them give Light to some Scripture Passages, 579.
SADDUCEES, their Original and Opinions, 508.
Salvation, why Faith made a Condition of it, 553.
SAMARIA, the grievous Famine there, and how suddenly removed, 486.
SAMARITANS, their Original, 488, 502. The Hatred between the Jews and them, 502. Wherein they differed from the Jews, ibid. Notes. They hinder the Building of the Temple, 497, 499.
SAMOSATENIAN Heresy, 139.
SAMPSON, his Exploits, 468. His Foxes accounted for, 468, 469. His killing 1000 Men with the Jaw-bone of an Ass, 469. The Affair of his Hair, ibid. Very probable he was the same with the Heathen Hercules, ibid.
SAMUEL succeeds Eli, 470. That his Appearance to Saul after his Death was real, 473. And occasioned not by the Power of the Devil, but the Appointment of God, 474. An Objection against this answered, 475.
Sanctification, the Work of the Spirit, 768.
SANDIUS, his Ecclesiastical History, 146.
Sanhedrim, their Original and Authority, 426.
Satisfaction of Christ, an Objection against it answered, 580. The Necessity of it, 581. Other Objections against it answered, 582, 583, 584. The Extent of it, 585. Upon what Conditions, 586. More Objections answer'd, 587.
Satisfaction, in what Sense the Fathers used that Word, 969.
SAUL made King, and afterwards rejected of God, 472. What the evil Spirit was that troubled him, ibid. He consults with the Witch of Endor, ibid. Whether Samuel really appeared to him, ibid, &c.
Scape Goat, 431, 432.
School Divinity, its Rise, 144.
Schools of the Prophets, 29, 30, 470.
Scoffing, the Evil of it, 958, 959.
Scribes, mentioned in Scripture, who, 509.
Scriptures, wrote by the Assistance of the Holy Ghost, 45. How far they were inspired, 46. By whom they were wrote, 47, to 50. Their Canon, 50. Their Perfection, 52. Their Excellence, 55. The Knowledge of God, of ourselves, and of the World, taught therein, 56, 57. The Style and Eloquence of the Scriptures, 58. Their Method, 63. Why sometimes defective in point of Method, ibid. Why sometimes obscure, 64. Plain and perspicuous in all Points necessary to Salvation, 64, 65. Mysteries in them, 65. They are the only Rule of Faith and Manners, 66. They ought to be translated, ibid. And read by all, ibid. Requisites for the due and profitable Reading of them, 67, 68. We should meditate on them, 934. The great Sin of drolling upon them, 956.
Self-Defence, Killing lawful in that Case, 406.
Self-Denial, what, in our Saviour's Sense, 967. The Necessity of it, both in a settled and in a penitential State, 968. Practised by the best Heathens, and remarkably by the Primitive Christians, 969.
Self-Murder, why not expressly forbidden, though included in the sixth Commandment, 408. Its Heinousness, and the final State of those that commit it, ibid. Farther Considerations against it, 409. Especially to Christians, ibid.
Semi-Arians, 141.
Semi-Pelagians, 152.
SENECA, his Opinion of the Possibility of an universal Deluge, 312. His Opinion of one God, 517. His Rule about Contentment, 952.
SENNACHERIB's Army destroyed, and by what Means, 488. A parallel Instance in Herodotus, ibid. Notes.
Separate Souls, the Distinction that may be made between them, 788. The Place of no Signification to their Happiness or Misery, 789. See Soul.
Septuagint Version of the Scriptures, 504.
Sepulchres of the Kings of Judah described, 489. Notes.
Serpent that beguiled Eve, different Opinions concerning him, 278. That he was actuated by the Devil, ibid. What Kind of Serpent it was, 279. The Manner of his tempting Eve, 280. The Curse denounced upon him, 285.
Serpent of Æsculapius, 452.
Servants, their Duty to their Masters, and Encouragements to it, 907, 908.
SERVETUS's Heresy, 145.
Session of Christ at God's Right Hand, the Meaning of it, 693. The Truth of it, ibid. What is to be observed from thence, 694, 695.
Seventy Weeks, Daniel's Prophecy of them explained, 495, 496, 700.
Shame, the Use of that Passion, 941.
SHEBA, Queen of, who, 480.
Shew-bread, 433.
SHILOH, Jacob's Prophecy concerning him, 351. The Sense of it, 352. Its Accomplishment shewn from History, ibid. The Whole summed up, 353, 697.
SIAKA, the Prophet of the Japanese, his Laws, 533. The Account they give of him, ibid. Notes.
SIAMESE, their Idolatry, 527.
Sick Persons, Duties towards them, 923.
SIMON Magus, his Heresy, 135.
Sin, a Hinderance to our delighting in God, 852. Meditation, or serious Consideration, a Means of preserving and recovering us from it, 935.
Sin against the Holy Ghost, what, and the Heinousness of it, 557, 558. How it becomes unpardonable, 558. Whether it can be committed now, ibid. What Sins come near it, 559.
Sins, the Danger of favourite ones, 565.
SINAI, Mount, described, 377. God's Descent upon it, ibid.
Sincerity, a necessary Qualification for Reading the Scriptures, 67. A Qualification of Christian Obedience, 564. The Advantages of it for avoiding all Appearance of Evil, 975.
Sincerity, one Virtue in the Government of our Tongue with respect to our Neighbour, 956.
Slander. See Evil-speaking.
Sobriety. See Temperance and Chastity.
SOCINIANS, the Rise and Progress of that Sect, 145, 146. Their Opinion concerning Predestination, 152. Concerning Original Sin, 287, 290.
SOCRATES, why put to Death, 516.
SODOM and GOMORRAH, how many Cities destroyed with them, 340. Where situated, ſituated, and a Deſcription of the Country, 340, 341. Their Wickedneſs, 341, 342. How deſtroy'd, 342. The Remains of their Deſtruction, 343. How far it was miraculous, ibid.

Solar Syſtem included in the Moſaick Account of the Creation, 206.

SOLOMON, his Actions, 480. His Song of Songs, ibid. and ibid. Notes. His great Wiſdom, and vaſt Riches, 480, 481. His Character, and Fall, 481.

SON, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, his Divinity proved from his Filiation, 121. From his Titles, Honours, and Works, 122. From the religious Worſhip paid to him, 123. Objections againſt his Divinity anſwer'd, 124, 125. See Trinity.

Song of the three Children, what we are to think of it, 498.

Sons of God and Daughters of Men, Gen. vi. 1. who, 303.

Soul of Man, its Nature, Union with the Body and Faculties, a Proof of the Being of God, 10, 11, 12, 13. Its Infuſion into the firſt Man, 218. 'Tis diſtinct from the Body, ibid. Immaterial, 219. Whether pre-exiſtent or no, 220. Whether ex traduce or no, 221. In what Senſe it is immortal, 778. Its Immortality proved, ibid. &c. Whether the Jews had right Notions of its ſeparate State, 784. The Chriſtian Doctrine in that particular, 784, 785. That its Happineſs or Miſery in that State is imperfect, 786.

Speech. See Tongue.

SPENCER, Dr. his Opinion of the Ceremonial Law cenſur'd, 443.

Spirit of God, his ordinary Gifts and Operations, 765, &c. How Thoughts infuſed by him may be termed different Kinds of Grace, 773. How to know whether we have the Spirit, and how to improve it, 776. How to acquire it, 777. See Holy Ghoſt and Operations.

Spirituality of God, 85. What it ſhould teach us, 87, 88.

Sprinkling in Baptiſm, an Objection againſt it conſidered, 615.

Star that led the Wiſemen, the Nature of it, 636.

Stars. See Heavenly Bodies.

STOICKS, their Notion of Mercy, 916. What they thought of the Paſſions, 941. How they uſe the Word Regeneration, 970. Notes.

Style of the Holy Scriptures inſtructive, 59. Entertaining, affecting, and figurative, 60. Lofty and elegant, 61.

Subjects, their Duty to their Governors, to aid and aſſiſt them, and to honour and eſteem them, 899. Not to cenſure or revile them, but to pray for them ibid.

Sublapſarians, their Opinion concerning Predeſtination, 151. The Difference between their Opinion and St Auſtin's, 152. Notes.

Submiſſion to the Will of God, twofold, 860.

Sun its, ſtanding ſtill at Joſhua's Word, 460.

Sun, its Receſs on Hezekiah's Dial, and how occaſion'd, 489.

Sun, the firſt Idol, 521. Whether it is the Place of Hell, 832. See Heavenly Bodies.

Superiors and Inferiors, the ſeveral Sorts of them, 897, 912. The Duties of Superiors, 912, 913. See Inferiors.

Supralapſarians, their Opinion concerning Predeſtination, 151. The Difference between them and the Sublapſarians, 154. Notes.

SUSANNAH, what is to be thought of her Hiſtory, 498.

Swearing, Ceremonies us'd in it, 392. See Oaths.

Swearing, Prophane, the Folly of it, 391. The Guilt and Danger of it, 393.

Sympathy implanted in Man's Nature, 916. See Mercy.

Synagogues of the Jews, ſome Account of them, 438.

Synod at Dort, 154.

T.

TABERNACLE, Jewiſh, deſcribed, 432.

Tabernacles, Feaſt of, 431.

Tallneſs, and Strength of Body, once reckoned neceſſary Qualifications in a King, 472. Notes.

Talmud, ſome Account of it, 512.

TARTARS, their Idolatry, 528

Temperance in Eating and Drinking, 963. In Apparel, ibid. In Recreations, 964.

Temple of Soloman, 434. Deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, 493. The ſecond Temple, 435, 497.

Temple of Gerizim, 502.

Temptation of Chriſt in the Wilderneſs, 646. The Ends of it, 648, 649.

Temptations to Sin, how to be avoided, 919.

Ten Commandments. See Commandments.

TERTULLIAN oppoſes Praxeas, 137.

Teſtimony, Conditions of a proper one, 675. Applied to the Apoſtles, 676.

Thankſgiving. See Praiſe.

Theft, the ſeveral Kinds of it, 417. The Folly and Wickedneſs of it, ibid.

Theocracy of the Jews, 426.

Theology. See Divinity.

Thief, penitent, his Caſe, 667. His willing Diſpoſition, and ſtrong Faith, 668. No Encouragement to a late Repentance, ibid. The proper Uſe to be made of it, ibid.

THOMAS, the Apoſtle, his Unbelief, and the Nature of it, 685. The Aggravations of it, 686. The Reaſon of God's permitting it, 687.

THOMAS AQUINAS, ſome Account of his Doctrine, 153.

Thorn in the Fleſh, 2 Cor. xii. 7. what, 198. Notes.

Thoughts, an account to be given of them, 808. What Power we have over them, 929, 930. Wherein the Morality of them conſiſts, 930. We are to govern them, by attending to them at firſt, 931. By avoiding Idleneſs and bad Company, 931, 932. By making Religion our chief Concern, 932. By living under a Senſe of God's Preſence, 933. Exerciſes proper for this Purpoſe ibid.

Threatnings againſt Sinners, that God is oblig'd to make them good in the future State, 839.

Times of Worſhip among the Jews, 429, &c

TOBIT, the Character of his Book, 488.

Tongue, the Difficulty of governing it, 954. Whence this Difficulty ariſes, ibid. the Government of it with reſpect to God, 955. With reſpect to our Neighbour, 956. With reſpect to ourſelves, 960. Motives to the good Government of it, 962.

Tongues, Gift of. See Languages.

TOPHET, whence it came to be a Repreſentation of Hell, 830. Notes.

Torments of Hell, the Eternity of them. See Eternity, &c.

Tradition, its Sufficiency and Uncertainty, 43, 44.

Tranſlation of the Scriptures neceſſary, 66.

Tranſubſtantiation, how it came to be introduced, 620.

Tree of Knowledge, what, 274. The Reaſonableneſs of its Prohibition, ibid

Trinity of Perſons in the Godhead, a Doctrine purely Chriſtian, 115. The Word Trinity not found in Scripture, though Three are mentioned by way of Eminence therein, 116. That they are diſtinct Perſons, prov'd from their Relations to each other, their diſtinct Offices, and diſtinct Subſiſtences, 118, 119. An Objection againſt this anſwer'd, 119. That they are three divine Perſons, 120, to 129. Unity in this Trinity ſhewn from the peculiar Nature of the Deity, 129. From the Manner of the Son and Holy Ghoſt's partaking of the Divine Nature, 130. This Doctrine not chargeable with Contradictions, 131. The Myſteriouſneſs of it makes it not incredible, 132, 133. The Cauſe of Mens Diſbelief of it, 134. The Means of perſerving it, ibid. An Hiſtorical Account of the Controverſies about it, 135, &c. See Son and Holy Ghoſt.

Trumpets, Feaſt of, 431.

Truſt in God, Grounds of it, 97, 113, 263. What it is, 856. The Reaſonableneſs of it, from the divine Attributes, ibid. From the divine Promiſes, 857. From our own Experience, 858. Means to beget and improve this Grace in us, 858, 859. It is a neceſſary Qualification for Prayer, 873.

Truth of God. See Veracity.

TULLY, his Sentiment of the Proof of the Being of God from the Heavenly Bodies, 6. His Obſervation upon the Soul of Man, 11, 781. His Cenſure of the Philoſophers, 19.

U.

VALENTINIANS, their Notion of Chriſt's Body, 629. Notes.

VALENTINUS, his Hereſy, 136.

Veracity of God, proved from Reaſon, and Scripture, 111, 112. An Objection againſt it anſwered, 112. What Effect the Conſideration of this Attribute ſhould have upon us, 113, 114.

Verſion. See Tranſlation.

Virgin Mary. See MARY, the Bleſſed Virgin.

Virtue, the only proper Foundation for Friendſhip, 908, 909. Meditation a Means of exciting us to it, 936.

Virtue and Vice, the natural Diſtinction between them, 844. They may often put on the Appearance of each other, 976.

Viſion, one Kind of Revelation, what, 16.

Viſiting the Sick, a Duty, 923.

Unchangeableneſs of God. See Immutability.

Uncharitableneſs. See Cenſorioufneſs.

Uncleanneſs, the ſeveral Kinds of it, 414. The Judgments of God upon it, ibid. Its Repugnancy to Chriſtianity, and other Arguments againſt it, 415. Preſervatives againſt it, 416.

Unction, Extreme, not a Sacrament, 602.

Underſtanding, a Faculty of the Soul, its wonderful Nature, 11. How enlightened in Regeneration, 970.

Union of the Soul with the Body, 11.

Union of the two Natures in Chriſt, 630.

Unity of God, what, 73. Proved from his other Attributes, ibid. From Reaſon, and from Scripture, 73, 74. What Influence the Conſideration of it ſhould have upon us, 75.

Unity in Trinity, 129, 130. See Trinity.

Vow of Nazaritiſm, 468.

URIAH, David's Sin with reſpect to him and his Wife, 477, 478.

Urim and Thummim, different Opinions about it, 441. When and how conſulted, ibid.

Uſury forbid among the Jews, and why 927. Not unlawful in itſelf, ibid. But muſt not be taken of the Poor, 928.

W.

WAR, the Lawfulneſs of it, 495.
Water, its Properties and Uſefulneſs, a Proof of the Being of God, 7.
Waters, God's Spirit moving upon them what, 206. How the Earth might be raiſed above them, 207.
WHISTON, Mr, his Theory of the Moſaic Creation examined, 204, 205. His Opinion of the Cauſe of the Flood anſwer'd and refuted, 309, 310.
White Garments upon the Perſon newly baptized, the Meaning of it, 615. Notes.
Wicked, the Dreadfulneſs of their Puniſhment hereafter, 833, 834. Their Miſery here, 921, 943.
Wife, her Duty in common with her Huſband, 902, 903. Her peculiar Duties, 903, 904. The Huſband's peculiar Duty towards her, 904, 905.
WILKINS, Biſhop, his Reflections upon Noah's Ark, 313.
Will, a Faculty of the Soul, its wonderful Nature, 11.
Will of God, Submiſſion to it twofold, 860.
Wiſdom of God, what, 91. Proved from Reaſon and Scripture, 92. From the Works of Creation and Providence, ibid. From the Work of Redemption, 93. The Influence that the Conſideration of this divine Perfection ſhould have upon us, 93, 94.
Wiſemen of the Eaſt, who, 636. The Country whence they came, ibid. The Nature of the Star which led them, ibid.
Witch of Endor, 472.
Witchcraft in Lapland, ſome Account of it, 530.
Witneſs, to bear Falſe Witneſs, what, 418. The Sin of ſo doing, ibid. They who do it are a publick Evil, 419.
Woman. See EVE.
Word of God committed to writing, and why, 43, 44. See Scriptures.
Words, an Account to be given of them, 809.
Works, the different Senſes of the Word in Scripture, 552, 553. In what Senſe Men are rewarded according to them, 828.
Works of God, a proper Object of our Meditation, 934.
World, its Frame and Order, a manifeſt Proof of the Exiſtence of God, 5, &c. The Folly of ſuppoſing it to be made by Chance, 13, 14. Its Frame and Order, a Proof likewiſe of the Wiſdom of God, 92. And of his Power, 95. The Notion of its Eternity confuted 170, &c. The Epicurean Hypotheſis of its Formation expoſed, 175. The Carteſian Hypotheſis of its Formation cenſured, 178. The Folly and Impiety of all ſuch Hypotheſes, 179, 180, 181. The final Conflagration of it, 815. The Tradition of its laſting 6000 Years, 819.
Worſhip, Publick, the Reaſonableneſs of it, 382, 876, 879. See Prayer, and Praiſe.

X.

XENOPHON and Herodotus compared, 497. Notes.
XERXES, his Actions, 501.

Y.

YEAR, Sabbatical, 430. Year of Jubilee, 430.

Z.

ZEAL, how to be regulated, 976. Zealots among the Jews, 511.
ZOROASTRES, ſome Account of him, of his Book, and of his chief Tenets, 499, 500.

BRITISH MUSEUM 15 OCT 05

A TA-

A TABLE of Passages of Scripture explain'd, or more especially referr'd to in this Work.

GENESIS.

Chap.	Ver.	Pag.
1	2	206
1	3, 4	183
1	16	182, 460
1	20	182, 209
1	21	167
1	24, 25	209
1	26	227
1	27	222
1	29, 30	326
2	1, 2	184
2	7	212
2	8, &c.	267
2	9, 19	225
2	18	223
2	21, &c.	222, 225
3	6	274, 277
3	7, 8	284
3	10	284
3	15	285, 697
3	16	904
3	17, 18, 19	285, 286
3	20	214
3	22, &c.	272
4	3, 4, 5	296
4	7	149
4	11, 12	298
4	13, &c.	297
4	16, 17	214
4	26	303, 519
5	3	221
6	1, 4	303, 304
6	2, 6	197
6	15, 16	313
7	2	303
7	11	182
7	19, &c.	306
9	1, &c.	326
9	4	327
9	5	407
9	13, &c.	316
9	25	216
9	27	757
10	9	324
11	1	319
11	2, &c.	317
11	5, &c.	322
13	10	341
14	3, 10	341, 342
17	1	331
17	7, 8	331
17	24	332
19	24, 25	342
19	26	344
22	2	336
25	18	268
27	28, 29	348
27	33, &c.	349
28	12	349
31	19	521
32	24, &c.	350
38	24	426
41	16, 26, &c.	355
47	9	300
48	16	192
49	7	29
49	10	351, 633, 697

EXODUS.

1	8	358
2	10	359
8	26	445
12	2	201
12	29, 30	367
13	20, 21	369
14	19, 20	369, 372
14	21, 22	371
15	8, &c.	373
15	11	102
16	29	396
19	4	372
19	5	149
22	21	927
23	19	442
24	6	157
31	16	394
32	1	443
32	32	445
33	1, &c.	369
33	11	16
34	6, 7	106
34	23	26

LEVITICUS.

6	12	445
10	1	445
10	3, 6	446
16	29	276
17	11	579
17	11, 14	328
18	3, 4	442
19	17	922
19	28, 29	442
23	31	431
25	35, &c.	927
25	39, 43	907

NUMBERS.

6	22	877
11	33	448
12	3	945
12	6	16
15	28, 30	438
16	22	221
16	28, &c.	449
16	30	167
16	42	369
18	19	344
20	8	450
21	8	451
21	14	52
22	28	454
23	19	82, 112
24	17	454, 697
25	3, 8	455, 456
28	2	430
4	2	54

DEUTERONOMY.

Chap.	Ver.	Pag.
4	6, &c.	543
4	15	384
4	31	106
5	15	394
5	29	150
6	4	129
6	4, 5	845
6	6	66
6	8, 9	54
7	7	25
9	7	25
10	16	333
13	1, &c.	28, 362
13	6, &c.	810
14	21	327
15	7, 10	925
18	15, 18	697
18	21, 22	29
21	7, 8	877
22	1, 4	922
22	5, 9	442
23	19, 20	927
24	14	906
28	53	27
29	10, &c.	612
29	22, &c.	340
29	23	345
29	29	135
30	6	334
30	11, &c.	896
30	19	160
32	39	74
33	2	377
33	15	203
34	10	16

JOSHUA.

3	15	458
5	13, &c.	459
9	14	319, 442
10	12	460
23	14	27
24	2	331
24	26	435
24	31	461

JUDGES.

2	10	461
3	21	462
4	17, &c.	462
5	4	48
7	5	464
8	27	465
11	30, &c.	465
11	39	466

I SAMUEL.

2	30	149
10	5, 10	470
12	24	105
13	13, 14	149
13	14	478
15	7	268
15	28	478
16	7	89
16	23	472
17	49, 50	476
17	55	477
28	11, &c.	475
28	12	363, 473
28	18, 19	473
31	1, 2	473
31	7	474

II SAMUEL.

8	14, 15	477
11	1, 3, &c.	478
12	7	479
12	14	478
16	10, 11	892

I KINGS.

4	32, &c.	480
8	33, &c.	871
11	1, &c.	480
13	1	32
13	2	31
13	18, &c.	483
17	1	484
17	21	784
18	1	474
18	27	485, 959
22	19, &c.	364

II KINGS.

6	25	486
18	4	452

I CHRONICLES.

16	24, &c.	96
25	1, 7	439, 471
28	9	89

II CHRONICLES.

16	9	232
32	7, 8	264

EZRA.

1	2	497

NEHEMIAH.

9	5, 6	181, 184
9	33	110

ESTHER.

1	3, &c.	501

JOB.

1	9, 10	193
2	1	219, 851
2	9	357
2	10	943
4	18	100
5	6, 7	860, 861
5	7	287
5	8, 9	97
5	19, &c.	112
6	4	853

Chap.	Ver.	Pag.
8	8, &c.	3
9	4	96
9	8, &c.	93
11	7, &c.	69
12	6	110
14	4	289
15	15	100
15	15, 16	853
16	7, &c.	93
19	25, &c.	794
21	9, 13	110
26	7	132
28	12, &c.	92
31	15	924
31	26, &c.	521
33	14, 15	354
34	10	100
34	14	221
34	18, &c.	109
34	19	913
35	10	850
38	4, &c.	180
38	4, 7	184
38	10, 11	132
38	19, &c.	237
38	29	182
38	37	182
40	4, 5	358
42	5, 6	114

PSALMS.

2	7, &c.	590, 690
5	4, &c.	100, 249
8	4, &c.	15, 218
16	8	855
16	9, &c.	671
16	11	979
17	15	794
27	15	979
28	2	97, 857
29	1	181
29	4, 5	6
29	5	460
29	7, &c.	64
32	4, &c.	857
24	2	311
24	3, 4	864
27	1, 3	97
33	5	104
33	6	183
33	7	311
33	9	180
33	11	82
34	7	192
36	6	82
37	11, 16	947
41	1	925
42	1, 2	874
42	11	108
46	1, &c.	264, 857
50	14	879
51	1	106
51	5	289
57	10	166
73	5	110
74	16, 17	235
77	16, &c.	373
80	8, &c.	720
86	8, 10	74
89	30, &c.	637, 701
89	33, 34	82, 112
90	2, 4	77
90	4	20
90	10, 12	302
91	9, &c.	859
91	11, 12	193
94	8, 9	232
94	9	17
94	9, 11	90
97	1, 2	111
101	2, 3, &c.	898
102	24	77
103	4	106
103	8, &c.	107
103	13	106
103	21	184
104	7, 8	208
104	24, &c.	235
106	28	455
106	33	448, 945
108	7	106
112	9	925
116	11, &c.	879
119	59	935
119	67	256
121	3, &c.	193
136	6	311
139	1, &c.	89
139	7, &c.	79
139	11	91
139	14	10
139	23, 24	933
142	5	850
145	9	104
145	15	934
145	15, 16	104
147	1	880
147	9	484
148	3, &c.	230
148	5	183
148	8	237

PROVERBS.

2	3, &c.	978
3	5, 6	859
5	21	89
8	27, 28	311
11	17	925
14	29	107, 947
15	3	232
15	8, 9, 26	100
15	11	933
16	5	937
16	9	238
16	32	107, 890, 946
16	33	238
17	17	908
18	24	908
19	17	925
20	1	963
21	1	238
23	5	912
24	11, 12	927
24	30, 31	932
25	18	391
25	28	943
26	12	960
26	18	421, 957
27	5, 6	910
27	9, &c.	911
29	15	402
29	25	855
30	8, 9	403

ECCLESIASTES.

1	5	460
1	15	90
2	2	955
3	21	779
4	2, 3	257
5	1, 2	874
5	12	255, 851
5	18, 19	964
6	1, 2	964
7	1	974
8	11	253
8	17	181
9	11	237, 978
10	1	974
11	1, 2	918
12	7	221, 779
13	14	268

ISAIAH.

1	3	852, 935
1	11, &c.	438, 712
1	19, 20	149
3	9	342
3	2	150
5	12	262
6	1, &c.	189
6	3	115
8	12, 13	855
9	6	591, 697
11	6	597
14	12, &c.	197
19	17, 18	321
26	19	794
30	8	44
30	18	106
32	17	978
35	5, 6	34, 707
38	3	978
40	3	646
40	12, &c.	92
40	21, &c.	385
40	28	77
41	10, &c.	111
44	3	717
44	14, &c.	385, 959
44	16, 17	60
45	5, 6	74
49	15, 16	106
49	23	593, 898
53	6	579
53	7	946
53	9	703
53	11, 12	706
55	7	108
57	15	939
58	7	925
58	13, 14	397
63	1, &c.	61
63	9	192
63	15	106
65	17	167
66	2	937
66	3	61
66	21	713

JEREMIAH.

2	13	849
3	14, &c.	715
7	22, 23	712
8	7	934
9	1	31
9	23, 24	240, 913
9	25, 26	332
10	10, 12	212
12	1	110
13	14	314
17	11	417
18	8	83
23	5, 6	697
23	23, 24	79
28	8, 9	701
31	31, &c.	545, 713
52	4	432

LAMENTATIONS.

1	12	953
3	22	106, 950
3	33	861
3	39	258, 860

EZEKIEL.

3	14	30
9	1, &c.	239
14	13, &c.	249
14	23	110
16	48	340
16	49, 50	341
18	2	157
18	7, &c.	929
18	20	292
18	21, &c.	149
18	29	110
18	31	773
33	11	31, 157, 160
34	2, &c.	752
36	26, 27	765
37	13, 14	600

DANIEL.

2	26, &c.	355
2	34, &c.	594, 720
3	16	855
7	13, &c.	697
9	24, &c.	495, 633, 706
10	13, &c.	191
11	2, 3	501

HOSEA.

6	4	272
11	8	106, 107
12	3, 4	350

JOEL.

2	28	717

AMOS.

7	14, 15	471
8	4, &c.	396
9	2, 3	79

JONAH.

3	10	83

MICAH.

5	2	635
6	6	31
6	8	895, 925
7	9	860, 950
7	18	106

HABAKKUK.

2	13	850

HAGGAI.

2	7, &c.	435, 497, 634, 697

ZECHARIAH.

5	4	391
7	3	432
8	19	432
12	1	10
12	10	596
13	1	701

MALACHI.

1	11	713
2	7	440, 744
2	10	888
3	5	393, 906

MATTHEW.

2	6	635
3	11	605
3	16	116
4	1	646
4	11	193
5	3	937
5	5	946
5	6	977
5	7	918
5	16	746
5	21, 22	410
5	27	862
5	27, 28	415
5	34	389
5	45	104

TEXTS Explained, &c.

Chap.	Ver.	Pag.
6	2, &c.	926
6	6	876, 976
6	25, &c.	263, 949
6	29, &c.	859
7	12	424, 895
7	13, 14	970
9	35, 36	917
10	28	780
10	37	399
11	4, 5	34, 707
11	29	937, 945
12	31	558
12	36, 37	809, 962
12	42	480
12	43	432
13	13	651
13	21	854
13	24, &c.	830
13	25	935
13	30	254
13	52	751
15	11	329
16	21, &c.	967
18	3	292
18	4	939
18	10	190, 192
18	15, &c.	755
18	32	927
19	8	327, 428
19	17	124
19	28	787
20	12	827
22	2, &c.	587
22	12, 13	835
22	31, 32	779
22	38	845
24	2	33, 718
24	13	719
24	14	719
24	28	718
25	27	929
25	29	776
25	40	926
26	38	629
26	39	262
26	41	655
28	18	693
28	19	118, 604
28	19, 20	729, &c.

MARK.

5	9	197
8	15	511
9	47, 48	831
10	6	214
13	32	818
14	7	926
16	7	124
16	14	689
16	15, 16	604

LUKE.

1	4	44
1	16	122
1	34, 35	116
1	35	631
2	13	184
2	46, 47	645
6	35	927
6	36	917
6	37	957
6	38	918
8	12, 17	750
12	4, 5	78, 853
12	11	46
12	11, 12	763
12	15	949
12	31	975
12	47, 48	536, 807
13	19	721
14	16, &c.	595
15	HAGGAI 1	923
16	22, &c.	784
17	31, 32	345
18	2, &c.	875
18	15	612
19	12	828
19	12, &c.	787
19	43, 44	718
21	11	719
21	18	719
21	34	963
22	31	198
22	40	655
22	42	656
22	52	439
23	34	891
23	42, 43	667, 785
24	21	763
24	27	690
24	50, 51	688

JOHN.

1	1	122, 136
1	3, 10, 11, 17,	136
1	13	971
1	14	136, 570
1	18	571
3	3	970
3	5	604
3	6	289
3	13	571
3	14, 15	452
4	9	502
4	24	87
5	17	395
5	19	123
5	23	123
5	26	84
5	31	708
8	7	958
8	44	197
8	56	336
9	41	535
10	8	389
10	30	123
10	37	708
11	8, &c.	685
13	34	886
14	2, &c.	685, 823
14	9	123
14	12	762
14	16	116
14	16, 26	126
14	21	848
14	28	120
14	30	654
15	14	848
15	26	116
16	8	126
16	15	123
16	16, &c.	688
17	3	124
17	5	122
18	36	731
20	17	688
20	23	729, &c.
20	28	686
20	31	44
21	25	710

ACTS.

1	3	547, 690
1	6, &c.	689
1	12	430
2	2, &c.	760
2	22	34
2	38, &c.	730
2	39	612, 765
4	19, 20	40
4	24	877
5	3, 4	128
7	23, &c.	360
7	51	333
7	59	780
7	59, 60	123
8	12, 17	750
10	34, 35	22, 260
10	36	125
10	39	679
10	44	41
10	44, &c.	604
10	47	604, 732
13	2, 3	735, 745
13	32, 33	690
14	17	104
14	22	969
15	10	333
15	18	89
16	13	435
17	18, 32	793
17	23	528
17	28	84, 236
17	31	802
19	2, &c.	604
20	28, &c.	753
20	28	570
20	28, &c.	900
21	18	737
22	16	616
23	1, &c.	899
23	8	779
24	15	794, 802
26	2, 6	792

ROMANS.

1	20	5, 181, 516
1	23, 25	517
1	25	326
1	25, &c.	159
2	1	958
2	4, 5	108
2	5, &c.	935
2	10, 11	261
2	14, &c.	2, 249, 875
2	29	333
3	28	551
3	31	716
4	3	337
4	11, &c.	333
4	18	333
5	14, 18	287
5	15, 16	540
5	15, 19	292
5	18	160, 585
6	4, &c.	684
6	14	283
6	23	287
7	18, &c.	289
8	11	116, 971
8	13	149, 965
8	15, &c.	574
8	28, &c.	158, 164
8	31	164
9	5	122
9	13, &c.	164
9	30, &c.	158
10	9	149, 683
10	9, 10	545
10	14, 15	746
11	11	596
11	12	596
11	25, 26	595
11	33	105
12	20, 21	892
13	3, 4	897
13	6, 7	899
13	9, 10	425
14	10	958
14	12	292
14	12, 13	957
14	17	329
15	4	66

I CORINTHIANS.

1	2	123
1	10	733
1	17	746
1	20, &c.	914
1	26, &c.	58, 723
1	27, &c.	23
2	4	747
2	10	89, 127
3	8	828
3	16	128
4	7	912, 938
4	10, &c.	890
4	15	900
5	3, &c.	756
5	5	199, 446
5	7	622, 965
5	7, 8	366
5	8	889
6	10	974
6	11	117
6	12	389
6	15, &c.	415, 863
6	18	415
7	29, 31	820
8	5, 6	74, 129
8	8	329
8	9, &c.	330, 810, 975
8	13	975
9	9, 10	922
9	13, 14	901
9	27	968
10	12	160
10	13	283, 409
10	16	623
10	25	329
11	10	191, 194
11	23, &c.	618
11	27, 29	624
11	31	562
12	4, &c.	117, 127
12	8, &c.	127
12	26	575, 916
12	28	736
12	29	735
13	1, &c.	887
13	4, &c.	883
14	20	292
15	3, &c.	669, 676
15	9	940
15	20	684, 794
15	24, &c.	600
15	28	850
15	37, 42	798
15	45	681
15	50	692
15	51	820
15	53	798

II CORINTHIANS.

1	3	106, 917
1	12	957
2	6, &c.	756
4	2	973
4	2, &c	64
4	17, 18	861
5	1	780, 978
5	10	802
5	19	583
5	21	578, 579
7	10	658
7	11	968
9	6	828
11	12	973
11	21, &c.	61
11	23	952

TEXTS Explained, &c.

Chap.	Ver.	Pag.
12	2	181
12	2, 3, 4,	785
12	7	198
13	14	118

GALATIANS.

3	13, &c.	690
3	17, &c.	568
3	19	377
3	19, 24	543
4	4	631
5	6	553
5	17, &c.	965
6	1	918, 958
6	2	917
6	5	292
6	6	901
6	10	891
6	15	971

EPHESIANS.

1	17, 18	767
2	3	289, 295
2	4, &c.	846
2	5, &c.	694
2	18	118
3	10	93, 195
4	4	886
4	10	692
4	13	716
4	16	730
4	25	956
5	3, &c.	414
5	4	958
5	5	75
5	15	976
5	22, &c.	904
6	4	401, 402
6	11, 12	198
6	17	649

PHILIPPIANS.

1	23, 24	785
1	27	45
2	1, 2	888
2	6	122, 940
2	6, &c.	628
2	8, &c.	694
2	10	123
2	12, 13	773
3	13, 14	977
3	17, 20	866
4	8, 9	979
4	11, &c.	948
4	13	283

COLOSSIANS.

1	12, 13	592
1	15	124
1	16, 17	122, 125
1	18	125
1	21, 22	579
2	6, 7	45
2	8	723
2	11	333
2	16, 17	397
3	1, &c.	867
3	2	695
3	12	886, 917
3	19	904
3	20	399
3	22	907
3	24	908
4	1	906

I THESSALONIANS.

3	11, &c.	117
4	3, &c.	863
4	6	417
4	15	820
4	16, 17	800
5	12, 13	901
5	22	973
5	23	780

II THESSALONIANS.

2	1, &c.	820
2	9	362

I TIMOTHY.

1	15	640
1	17	87
2	11, 12	149
2	12	904
3	6	197
3	7	744
4	1, 3	329
4	8	112
4	14	750
5	4	400
5	21	194
6	1, 2	907
6	8	948
6	9, 10	659
6	15	98
6	17	912

II TIMOTHY.

1	13	135
2	4	745
2	12	969
2	24, &c.	920
3	8	361
3	16	45
3	16, 17	57
4	7, 8	787, 978
4	13	471

TITUS.

1	7, &c.	744
1	15	329
2	7, 8	973
2	9	907
2	13	122, 787

HEBREWS.

1	3	224, 233
1	4, &c.	122
1	10, &c.	122
1	14	184
2	2, 3	43, 377
2	9	159
2	10	571, 969
2	14	570
2	17	942
2	17, 18	571
2	18	695
4	13	232
4	15	917, 942
6	1, 2	748
6	4, &c.	556
6	18, 19	801
6	19, 20	589, 694
6	20	335
7	4, 6	335
7	9, 10	272
7	23, 24, 27	621
7	25	569
8	5	433
9	7, 12	687
9	11, 12	577
9	13, 14	544
9	15	21
10	1	574
10	11, 12	621
10	26	557
10	37	820
11	1	546
11	3	167
11	4	296, 297
11	6	553
11	24, 25	359
11	35	505
11	36	30
11	36, &c.	952
11	37, 38	805
12	3	953
12	6, &c.	257
12	9	86
12	14	972
12	16	347
12	22, &c.	554, 825
13	3	924
13	5	422
13	17	901
13	21	771

JAMES.

1	2	948
1	5	879
1	13	336
1	14, 15	931
1	17	82
2	10, 11	565
2	13	919, 958
2	24	551
3	2, 7, &c.	954
4	3	873
4	11, 12	957
5	4	906
5	12	389
5	14	602
5	16	874
5	19, 20	922

I PETER.

1	2	117, 118
1	12	194, 211
1	19	366
2	15	973
2	18, 19	907
2	24	579
3	7	905
3	15, 16	977
3	19	672
4	1	666
5	2, &c.	753, 900
5	8	198

II PETER.

1	19	573
1	20, 21	45
2	4	196, 806
2	5, 6	314
3	5	170
3	8	20, 77, 821
3	9	160, 254
3	10, 17	813, 815
3	13	189

I JOHN.

1	1	136
1	5	111
1	7	586
2	1	283
2	2	160, 585
2	22, 23	136
3	2	822
3	8	38
3	21, 22	873
4	2, 3	136
4	4	767
4	12, 13	886
4	15	136
4	17	848
4	21	888
5	7	117
5	10	114
5	20	122

JUDE.

	3	758
	6	197
	7	343, 414
	14, 15	298
	25	123

REVELATION.

1	4, 5	117, 193
1	8	77
1	8, 11	123
1	20	737
2	14	455
2	21	594
2	23	123
3	20	150, 863
4	8	100
4	10, 11	15
4	11	182
5	8	123, 750
5	11	186
5	13	123, 190
6	11	788
6	15, &c.	110, 808
7	11, &c.	190
7	15, &c.	979
8	3	195, 449
12	1, 14	759
12	7, &c.	191, 592
12	9	197, 278
12	10	195, 197
13	8	21
14	3, &c.	645
14	4	644
20	1, &c.	598
20	2	278
21	18, &c.	182
21	27	972
22	9	195

FINIS.